YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beard, Bidle, Blythe, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Chenowith, Clark of T., Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Logan, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wiley, Wolfe, and Zenor—86.

NAYS.—Messrs. Beach, Berry, Borden, Bourne, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Fisher, Gibson, Harbolt, Hardin, Hogin, Holman, Kelso, Lockhart, Maguire, McLean, Moore, Morgan, Murray, Pettit, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Tague, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Work, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—39.

So the section was passed.

CONSTITUTION OF THE CIRCUIT COURT.

The PRESIDENT. The next business in order is the 8th section of article 29, on its final passage.

The section was read as follows :

"The circuit court shall be composed of one judge only, and shall have such civil and criminal jurisdiction as shall be prescribed by law."

The question being taken, the section was passed.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

The PRESIDENT announced the next business in order to be the following section of article 30, on its final passage:

"There shall be elected in each judicial circuit, by the electors thereof, a prosecuting attorney who shall hold his office for two years and until his successor is elected and qualified."

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson moved to lay the section on the table.

The motion was decided in the negative—yeas 53, nays 73.

Mr. MARCH moved to re-commit the section with instructions to strike out the words, "In each judicial circuit," and insert "in such districts as shall be prescribed by law."

Mr. COLFAX moved the previous question, which was sustained.

The question was then taken on the motion to re-commit, offered by Mr. March, and it was decided in the negative.

The section was then passed.

NEGRO SUFFRAGE.

The following section being on its third reading, was then passed :

"No negro or mulatto shall have the right of suffrage."

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The following section was then read a third time and passed :

"There shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in case of fraud."

LAW REFORM.

The Convention then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee on the practice of law and law reform, the pending question being on the amendment offered by Mr. Blythe.

Mr. CARTER. I had not intended, Mr. President, to enter into this discussion at all, but to let the people of Montgomery county see the fulfilment of my pledges by my votes. But, sir, having the floor, I feel constrained to add my weight and feeble influence to the adoption of this section, and I do it the more cheerfully because I know that an entire reform in the practice and pleadings of law, are earnestly demanded by the people, and that my honorable colleagues hold no other proposition more nearly at heart. In this as well as other discussions, I speak not for myself alone—I speak the sound convictions of the two honorable gentlemen who sit by my side. Age brings with it judgment and experience—youth may possess talents, but it is wise on the part of the possessor to heed the admonitions, and reverentially respect the opinions of the aged. Sir, a long period of service for the people, with their commendation, tells well of the correctness of the judgment of the one, while the intimate connection with the people, and the trust they have confided in him, speaks as strongly of the weight of his opinions and his judgment. I then, sir, repeat that I am not speaking alone for myself, but also on the part of my honorable colleagues. I am a law reform man. It is well known to a majority of the members of this Convention, that I am a member of the bar; but notwithstanding the prejudices of early education, I am one of those who favor a reform in the practice and pleadings of our courts to the fullest extent. Sir, I have seen on this floor an attempt to throw a stigma on those who favor this measure, and sorry I am that the attempt comes from the legal profession. They will find that the people will not sustain them, and they will hereafter regret that they ever took the position they have. So far as I am concerned, I can only say that ridicule has no terrors for me, and if the measure I advocate will bring on me shame, let that shame come—I am willing to bear it. While, however, I would make this statement, I would also say that among all the varied occupations from which men are chosen to perform public duties, none can be found more honorable, more intelligent, or more efficient in the discharge of those duties, than the lawyers of our country. In the advocacy of law reform, when I say that the practice and pleadings of our courts are totally and radically wrong, I do not mean to pass any censure upon the members of the profession. The faults of the law and its practice do not belong to them; the fault belongs to the law makers, and to the old system which was brought into this country by our English ancestors, and with which the members of the bar of the present day had nothing to do.

Sir, of all the questions which have agitated our people and which have operated as a reason for the call of this Convention, there is not one in which so much interest has been felt, not one reform which has been so loudly demanded.

It is a hackneyed but yet a true saying that "this is an age of progress." "Progress" has marked itself on every feature. Of our government, change is written on all things. Churches and their systems have had their day and passed away. Thrones have tottered, Despotisms become Republics, and where once stood the palace and swayed the sceptre, now breathes the free man a free air. But shame to our State, that it must be said the worse than useless formalities and technicality of a "hoary fabrick of pedantry and absurdity," has stood unchanged boasting of its barbaric origin, and defying modern innovation.

The object of law is to do justice between man and man. In order that it may be revered and obeyed, it should be simple and uniform, and its truth and reason made apparent. Law is intended for the good of all who live under it, and as such, its truth and reason should be apparent, so that all could see, read, and understand. But are our laws easily understood and found? Certainly not; for the law boasts of its "glorious uncertainty."

Our rules of law number no less than two millions. They are found in statutes, reports, commentaries, and digests of this and every other State of the Union, and England. The people or the lawyer cannot find the law anywhere in consecutive order; but, in order to discover what is binding and what is not, we are compelled to travel through the musty pages of a law library of a thousand volumes, and gather the law of the land in the courts, precedents, dicta, and conflicting decisions of English courts, and other States.

Sir, I denounce our present system, and with a great man I unite in saying that "it is a cunningly devised machine to make money and deceive the people." Sir, this opposition to the old dummery of the law is not hasty, nor is it new. The English bar has taken it in hand, and one of the greatest of Englishmen has ably discussed the matter, regardless alike of the slurs and imputations of the interested friends of the system. I mean Bentham. He says of the system, "strip off the tinsel with which it has been bedizened all around by interested idolatry, unblushing hypocrisy, and prostrate admiration, the technical system presents in all its parts, enough to stagger belief, and make a man doubt the reality of the object spread out before his eyes." Sir, I must be permitted to introduce another authority, whose words in the profession are almost law. Judge Wells, of the United States district court, says: "During the fifteen years that I practiced law, I can say, with safety, that not one-half of the suits with which I was familiar, were decided upon their merits, or upon principles of substantial justice. This was hardly in any degree attributable to the courts, but was to be attributed principally to the system of practice and pleading."

Our pleadings admit of a mass of imposture, trick, and chicane. If, then, Mr. President, the system is what it is stated to be, and what every man, who knows anything of the law, knows it to be, the system ought to be changed, or some other, better suited to our wants, substituted in its stead.

That plan, and a good one, too, has been proposed by the committee in their report, the adoption of which I confidently expect by this Convention. I would abolish the whole system of pleading; all the distinctions between actions in law, and between law and chancery. Commence all suits by a simple complaint, in which nothing but the real facts shall be stated in a short, concise, and, if you please, even in an informal manner, in order that a jury, a court, and all present may at once understand the merits of the case, freed from the unmeaning verbosity and indistinctness of the old forms. Make the answer the same, simple and concise in the statement of the grounds of defense.

Why is the plaintiff required to make a statement of his action in writing? Simply to inform the court and the opposite party of the grounds on which he sues. The defendant makes his defense in the same way, to inform the court and plaintiff of the ground on which he rests his defense. Now our pleadings do not really give that information; then let us have the reform.

The report of the committee also provides for the abolition of the distinction between law and equity. To that I also subscribe. I can see no necessity for the distinction, and some of the requirements of that court. Sir, in a court of law, you bring your witnesses into court and produce them before the judge, the parties, and counsel, where, on a rigid examination, every word can be carefully weighed, and every action closely scanned by court and jury, and the proper credit given to the testimony. But it is not so in chancery proceedings. The testimony of the witnesses is taken down before the hearing of the cause, generally by some inferior officer; the witnesses do not stand face to face with those interested, even if within the portals of the court, and room is thus given for corruption and trick, especially with a witness who is but little versed in the nicety of language. Sir, the system is oppressive. A man mistakes his action—goes into law where he should go into chancery. He has an equitable defense, but cannot plead it, but must let judgment go against him, by default, pay the costs, and then go to chancery to enjoin or set aside the judgment. Is this just?—rather is it not oppressive? The proposition before the Convention remedies these evils, and causes suits to be decided on their merits and not on the formalities of law. Bentham truly said, “the common law kicks the defendant into the ditch, and chancery has to come to pull him out again.”

There is a disposition on the part of gentlemen here, who seem to favor reform, to oppose the appointment of commissioners, and to leave the re-modeling of our laws to the Legislature. One argument for the adoption of this course, is, that we did the same thing a few years ago, and that it did not answer the purpose. Sir, the gentlemen are mistaken in part; their duty was to only revise our statute law. There was no attempt made to reform the English system, under which we still operate, nor had the commissioners the power, so that the argument affects nothing save that the labors of the commissioners were not perfect, which is rather a poor reason why men appointed to perform an entirely different duty should succeed no better. It is also said that the attempt has failed in New York. Sir, the gentlemen are mistaken here again, for the system is not fairly under operation yet, but I am assured by a gentleman from that State, that the people much approve of it. I would like to read his letter, but it is not now in my possession.

As to this amendment of the gentleman from Crawford, (Mr. Pepper,) which deprives lawyers from having anything to do on this commission, I would like to know if he supposes he can defeat a proposition of this kind in that way.

Mr. PEPPER of Crawford. I am not opposed to legal reform. No gentleman will go farther than I into the work of wholesome and necessary reforms in the practice of law. Yesterday there appeared to be a disposition on the part of many gentlemen to distrust the sincerity of some of the legal profession on this important subject, and I hastily offered the amendment to convince them that I was not only anxious for the reform but was willing that that reform should not be left to lawyers.

But the amendment tolerates proscription, a doctrine to which I do not subscribe, and I will at the proper time withdraw it.

Mr. CARTER. That is good news. I can only say that lawyers are men who ought to be chosen. They, of course, would be more intimately acquainted with the business. Sir, in conclusion I would say, that I hope there will be no serious opposition on the part of the legal profession to this reform. A lawyer necessarily holds an important post in society. In his hands daily is placed the protection of the lives, liberty, and property of his fellow citizens, and he should exercise his influence with care and discretion.

I do not believe that this reform will injure the profits of most of the members of the bar. Good lawyers will always find business, while inferior ones must give way. But it will affect the amount of litigation, and greatly decrease it, if the reform is placed under the hands of able men, and they make it judicial. Sir, this reform once effected, Indiana will have taken an advance position. The people have begun to think that a law suit is a game of chance; that belief will exist until they can see the workings of justice and hear it speak in plain business words, not in the strange jargon, useless technicalities, and unintelligible forms of our present practice. This done it will be true that law is indeed the “perfection of reason.”

Mr. KELSO said he had an amendment which he would offer at the proper time. He would read it for the information of the Convention. If the Convention would adopt it, it would certainly shorten this business very much, and he thought would, at the same time, accomplish all that the Convention desired to effect in this reform. He was not going to throw anything in the way of law reform, but he would offer the following in case the pending amendment should be voted down:

“All distinctions in forms of action founded upon contract, and between those founded in wrongs, and between actions in chancery and at law, are hereby abolished.”

Mr. BORDEN rose and said—

Mr. PRESIDENT: In throwing myself perhaps for the last time upon the indulgence and courtesy of the members of this body, I beg to assure them that nothing but a fear of being charged with a dereliction of duty, not only to those who sent me here, but also to the Convention, by the favor of whose presiding officer I was placed upon the committee “on the practice of the law, and law reform,” could possibly induce me to make the attempt at this late period of our session, worn out, as the patience of the Convention must be, by the protracted debates we have already had on various subjects, to address them on the subject now under consideration. But, sir, when I see the efforts that are being made to defeat the proposition reported by that committee, and after hearing, as I did yesterday, the violent denunciations made by the gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole) and the gentlemen from Vanderburg and Switzerland (Messrs. Blythe and Kelso), I feel constrained to raise my voice in its defense, and therefore trust that the Convention will excuse me if I now attempt, in as brief a manner as possible, to give my own views upon this subject, and to some extent the views of my associates on the committee; and the reasons which influenced the conclusion at which we arrived.

The committee instructed me to report the following section:

"SEC. — The General Assembly, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide for the appointment of three Commissioners, whose duty it shall be to revise, reform, simplify, and abridge the rules and practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings, both civil and criminal, of the courts of this State. And they shall provide for the abolition of the distinct forms of action at law now in use; and that justice may be administered in a uniform mode of pleading without any reference to distinction between law and equity. And the General Assembly may also make it the duty of said Commissioners to reduce into a written and systematic Code, the General Statute Law of this State; and said Commissioners shall, from time to time, report the result of their labors to the General Assembly, with such recommendations and suggestions as to abridgement and amendment as to said Commissioners may seem necessary. Provision shall be made by law, for filling vacancies, regulating the tenure of office, and the compensation of said Commissioners."

Now, sir, this report contains two distinct propositions. It provides for the appointment of three Commissioners; and it is made their duty, first, to prepare and report to the General Assembly for its revision and adoption, a system to reform the practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings of the various courts of the State. But the proposition goes further, and requires the Commissioners, if the Legislature deem it necessary, to make a complete revision of the Statute laws of Indiana.

It is perhaps here proper for me to remark, that there was some difference of opinion among the members of the committee of which I have the honor of being chairman, with regard to the policy of undertaking to codify anything beyond the Statute law. A portion of the committee differed with the majority in two respects. The minority preferred that the people themselves should elect the Commissioners, believing that they would be more likely to elect such men as were known to be favorable to the contemplated reform than the Legislature; and secondly, they were desirous that the codification should embrace not only the Statute law, but also the common law; or, in the language of the minority report, "the whole body of the law of the State," provided the Commissioners should find it practicable and expedient to do so. The majority, however, in their report, confine the codification exclusively to the Statute law. I united in the minority report, deeming it, on the whole, preferable to that of the majority; but as there is such a strong disposition evinced to defeat the report of the majority, I think the friends of reform had better rally to its support.

Sir, it will be observed that the reform proposed includes a reform of the law itself, as well as its practice in both civil and criminal cases. And, sir, I believe the great majority of this Convention, and I am sure the great body of the people are satisfied that there is a most pressing necessity for reform in both these respects; and I cannot but believe that this will be the conviction of every intelligent mind after proper reflection upon the subject. Thus, sir, it will be noticed that the difference of opinion was not on the question whether the interests of the people would be promoted by reform; but it existed on the question as to the extent to which the reform should be carried. This division of sentiment in the committee resulted in three reports—the one from the majority, now under consideration—one made by the gentleman from Wayne, (Mr. Newman,) which is said to be more conservative in its character—and the one from the minority to, which I alluded, which goes farther, and is considered by many to be too radical. Now, sir, for my own part, I have long entertained the opinion that there was much with regard to the pleadings, practice, and forms of proceedings of our courts, which required an entire change; and that the whole was susceptible of a profitable and useful simplification. To do this, will be to bring the practice of the law more into accordance with the necessities and spirit of the age in which we live; for any system, to be popular, must be brought within the comprehension of the mass of the people. I am aware, sir, that the earliest and most celebrated advocates of legal reform have mostly hitherto directed attention to making a change in the law itself by means of codifying. Yet, if I may judge from what I see here, I find that public opinion is better prepared for a reform in the practice of the law, than in the law itself. Both are equally necessary, in my humble opinion, and I do not know why one is needed more than the other.

As it is made the duty of the commissioners first to report a system to reform the practice of the courts, I will follow that course, and assign my reasons in favor of it first. Sir, it should always be borne in mind that it is not sufficient to have laws for the decision of controversies between citizens, but it is equally important that we should establish rules of procedure, by which the laws themselves may be ascertained and enforced. And it does seem to me that the rules of procedure should be so formed as not only to insure a prompt but certain administration of justice between the parties. Justice, sir, is the end and aim, while the forms and proceedings of the courts are merely the means to reach the given end. We should all desire to make these means as direct and plain as possible; or, in the language of the distinguished gentleman from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit,) in the course of some remarks with which he favored us yesterday, they should be so plain that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, should not err therein."

Sir, the law derives its vitality and spirit from the means which are afforded for its enforcement; for, without complete means to put it in operation, it remains in fact a dead letter upon the pages of your statute books. Thus, sir, the most casual observer will see the great, nay, the absolute necessity to the people of Indiana of a well-digested and maturely-considered "code of procedure" to regulate the courts of this State; and I presume no one will deny that this code, when perfected, should be such as will insure a cheap and prompt, as well as certain administration of justice. It has been very properly observed, that it is of little importance how wise or just soever may be the laws of a people, unless justice can be meted out at a cost within the reach of all, and without tedious delay; it is nearly the same to them as if, in fact, they had no law at all.

Before proceeding further, I desire to call the attention of the Convention to the fact, that several of the States of this Union have, within a few years past, introduced the reforms contemplated by this proposition. The State of New York has taken the lead in this respect, and has for several years in succession employed the ablest jurists of that State in the arduous business of reforming the practice of her courts, and in codifying her laws. Missouri and several other States have more recently followed the example of that State. I may be allowed to mention here, sir, that I have been in the State of New York twice since her new code of procedure went into operation, spending a considerable time there at each visit, and have had the pleasure of witnessing the practical working of their improved code. During the past season I spent several weeks in the city of New York, and took the pains to visit their courts, and there observed the daily application of their new system in the administration of justice; and, sir, I became satisfied, from what I saw and heard, that it in every respect answers the expectations of its most sanguine friends; that it fully meets the purposes for which it was instituted, and that it is much better calculated to secure the administration of justice than the old effete system which it has superseded. Sir, I found this opinion of the public confirmed by some of the ablest judges and members of the bar of the State. In confirmation of this, I could, if it would not be trespassing too far upon the patience of the Convention, read extracts from the letters of three of the most distinguished judges in that State—Messrs. Sandford, McCoun, and Harris—which have been kindly placed in my hand by my friend from Floyd, (Mr. Thornton,) who, I am glad to say, has so nobly thrown the weight of his character and influence in this Convention in support of legal reform. These letters are lying on my desk, and are at the service of any gentleman who may feel disposed to examine them.

Now what is the object and aim of all litigation? If I be able to form a clear conception of it, it is either to redress a wrong, or to vindicate and enforce a right; and I hope, sir, the people of Indiana will not allow their prejudices to forbid them to adopt that system which will, in the most certain and simplest manner possible, effect this result. And although the system may have the objection brought against it by the gentleman from Hancock, (Mr. Walpole,) that it originated in Connecticut or in New York, and, in his opinion, has too much of the Yankee odor of wooden nutmegs to suit his taste, yet, for one, I am disposed to adopt an improvement when I am satisfied of its utility, come it from what source it may.

It is true that I studied my profession originally in the State of New York; and the circumstance that our business transactions in Northern Indiana, bringing us into daily intercourse with the people of that great State, induces us to examine with some degree of care, not only their judicial system, but also the new code of procedure which they have lately adopted. These facts to some extent, I admit, may have influenced my opinions. But, sir, it will be recollected that New York under her old system, and Indiana now, adheres more closely to the old English system of special pleading than any other States in the Union. Indeed, I have in my hand the last number of a law magazine published in the city of New York, which says that Indiana is the only State that still clings strictly to that system. I know that there are gentlemen on this floor as well as members of the bar of the State generally, who think the system of special pleading is better calculated than any other mode of procedure, to obtain the ends of justice. But I am inclined for my part, to think that there is much in the machinery of it that tends to produce a directly opposite result. Sir, the reality is too often sacrificed to technical and artificial, and not unfrequently very unmeaning form; and we should not be surprised that such should be the result, when we reflect that this system was formed and shaped when yet in a plastic state by the influence of the middle ages, a period when the learning of the world was mainly confined to cloistered monks, and when a system of scholastic pedantry had overrun and involved in its hidden mysteries every department of human knowledge.

Sir, no one more fully appreciates than I do, the advantages conferred upon us as a people, by the adoption of the common law in our country. As was well remarked by the gentleman from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit,) there is no desire among reformers to abolish this noble inheritance and substitute any other system in its place. No, sir; I trust that not only the liberties of the people of Indiana, but the time may come when the liberties of the people of this entire continent, will rest upon the broad basis of the common law. "Improve, but not destroy," is our motto. But, while we do not deny that many good results have flowed from the adoption of the common law, yet, in our opinion, in consequence of its introduction there have also resulted some evils. Among these is the fact which is now justly complained of by the people, that with the adoption of the common law, we have also imposed upon ourselves the books of practice, the forms of pleading, and the rules of proceeding used in the English courts. I need not remind gentlemen that long before the introduction of the common law here, these forms had been elaborated there in the most extravagant manner, by the accumulation, without much regard to order or good sense, of the numerous terms and phrases, of similar meaning, with which our language is so replete.

[Mr. B. then proceeded to recite the terms commonly used in an ordinary deed of conveyance in illustration of what he referred to, and then went on to say:]

It must be evident to every reflecting mind that the inevitable tendency and effect of the whole system is to obscure the simplest idea which could and should be given in perhaps a single word.

Mr. President, I find that I will not have time to enumerate in detail but a very few of the evils resulting from the present system; but shall console myself with the reflection that others are to follow me who probably will point them out, and if they do not, that they must be obvious to all who have either practiced law or even been a casual observer of the proceedings in our courts of justice. While, sir, I am interested in the good repute of the law, the truth compels me to say that the effect of this system often amounts to a denial of justice; it enhances the expense, and results in long delay in the trial and decision of causes. Perhaps I would not go too far, were I to say that the success which often follows a resort to quibbles and tricks, encourages such disreputable practices, and that only defeats the ends of justice in civil cases, but very often, sir, enables the greatest criminals to escape the punishment justly due to their crimes. I trust the Convention will excuse me for reading a short extract from the history of a case of this kind, exhibiting in stronger colors than I could portray, the abuses of the system of practice which obtained in the criminal courts of England, before the reforms lately introduced into that country, and which, as formerly used there, is mainly the system now prevailing in Indiana. The following extract is from Niles' Register, and is headed

GLORIOUS UNCERTAINTY OF THE LAW.

A late London Morning Chronicle says:

"At the Lancaster circuit a prisoner was indicted for uttering a forged bank note. On being arraigned, he pleaded guilty, but at the suggestion of one of the barristers, and with the advice and consent of the Chief Justice who presided, he retracted his plea, and pleaded not guilty. On the trial, clear and indisputable evidence was given of his having uttered the note, which was proved to be a forgery, and that he knew it. The note was then read by the prosecuting counsel to the jury, the counsel for the prisoner and the Judge at the same time reading the original indictment and a copy, to see that the note was correctly set forth in them. The note appeared to be correctly set forth up to the signature, on which a question of variance was raised in behalf of the prisoner. In the indictment the Christian name of the signature was written Christ'r, (for Christopher). In the note it did not clearly appear whether the little mark which was above the abbreviation Christ., was an r, or a tick following the figures in the line above. The Judge, after having examined the note with a large magnifying glass which he uses, declared it as his opinion that it was a tick, and not an r, and that the prisoner must therefore be acquitted. The counsel for the prosecution contended that it must be an r, as the Christian name forged was Christopher, and Christ. with an r above, was the common way of abbreviating it, and the usual way that the person wrote his name. Well, said the Judge, we will leave it to the jury.

"Gentleman of the jury," said his Lordship, handing them the note, 'have the goodness to examine it, and tell me whether you think it a tick or an r. I think it is a tick, but you must judge for yourselves; perhaps you will see better if you take my glass.' The jury after looking at it carefully through the medium of the judge's magnifying glass, were of course of the same opinion with the Judge, and had no hesitation in saying that they thought the mark in question was a tick; upon which the Judge directed the jury to acquit the prisoner."

The editor then goes on to remark, that "a greater farce than this, the whole of which was strictly agreeable to law, we cannot well imagine. The truth was staring the Judge in the face in two distinct shapes. The man's avowal of guilt, and the evidence which, independently of that admission, subsequently demonstrated it; but turning his eyes from the manifest truth, the Judge applies thereto a microscope, in order to see whether a tick has been mistaken for an r in the indictment—an action that presents a perfect satire on the administering the justice of a country—which turns the eyes from truth, while it magnifies 'FORMS.' The Judge, then, in effect, says to the jury, 'You will declare the prisoner not guilty, gentlemen; not because he is not guilty, for we all know very well that he is guilty, both by his own confession and the evidence; but because the officer of the government who drew the indictment, not having the benefit of my magnifying glass when he penned it, accidentally mistook a tick for an r.' Beautiful is that system of justice by which a confessed criminal is pronounced innocent, because in the description of his offence, a tick has been mistaken for an r. Surely that is the perfection of reason which says that a man, who, by his own admission, and the clear evidence of others, committed a particular criminal action, has not committed that action, because somebody else wrote the letter r where he ought to have written a tick!"

It will be observed, sir, that the editor, in his denunciation, seems disposed to throw the blame, not only upon the judge who presided, but also upon the counsel for the prisoner. This is wrong. The judges must enforce the law as they find it. It is the system in which the fault lies, and not with those who are called upon to preside at, or assist in its administration; and it is but just that this fact should be constantly borne in mind by those who are disposed to denounce the present system. I have more cases at hand to which I could refer, showing the effect of the system.

Mr. PETTIT (in his seat). Oh! the books are full of such cases.

Mr. BORDEN. The gentleman says "the books are full of such cases." That is very true; and I presume most of the members of the Convention, especially those who are members of the bar, can recall cases of a similar character, that have occurred in our own and other States of the Union. But, sir, it is no more than justice to the mother country to say, that, however absurd was her practice in this respect formerly, she is now far in advance of us in regard to legal reform. It must be frankly confessed that we have, but in a few States of the Union, the improved course of procedure, as practiced in the courts of that country at this time. Sir, those improvements were brought about there by the salutary spirit of reform advocated by those brilliant lights of the profession, Romilly and Brougham, and were finally carried into effect by the English judges, in pursuance of an act of Parliament passed for that purpose.

I have already alluded to the tenacity with which we adhere in this State to the old English system of special pleading, in the trial of civil cases. It seems to me we too often forget, in this system, that justice is the end at which we aim; so intense and eager is the pursuit after phantoms raised by questions of special pleading. The books that treat of pleadings, practice, and forms of proceeding, are numerous, and for their illustration require the study of many thousands of adjudged cases. So great is the labor thereby involved, that it is now well known it requires the application of a life-time to master them; and the whole, sir, is a sealed book except to those who are thus skilled and learned in the abstruse and hidden mysteries of the art of special pleading.

I desire now to briefly allude to some other features of the old system, to which I object. I am aware it is a very common expression among the members of the bar, that "the law is the perfection of reason." A beautiful sentiment, truly; and while I admit it is true, to a great extent, in regard to the principles of the law, yet I regret to say there are many things connected with its practice, which approximate very near to the acme of human folly. For instance, what can be more absurd than to require the same officer to dismiss the same identical case as a judge at law, and then to take jurisdiction of it in the capacity of a chancellor?

So long as the jurisdiction in law and equity was conferred upon separate and distinct tribunals, there was some show of reason for continuing that mode of procedure. But now, sir, that the same court has had, in this and most of the other States of the Union, conferred upon it the adjudication of cases in both law and equity, I see no necessity for keeping up distinctions in the mode of procedure. It is well known that the jurisdiction in chancery cases was formerly to but a very limited extent; but these courts have, from time to time, extended their jurisdiction, until it is frequently a very difficult question for the most astute lawyer to decide if his client's case is of an equitable or legal cognizance. Especially has this become the case in this State, where the same judge is required to administer both systems. The courts of law in this State have taken upon themselves to grant relief in many cases, where, in the mother country, and in those States where law and equity are administered by distinct courts, it could only be granted by a court of equity. In fact, sir, the tendencies of the two systems have been mutually to trench the one upon the other; and they have, in fact, become so inseparably interwoven, that I can see no better course to pursue in our State, than the adoption of the proposition which is now under consideration, which will result, if carried out as contemplated, in a simple, uniform course of procedure, abolishing the distinctions now kept up between the proceedings at law and equity.

I recollect hearing a case argued in the Supreme Court of the State of New York, many years since, when I was a student at law, the history of which is so pertinent to this subject that, with the permission of the Convention, I will attempt to relate it. It is a long time, sir, since I heard the case argued, though I have read it once since in Wendell's Reports, soon after it was finally decided. The case is very similar in character to the one related by the gentleman from Floyd, (Mr. Thornton,) in his remarks on yesterday. The question that arose in the case to which I allude, like his, (Mr. Thornton's,) was, whether relief was properly to be had on the law or the equity side of the court. Two individuals, having a matter of controversy between them, agreed to leave it to the decision of arbitrators. The case was heard, and the award made by the referees. But it was afterwards alleged by one of the parties that there was some irregularity in the proceedings, and he refused to pay the award. He was sued upon the arbitration bond, on the law side of the court, and it was (as the sequel will show) finally decided that his defense was just. But when sued on the bond, the question came up whether he could make his defense on the law side of the court, or whether it was not properly a matter of only equitable defense. The Circuit Court, in which the case originated, decided that the defense could not be made at law, and the Supreme Court, to which the case was carried up, affirmed the decision. The defendant was compelled to pay a heavy bill of costs, and was remanded back to the same Circuit Judge before whom, several years previously, the suit was first instituted. He then applied for relief on the equity side of the Court, and relief was granted him, by an injunction to stay the proceedings at law. The other party appealed to the Chancellor of the State, who affirmed the decision of the Circuit Judge; but the same party, not being satisfied with the Chancellor's decision against him, took the case up to the "Court of Appeals for the correction of Errors," and the Chancellor's decision was finally reversed, in the court of last resort, for the reason that the defense was originally at law, and not in equity!!

And, sir, the defendant was again compelled to pay a heavy bill of costs, and once more go before the Circuit Judge and make his defense at law; and thus after fifteen years of most expensive and harrassing litigation the injured party obtained relief. Now, sir, on reading the history of similar cases which are frequently found in the reports, a person is at a loss to conceive for what purposes courts were instituted, unless indeed to defeat the very ends for which they were professedly established, or to fill the pockets of clerks and other officers with fees. The case I have cited it is true occurred in the State of New York; but it was under the same system which prevails here of keeping the law and chancery jurisdiction separate, and therefore the moral is as applicable in Indiana as in New York. What was the difficulty in the case to which I have adverted? Nothing more nor less than to ascertain the true boundaries which separated the two systems. And when we see the ablest jurists of that State—men who have devoted the energies of great minds and the labor of a life-time to the investigation of such questions—when such men with the vast store houses of legal knowledge before them, and the amplest means to possess themselves of the sources of legal information, fail to determine correctly as to whether a given case should be brought, or a defense made on the law or the equity side of the court, what might be expected of the errors into which lawyers of less experience and with fewer advantages might fall? And should we be surprised if they frequently committed errors in judgment by directing their clients to take one road to obtain justice, when in fact they should have taken another?

I hold, sir, that this Convention was called by the people for the purpose of reforming the abuses existing in the government. I believe the people will be greatly disappointed, and perhaps many of them will be induced to vote against the new Constitution unless some effective measures are adopted by us to provide remedies for the many evils now existing in the practice and forms of proceeding in their courts. I am further of opinion that the present is the most favorable period at which to take the incipient steps to bring about in our courts of justice a course of procedure more consistent with truth, and more reconcilable with common sense than that which now obtains. It does seem to me, it is a proposition to which there can be no dissent, that the rights and privileges of the people of Indiana could be as well guarded and secured without their being necessarily hedged around with volumes of falsehoods, fictions, and absurdities. I have never been able to convince myself that it was necessary the proceedings in our courts should be disguised in Norman French, bad Latin and worse English, and in the terms and phraseology of a language that can hardly be said to be spoken at the present day. I conceive, sir, that our legal proceedings should no longer rest under this veil of lingual obscurity either for the purpose of misleading or confusing a practically intelligent juror, or to make it impossible for the parties to comprehend or understand the business in which they are engaged.

I should be gratified, sir, if some of the gentlemen who have denounced so vehemently the report of this committee, and who avow themselves as opposed to all legal reform, would give us a good reason why a case when it comes into court should not be stated in the pleadings and proceedings in a manner clear to the comprehension of men of ordinary intellect. I can see no good reason why a bill in chancery or a declaration in an action at law cannot be framed with the use of half the words now held to be indispensable, but which at the same time would be amply sufficient to state the real cause of complaint. As the system now stands, however, when a citizen is sued the case is frequently so stated that it is next to an impossibility after reading the complaint filed in the clerk's office, to understand the real cause for which suit has been commenced. The facts stated in the complaint or defense should be made as brief, simple, and direct as possible; but sufficient should always be stated in the record to inform the opposite party, of the precise ground of action or defense, so as to prevent surprises or the taking of any advantages at the trial.

Let me inquire, sir, why it is required that the plaintiff should state his cause of action at all? For one I am at a loss for an explanation to know why this is required, unless it be for the purpose of enabling the court and opposite party to understand what he claims, the facts and proof by which he designs to sustain his case, as without this information the defendant could not tell what to deny or admit, or how to prepare for trial. Inasmuch as it is just as important that the plaintiff should be made acquainted with the grounds of the defense, the opposite party should state it in equally short, clear, and intelligible terms. It must be obvious that there can be no practical utility in reducing the pleadings to writing unless it be so done as to enable the parties and the court to understand the real matters in controversy.

I hope, therefore, that if the Convention should pass this section, none but men qualified for the task will be placed upon the commission. And, sir, I hope that when the commissioners come to act upon the subject, they will remove every inducement to the use of technical and useless phrases, involved terms, and verbal surplage. It is to be hoped that plain and simple language will take the place of obscurity, direct and terse terms the place of circumlocution, and that truth will everywhere be substituted for falsehood and fiction. This seems to be a very desirable result. And to obtain it, it is only necessary, as I have already said, to require the plaintiff to state his case, in brief, plain, and comprehensive language, divested of all complexity and ambiguity—such a case as he knows he can sustain by evidence. Then, sir, require the defendant to answer it with equal directness and perspicuity. After the parties have thus stated the case, which they intend respectively to sustain or defend, then let the evidence on both sides be heard. If either party fail to sustain the case stated, but makes out a case, which, as between man and man, would be deemed worthy of relief, he should not be prohibited, but rather invited to amend his pleading on just terms, always giving to the opposite party, at the same time, the privilege of so changing his defense as to meet the new case of his adversary. And, sir, above all let the circumstances of each particular case influence the court, after all the facts have been placed before it, in the decision of the matter, and the granting of the relief sought. If, for instance, it should be found that it would be right for the defendant to make out and sign a deed of conveyance for a tract of land, or that he should return a particular article of personal property, let the court enforce an order for that purpose. If it be found that damages in money are the proper compensation, why let damages be awarded, and never, as is too frequently the case now, allow an honest man to be turned out of court with a heavy bill of costs to foot, although he has shown himself entitled to relief from the courts of his country, but has merely mistaken the technical proper form of action; or for the reason that he has entitled his case a suit at law, when he should have called it a proceeding in chancery. Is there any insurmountable difficulty in doing this? I believe not. I know that there are some minds so constituted that they cling naturally and tenaciously, and perhaps I may say imperceptibly, to the past; that such men should meet us at the threshold with the violent denunciations that they have, was to be expected. But let me say to them that they will be compelled to yield their narrow prejudices and their reverence for customs because of their antiquity, to the progressive spirit of the age, or to the reforms which are everywhere being made in the strongholds of error and abuse. Sir, it does seem to me that if this Convention should adjourn without providing for such reforms in this respect as are clearly necessary and as are demanded by the people, the masses will themselves, and that at no distant day, take efficient means, and perhaps less conservative than could be desired, to do away with the present system of law proceedings, with all their technical absurdities and unintelligible pleadings and forms, which now have so great a tendency to bring the administration of the law into deserved disrepute. And, in sweeping away these abuses, many things that are in themselves good, and should be retained, will, I fear, be destroyed. Sir, the present voluminous forms and puerile fictions are not vital to the establishment of courts, nor are they necessary to the promotion of justice, and as this is the case, why should we permit them longer to remain, serving no useful purpose, but rendering the law itself intricate and inaccessible, and I may say with truth perhaps, almost incomprehensible?

THE PRESIDENT here intimated that the gentleman's half hour had expired.

SEVERAL VOICES. Go on! go on!

On motion, the rule was suspended, in order to allow the gentleman to terminate his remarks.

Mr. BORDEN, in continuation, thanked the Convention for its courtesy to him, and he would endeavor not again during the session to trespass upon its attention. Time will not allow me (said Mr. B.) to dwell on this part of the subject, though it is far from being exhausted. But I will again express the earnest hope that the friends of reform will not allow this opportunity to pass without doing something to effect a reform in our courts—a reform which, to the knowledge of all, is called for by the people of Indiana.

I have consumed so much time in discussing this part of the subject, that I fear I shall not be able to dwell so fully on the reform of the laws themselves as I could have desired.

The second proposition is, that the commissioners shall also—if the Legislature shall conclude it is necessary and proper—proceed to reduce to a written and systematic code the whole body of the laws of the State, or such portion of them as said commissioners shall find practicable and expedient.

I have already, sir, alluded to the fact of the division in the committee on this part of the subject referred to them by the Convention. A majority of the committee were unwilling to extend the codification beyond the statute law of the State; but a minority of the committee, (including myself among others,) desired to embrace the whole body of the law, if the commissioners should come to the conclusion that it was practicable to accomplish that object. It has been said here, sir, that the work was too great for man to accomplish. For my own part, I believe that without going out of this Hall I could name three men who are competent for the task. But whoever may be appointed, I again repeat, I hope that none but the very ablest men in the State will be selected for such an arduous station; with such men I am willing to leave the question whether this great work shall be now undertaken or not.

The State of Kentucky, in her recently amended Constitution, has made provision for the appointment of commissioners; and it is made their duty to revise and arrange the laws of that State, "both civil and criminal, so as to have but one law on any one subject." I deem this a well considered provision; the effect of it will be to enable the people of Kentucky to understand their laws much more readily than we will ours, so long, at least, as they remain in their present form.

Mr. President, one of the first maxims of our law is, "that ignorance of the law is no excuse for its violation," and as this is the rule, allow me to ask why it is not due to the people, whose rule of action it is, to the spirit of the age in which we live, and, above all, to the character of our free institutions, that an earnest and efficient effort should be made to place before the people, in as simplified a form as possible, all the laws by which they are to be governed. And let me ask why these laws should be longer permitted to lie scattered through thousands of volumes, hidden from the great mass of the people in a language which, if not obsolete, is, at least, not familiar to or easily understood by them? I conceive that, in a great and free State like this, nothing is more needed; and, therefore, upon no other subject, could the people so well spend a portion of their money as to secure a plain explanation of the rules of action laid down for their government; and what is of equal importance, the publication of those rules, so that by a reasonable amount of attention, their principal features, at least, might be understood by every member of the community.

I cannot believe, sir, in this "noon-day of the nineteenth century," when the sun of general intelligence is shedding its rays upon all the civilized world, that it is necessary for me to go into any lengthened argument to show that the adoption of some proposition similar to the one now under consideration, is necessary to the preservation of the liberties of the people of this State. For, sir, I take it that, notwithstanding our organic law is admirably adapted to secure the direct responsibility of all our public servants—notwithstanding the admirable theory of our form of government, still these advantages, to a considerable extent, are practically lost, so far as the real security and happiness of the citizen is concerned, while the greater portion of our laws lie concealed in comparatively unintelligible and inaccessible folios, quartos, and octavos. Voluminous works which can only be comprehended by those who have the time and means for laborious research into the shapeless mass of abstruse technicalities in which they are involved. Is it to be wondered at that ninety-nine out of every hundred, men being required to grope their way through this labyrinth of darkness, are compelled to confess themselves ignorant of the laws to which they must conform at their peril? Will it be contended that such a system ought to be continued, now that the people have given us the power to remedy such evils? I hope, not sir. Let me say to the gentlemen who oppose us that they cannot continue the present system in the midst of an intelligent people, who, nearly a century since, declared themselves not only free, but that in future they would make their own Constitutions and laws, and have the administration of justice placed in the hands of those to whom they themselves should confide the trust.

And, sir, why should we not have this radical change effected? Reforms are progressing in all other professions—all other sciences have become, to use a common phrase, more "popularized," and, to a great extent, brought down to the comprehension of the masses, and made to administer to their necessities and happiness.

All other departments of human knowledge have been exhumed from the ceremonial coverings of the dead languages, and technical and professional phrases. Chemistry is no longer concealed in the heavy volume of the scholar, but is translated, as it were, into the easy reading of the school book, until every child in the land may be made familiar with the science. The same is true in regard to geology, botany, astronomy, and natural and mental philosophy. In fact, sir, all the learned and profound treatises on these subjects have been condensed and made plain, and easily to be understood.

Let me ask, then, why the science of the law of all others is to lag behind the age—a sealed book to the mass of the people who it mostly concerns? The store houses of legal knowledge are full of the recorded wisdom of the past—of the study of a profession continued through centuries; and all, sir, that is desired (and, in fact, what is needed) is to bring it into a form so that it may be practically applied to the necessities of the people.

There is another reason which appears to me of much force in favor of the attempt to codify the laws, it is this: that the Legislature is under the same moral obligation to declare and make known the law that the citizen is to observe it when made known. It is clear that these duties are mutual, and obviously not to be separated. To define, with accuracy, and make known the law, seems to me to constitute the very essence of justice. The certainty of the law without its being made known, or the promulgation of the rule of action without being certain, are both violations, and, in an equal degree, of the rights of the citizen.

But, Mr. President, it is perhaps a useless waste of time for me to dwell longer upon the necessity of a codification of the laws, unless the Convention shall deem the undertaking practicable. And this leads me to notice the fact that whenever it is proposed to define our laws more strictly by codifying in whole or in part, the common law, the first objection usually made by the anti-reformers is that no code could possibly provide for every case that may arise. I do not, sir, deny this, but readily admit on the contrary, that to a certain extent the position is true. But, sir, let me inquire of those who raise this objection if nothing is to be undertaken except it is certain of being immediately accomplished and made perfect? I would like to inquire what work depending upon human wisdom for its accomplishment would ever have been commenced?

Now, suppose we admit to these gentlemen for the sake of argument, that the human intellect is unequal to the task of precisely and clearly defining a rule for every case that may arise in the varied experience of man, surrounded as he constantly is, by new combinations of circumstances. Suppose that some cases may arise in the intercourse, trade, and diversified business transactions of a highly civilized and commercial people, for which no human foresight could provide, would this admission make it right and proper for the law givers of the State negligently to fail to provide rules for such cases as are of the most daily occurrence, and that too, sir, when not only the principles of the common but also of the civil law, are at hand, ready and awaiting to be reduced to a regular and systematic code? For the life of me, sir, I see no insurmountable objection that there can be to the codification of, if not the whole, at least a part and perhaps when the experiment has been tried, the greater portion of the laws of this State. I apprehend all that is necessary is, that the salutary principles of the common law, and such amendments as from time to time, have been made "in aid of it," (as the lawyers express it,) should be sifted to the bottom and reduced to a written text, in a tangible form, so as to be readily grasped and comprehended by those who are called to administer and obey it. If the Convention will allow me, I will read an extract from a report made to the Legislature of Massachusetts, on the subject of a codification of their laws. The names of Judge Story, Prof. Greenleaf, and Mr. Metcalf, are signed to this report. [Mr. B. here read the extract referred to.] From this, (said Mr. B.) it will be seen that these distinguished men give it as their opinion, that a codification of the laws is not only practicable but also highly expedient. I am aware, sir, that there are those who call these men mere theorists; but for my own part, when I am backed by such authority, I do not feel much disposed to be driven from my position.

It is true, sir, the proposition before us, contemplates going no farther than a codification of the statute law of the State; but I trust that the report of the minority, which proposes to go farther and contemplates a codification of the whole or a part of the common law, will be substituted for it. If an effort be made at all to codify the common law, it should, of course, be adapted to our republican and popular form of government, and to the state of modern society. And above all it should, as it very readily could, be made to embrace all such improvements in the science of the law, that an enlightened experience has now made necessary.

When this has been done, I hope there forever will be an end to "judicial legislation," which is admitted to be one of the greatest evils now afflicting the country. By doing this, our laws would be secured from the great uncertainty now attending their administration, and other benefits would be conferred upon the people of the State in more ways than I have time to enumerate, or this Convention to listen to.

We have declared, sir, in the bill of rights which we have adopted, that no man shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, except in pursuance of "the law of the land." Now, sir, this is all very well in theory, but what is the practical operation? Has the legislative department of our State Government, really done what it ought, to bring our laws home to the comprehension of the people in a manner as fully as was in their power to do? No, sir, they have not. Until this "law of the land" is more clearly defined, who can tell what it is? If any man should feel disposed to try the experiment let him take a difficult case and go and ask the opinion of the judges of your highest court, whose duty it is to apply the law in all matters of controversy between citizens, and on whom is thrown the great responsibility of deciding in the court of last resort, precisely what the law is, and see if any two of them will give the same opinion. Why, sir, we have only to turn to the decisions of the highest tribunal of the land—the Supreme Court of the United States—to see that the dissenting opinions of the members of that court upon many important questions brought before it are nearly as numerous as—and allow me to say in my humble opinion—frequently more able in point of argument than those of the majority. Ask the ablest men in the legal profession the same question—men whose heads have grown gray in the toils and endless researches of the mysteries of their avocation—who pride themselves in encountering all the difficulties of conflicting authorities—in probing to the bottom all the perplexities and abstruse intricacies of the law—and see what answer they will give to that very same question. After a full investigation of the same authorities and precedents, you will probably get an opinion, fortified with authorities founded in countless volumes of cases argued and determined; but it is more than likely no two of them will be of the same opinion.

And here I would remark, lest I should omit it entirely, that the multiplication of law reports has become a most burdensome tax upon the profession, and through them, upon the public. And while, sir, I have no objection, but on the contrary approve of the publication of all such cases as establish some new, or settle some doubtful point, including such cases as, from their importance, entitle them to be reported, yet I believe that the business of law reporting has become too much of a book-making business. Just think of it. In the courts of the General Government these reports already amount to more than a hundred volumes, and their number is constantly on the increase. Besides these, the number of volumes in the different States of the Union amounts to at least a thousand. If we add these to the vast catalogue of those of our mother country, we will have several thousands of volumes of these reports. And the digests, abridgements, and treatises which are sent forth from the press there, and frequently re-published here, can hardly be enumerated. Thousands of these reported cases have been doubted, explained, or overruled. Indeed, sir, large volumes have been published, consisting of overruled cases alone. And it can now be said, with the strictest regard to truth, that the laws of our State, which govern in our courts, are nowhere to be found set forth in a clear, concise, and a consecutive order and method. Nor are they, in the shape in which they exist, published in a language certain and intelligible, so that they can be readily found and observed. Sir, when a citizen is under the necessity of ascertaining the law in a given case, he cannot go to a code of laws enacted by the representatives of a free people, and adapted to the wants and necessities of the present generation. No, sir; but he must resort to a law library; and even such a library will be considered a moderate collection, when consisting of only five hundred or a thousand volumes. Every term of the Supreme Court of the United States, and of the Courts of the different States, contribute their volumes, while every session of the Legislature of our own State, adds its quota to multiply and swell the already overgrown mass. The citizen of a free State, where every institution should be established for his benefit, when it becomes necessary for him to acquaint himself with the law, must search into this unintelligible mass to ascertain what the law is at the peril of his property, his liberty, and it may be—his life. The work is a most forbidding one; and when we reflect on the maze of perplexity through which the citizen must grope his way in search of the law, can we wonder at the absurd results and disastrous litigation which ensues? And never, sir, until the principles of the law, which are now dispersed over innumerable pages, and veiled in the idioms of a language that belongs to the past, are collected in a systematic code, and rendered in plain language, will it be possible for a person of only ordinary intelligence to prepare himself to appear in Court, either as plaintiff or defendant, in his own case, or serve as a juror where the legal rights of his neighbor are involved. He must take, with the simplest confidence, whatever is told him professionally; and sometimes he makes the discovery that law and justice are two different things, and are not always found in each other's company.

It is said by those who claim to be the champions of the common law, and the present system of practice and proceeding under it, that it is "a science." Certainly, then, its votaries should, like all other true friends of science, be willing, not only to improve it, but that the mass of it which is already known, should be arranged and condensed in such a manner as can be readily understood by those upon whom it operates. We are well aware that no branch of human knowledge is more often required in connection with the every-day transactions of life. For this reason, it strikes my mind, it should not be confined in artificial mysteries, known only to a class.

But let me explain, lest I should be misunderstood. I am aware, sir, that the charge is frequently brought against lawyers, that as a class they cherish and foster the uncertainty of the law; and many believe that if the laws were made more certain and definite, their trade, like the shrine makers spoken of by St.

Paul, would be at an end, or at least, rendered less profitable than it is at present.

I believe, sir, there are many, too many I fear, of the profession, who may be actuated by such unworthy motives. But, I am glad to find, not only in this Convention, but throughout the State, many members of the bar who are bold and fearless advocates of legal reform. Here, if it be not considered out of place to mention one in particular, I will say that the present Secretary of State, Judge Test, who is one of the ablest lawyers in the State, has been for years a constant and steady advocate of "law reform." The accusation is therefore unjust, when applied to the bar generally. At the same time, an imputation so generally made, and by many people actually believed, of unworthy motives influencing a whole class, is significant of the state of public sentiment, and should satisfy us how deep-rooted and general are the prejudices against the present system, and should convince us that these prejudices can only be eradicated by abolishing the evils which are interwoven with the system, on account of the uncertainty of our laws, and by thoroughly reforming the practice and proceedings of our Courts. I do not apprehend that the reducing of our laws to a written code, and reforming the practice of our Courts, will necessarily have the effect to dispense with the services of the profession, by enabling every man to become his own lawyer. That idea is altogether too utopian, and could only have originated in the mind of one not acquainted with the organization of society. Sir, there exists in the very nature of things, a political as well as a moral necessity for the profession of the law. Our social and political fabric would crumble to pieces without "order," and there is no security for order, unless in a pure and wholesome administration of justice. Laws are necessary to the existence of justice; and we cannot have laws without a Legislature to enact, and a court and bar to expound and enforce them. Just as the security and happiness of the individual depends upon a well-organized state of society, so is society dependent on wise laws for its continuance. Therefore, sir, the general tirades which we often hear against "the bench and bar," are ill-advised, and will not for a moment bear investigation. Both must and forever will exist. And, sir, should this State ever be so fortunate as to have her laws reduced to a systematic and comprehensive code, and the practice and proceedings of our courts should be rendered as plain and intelligible as possible, still, any one who would attempt to practice law without having thoroughly studied it—who had not mastered the science to which he made pretensions of knowledge—would meet with about the same success which would attend the efforts of a blacksmith, who might undertake to manufacture lever watches. As well might a man set up for skill in surgery, though well acquainted with other branches of knowledge, without having thoroughly mastered the subject.

Therefore, sir, in advocating a codification of the laws, and a reform of the practice, I do not support the proposition with a view to dispense with the profession of the law. But I do anticipate that one of the great benefits resulting from the reform we propose, will be to reduce the law as a science, more to the comprehension of the masses. The developments of this century should satisfy us that the more simple and easy to be understood all trades and professions are made, the more secure are the people from oppression and imposition of any kind. And I cannot see why it is not the interest of every lawyer who prides himself upon the dignity of his profession, to relieve the law from all unnecessary intricacies and fictions, that do not well comport with the earnest and straightforward character of the people of this age; and from the antiquated maxims, forms, and rules, which have lost their value by reason of the lapse of the period for which they were constructed. Sir, improvement in every department of science tends to make its principles clearer and easier of comprehension, and it also tends to disseminate knowledge among the mass of the community in that particular department. I can perceive no reason why it should be otherwise with the law. That it is desirable to have the unwritten maxims called the common law, whose doctrines govern our courts, and whose principles pervade our whole judicial and social systems, properly arranged into a code, will be admitted by all, if it be possible. I have already said that we are now under the necessity of searching for them through hundreds and thousands of volumes of reports. I can see no good reason why these principles cannot be sifted thoroughly once for all, by competent men, and the result of their labors condensed into a code which could easily be referred to, instead of being compelled to hunt through a camel's load of books, which was said to be the duty of the Roman lawyer, before the Justinian code was compiled.

The gentleman from Vanderburgh, (Mr. Blythe,) while he said he was willing to go to a certain extent in the reform of the practice, opposed the proposition under consideration, for the reason that it squinted at a codification of the laws. And I have heard others express the opinion that the task was too Herculean, it could never be accomplished, and it would only result in an useless waste of the public money, to make the attempt. For myself, I believe that, if persons friendly to the undertaking were placed at the work, its accomplishment is entirely practicable; and in support of that position I have only to refer to the codes of Justinian and Napoleon, and the successful efforts of Livingston and his associates, to codify the greater portion of the laws of the State of Louisiana. I think the importance of the subject is worthy of an effort, which should be commensurate with the object to be attained. It is impossible to calculate, at this time, the advantages which must result to the people of this State, when the codification of their laws shall have been successfully accomplished. But, sir, it is due to truth to state frankly—for I do not desire to conceal a single fact—that the successful prosecution of such a work demands a combination of great abilities, learning, and ripe experience, devoted to business for many years.

I wish further to state, without concealment, that, should the Convention adopt the report, the most radical changes will be effected in the practice of our courts; the doing away with the distinctions between law and equity is of itself a very great change, and involves highly important consequences. But I trust no one can charge me with a desire for rash innovation. I am always willing, however, to examine everything which claims to be an improvement; but I would adopt nothing which could not be demonstrated to be safe and useful. It is far from my wish to reject anything because it is ancient and has been handed down to us from the hands of our forefathers. Neither, on the other hand, can I respect any abuse, because it has received the sanction of age, or its origin is so remote that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary."

Surely, sir, this is a subject deserving of our most serious consideration; and I trust that no fear of change, no unworthy dread of the new, because it is new, will deter this Convention from the performance of its duty. I have already referred to the natural repugnance in the minds of some men to change. This feeling is proper, and often opposes salutary barriers to rash innovation. But with some, this conservative feeling is carried too far, and leads them to the defense of acknowledged evils, and a morbid desire to suffer under ancient abuses, rather than adopt the most practicable reforms; and this feeling is quite as much to be guarded against as that of a desire for constant change.

Sir, during the canvass at which I was elected to a seat in this Convention, it was frequently charged against me, that I was too radical in the reforms I then advocated. But I trust the declaration I then made to the people, "that I was not a rash innovator," has been borne out, as well by my votes in this body, as by the propositions which, as a member of the committee on "the practice of law and law reform," I have had the honor to submit. These propositions have received the sanction of several States of the Union in their favor; and I feel a great degree of confidence that a little investigation will convince the members of the Convention that the most beneficial results will flow to the people of this State from their adoption. In urging this proposed measure of reform in the practice and the codification of the laws, I feel that I am actuated by no unworthy motive, and only by an earnest desire to promote the greatest good of the greatest number; and least of all, by a spirit of reckless innovation.

In conclusion, let me appeal to the legal profession, as represented on this floor, and say to them that no more useful or noble direction could be given to the varied acquisitions, intellectual powers, and acknowledged influence of the profession, than that of bringing into a condensed and simplified arrangement, not only the practice, forms, and proceedings of the courts, but also in reducing to a clear and brief form the various and clashing principles of the common law, the toilsome research into which has so much delayed the decisions of our courts, has brought such discredit upon the profession, and engendered so many popular and deep-rooted prejudices against the law itself.

With these remarks, I submit the question to the decision of the Convention, believing that it will receive the deliberate and serious consideration that its vast importance to the people of Indiana demands at our hands.

I desire to express my thanks to gentlemen for the patience and attention with which they have listened to this imperfect expression of my views.

Pending the question on the amendment offered by Mr. BLYTHE,

On motion of Mr. RARIDEN,
'The Convention adjourned.

~~~~~
WEDNESDAY, JAN. 22, 1850.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. NEW.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. OWEN presented a remonstrance from citizens of Posey county, expressing their disapprobation of the action of the Convention in regard to the public debt, declaring in their opinion the matter ought to have been left open, so that by a vote of the people a debt might be authorized in case it should be thought necessary.

On presenting this remonstrance,

Mr. OWEN remarked, that he differed in opinion with the signers of the petition, and he would be prepared to render to his constituents when he returned home, the reasons upon which his opinions were founded.

The petition was laid upon the table.

COURTS.

Mr. PETTIT from the committee on the organization of courts of justice reported back the section relating to the judicial power, amended as directed by the Convention, so as to provide that the judicial power of the State shall be vested in one Supreme Court, Circuit Courts, and such other inferior courts as the General Assembly shall establish.

The question being,
Shall the section pass?

On motion by Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe,
The rule which requires the yeas and nays was suspended and

The section was passed and referred to the committee on revision.

The Convention then proceeded to the consideration of the

ORDERS OF THE DAY,

The first thing in order being the section which provides for the appointment of three commissioners to amend the rules of practice of the courts and to codify the laws.

The pending question being on the amendment of the gentleman from Crawford, to the amendment of the gentleman from Perry,

Mr. RARIDEN. I am admonished, sir, of the impropriety of attempting to discuss this subject at any length. I perceive that the Convention is not in a proper temper to hear discussion. I see there is an indisposition to listen to any suggestions that may fall from human lips, and I do not wonder at it, for we have been here a long while. My whole object this morning is merely to implore the Convention not to adopt this measure precipitately—not to adopt any course with regard to this matter without mature deliberation. To leave the thing, at least to some extent, within the power and control of those who are to come after us. So far as regards such reform as pertains to the manner in which the administration of justice shall be conducted—so far as doing away with the cast-iron rules and technicalities is concerned, there is no gentleman in this Hall who is more willing to see indications of such reforms than I am. I say it is desirable, if there be any clumsy rules or absurdities in the manner in which justice is administered by our courts. If, as the gentleman from Montgomery said yesterday, our whole system and science of jurisprudence is becoming a machinery that is merely calculated to inspire awe and to humbug the community, the sooner we get rid of it the better. I say if it be the truth, that it is but a cunningly devised humbug to impose upon popular credulity, the sooner we get rid of it the better. But I have never before heard gentlemen use language of this kind. We are acting under a system of jurisprudence which has been the work of all ages, and in the improvement of which have been engaged the wisest men the world have ever produced, and I have never heard expressions such as those used by the gentleman from Montgomery applied to it before. Perhaps the gentleman himself has not been within the temple of its knowledge. I suspect that he has not penetrated further than the vestibule.

Mr. CARTER. The language was not my own. I quoted the authority of a member of the New York Convention, a man of high legal standing.

Mr. RARIDEN. Well, sir, I could quote greater names. I could point you to men of far greater abilities and attainments who, for the purpose of producing effect here, used the same cant. Men sometimes present themselves in such array of words to astonish us with the extent of their love for the people and the magnitude of their plans for their improvement and their happiness. I say again, it is not that I am opposed to any useful reform. I have been in courts of justice all my life. I was raised in a clerk's office, and if there is any thing on earth that I do understand, it is the practice and administration of our courts of justice. There is nothing so abstruse or difficult about the administration of justice in our courts as the gentleman seems to suppose. The multiplication table or the alphabet is just as mysterious to a child, as our system of jurisprudence is to a man who has not spent some time in making himself acquainted with it. I hear it said, too, why is not the law made plain? Why not bring it down to the understanding of every man?

Well, I believe it has been the object of every wise and good man in all times to make the law plain, to bring it within the comprehension of every man; and it is the object of courts in its administration to simplify practice and to illustrate its wisdom and justice. Let me ask you, why do you not make the parliamentary law under which we now are proceeding plain? Why do you not make the laws which govern this body so plain that every man can understand them. It is vastly important that they should be understood by every one who has to act and govern himself by them. But how many men are there in this Hall, no matter how long they may have served in legislative bodies, who understand thoroughly the parliamentary law when that is contained in a little book of perhaps ten or a dozen pages? How many men, and men too, the greater part of whose lives have been spent in the contemplation of this very subject, are there who can say that they understand this law?

Well, sir, let me ask you, is it made purposefully obscure so that it shall be as Mr. Huffman says, but a cunningly devised fable? Well, sir, another illustration: Here is the book of the New Testament, written in as clear and explicit terms as any book was ever written, by men, too, who did not wish to mislead. How is it in regard to that book? We do not all understand it alike. How is it that there are so many and so various interpretations given of the contexts of that sacred volume? Why, it results from the organization of the human mind, not from any design or purpose to make the rules of conduct inculcated in the New Testament obscure or difficult to be comprehended. And it is for the same reason that parliamentary law seems to be complex and difficult to be understood, and that our system of jurisprudence is still more difficult to be understood, because it acts upon and resolves all the complex transactions of fraudulent men. Talk to me about writing the laws plain! You cannot put your finger upon any statute now in the books that is not plain.

But they are all aimed at classes of cases. The common mind cannot comprehend the variety of cases that will occur in the transactions of mankind.

Time will not permit me to do more than to glance at some of the objections stated by gentlemen. They tell me that the law must be written plain, so that it may be understood by every body; and so should astronomy, and so it is, and how many understand it! Sir, nineteen-twentieths of our law is unwritten law—the mere common sense of man acting upon facts. Let us examine one branch, and it is more important, perhaps, than all the rest: the law of evidence, for instance. How many gentlemen are there in this house who know anything at all about the law of evidence? How many are there who understand the philosophy of the human mind, and all the influences that divest it. There is an intimate relation between the law of mind and evidence. Do we not know that the jury that tries the case are not eye witnesses of the transaction? Their minds are enlightened in a different way. Their knowledge of the matters which they are to try, is communicated to them by the instrumentality of ear, through the medium of witnesses. I could refer you to cases in which no man in this house could come to a satisfactory determination in ten weeks' time. Let me suggest a case, a case that occurs every day in a court of justice, and it is a case about which more law is written than all others put together: Two witnesses, men of equally good character and intentions, come into court to give testimony in a case, yet they may stand in direct contradiction to each other. Now one or the other is to be believed; they cannot both be right. Where is the written law that directs you in regard to your action in hearing and deciding upon such testimony? How could it be written? How can you set down directions in regard to the little things, looks, and circumstances that must have influences by which the human mind is actuated? Well, sir, there is another thing: You may frequently see two men of equally good intentions, and of equal candor and property, giving testimony in a case; and they may each tell their story in the same words, yet one will make a deep impression upon his hearers, while the other makes but little impression, and gains but little credence. One will make a permanent impression on the mind, and another will fail to do it. Where is the law that regulates that! How can you write it! By what settled philosophy is the human mind governed in adhering to the testimony of one of these men and, rejecting or taking little note of that of the other? The reason of their making a different impression arises from the fact that they are constitutionally different; that there is a difference between the men themselves, more than in their evidence. The man who is of strong despotic will and mind, and positive in his statements, makes a strong impression, while a feeble man, of timid character, makes but a feeble impression, no matter how pure and true his statements. I am speaking of the law of evidence. There is as much reform needed there as any where; and as it is out of our power to write the law in express terms, (who could write rules to be relied upon in such a case?) we must be guided by some different means.

When two men are brought into court to testify, and one of them be known to be a man of bad character, it frequently happens that the man of bad character tells his story in such a way as to induce belief, while the man of acknowledged good character makes his statement in such a way, and under such circumstances, that the court cannot act upon it, and feels bound to withhold assent to his statements. The court is sometimes conversant with the springs of human action—but this is not learned from law books—and will give its opinion according to that knowledge. I am speaking of the intrinsic difficulty of reducing this part of the science of jurisprudence to a written code. We can only establish general principles. It is impossible to provide rules for all human transactions, when a slight change of conduct would defeat the rule. They must be classified, and when there is no specific rule prescribed, then the former decisions of the courts in relation to similar cases are called in to aid the judgment of the court in forming a decision in that particular case; not upon a new theory, but consistently with established theory, in cases in which no precedent or analogous case can be found. But gentlemen say, let us have all the rules of law and of the practice of our courts, plainly written. Well, if you do that you make the chancellor or presiding judge an absolute dictator. The judge is not to be governed by the rules and decisions of those who have gone before him, by those rules that have obtained the consent of mankind; he is absolute, so far as his jurisdiction extends. No matter how tyrannical, vicious, or corrupt, he may be, he may excuse himself under the pretence of honest intention, without a rule to guide him. You cannot punish him for it. I have always been accused of a want of veneration for the ancient forms of the law. I have always regarded them as grimgrubber, as Mr. Bentham calls them. The wisdom of mankind, the power of human intelligence, is daily re-noulding them, and fitting and adjusting them to the wants and convenience of the present age, and justice is seldom caught in these toils. If it is from the ignorance of those who administer as priests at her altar, and not from the law's obscurity, I look upon the old forms of proceedings now as a matter of incumbrance.

As to the proposition to do away with the distinctions between actions at law, I have no particular objection to it; but let me say to the Convention that you might almost as well undertake to blend all sciences together, as to do away with the distinctions between actions. You might almost as well declare that the professors in your colleges shall teach mathematics and astronomy, Latin and Hebrew, all at once, to the same class. Sir, such a course as that would, in my opinion, lead to confusion. The science of law would never have come to any degree of maturity, had it not been for close and severe study. Some have made one branch of the law their study, and some, others, till every branch has had its oracle. For instance: on the case to that class of actions to that particular branch of practice, some devote their labors, and such become thoroughly master of it. Another man investigates the subject of title, by which landed property is secured. Some understand the action of trespass better than any other. Some understand chancery practice better than all others. And thus each branch of law and practice comes to be reduced to almost exact science. [So much confusion that the speaker could scarcely be heard.]

Sir, I perceive very clearly that I can produce no impression upon this House. [A laugh.] Whether it be a proper subject for amusement in a body so wise as this may be supposed to be, I leave to our constituents. In a proceeding like this, that ought to last for ages, some little thought and deliberation is due; and whether it is a proper subject for amusement or not, is for gentlemen to determine. We are engaged upon a proposition that is of vast importance to community. All that I ask now of the Convention is, that they will not in this hasty and inconsiderate way force upon the law-making power a measure guessed at, though with brow-bound discretion, without reflecting or seeming to regard what may be the ultimate result.

I am perfectly willing that the Legislature shall appoint, or that we shall provide for the appointment of one commissioner to take this matter up and report to the General Assembly upon it such suggestions as it may be thought proper for them to adopt; but I am not willing to say that they shall adopt this, or shall not adopt it; because, I repeat again, without any intention of wounding the feelings of any gentleman, this Convention is not in a condition to think or act upon the matter with the proper degree of deliberation and judgment. The rules by which life, liberty, and property are to be disposed of should not be guessed at or adopted without a knowledge of what they are, or what they will bring about.

Mr. NILES. The gentleman from Crawford, I understand, sir, is willing to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. PEPPER of Crawford. I tried yesterday to get the floor for the purpose of withdrawing the amendment that I had offered, but was unable to do so. Having, on a former occasion, given my reasons for offering the amendment, I now ask leave of the Convention to withdraw it.

Mr. NILES. Mr. President, would it be in order now to move to amend the amendment?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. NILES. Then I move to amend the first section of the article, by striking out all after the word "State," in the fifth line, and by adding the following words:

"And who shall report to the General Assembly, for their action."

The section would then read as follows:

"The General Assembly, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide for the appointment of three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to revise, reform, simplify, and abridge the rules, and practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings, both civil and criminal, of the courts of this State, and who shall report to the General Assembly, for their action."

If the Convention will indulge me, I shall be glad to submit a few remarks. [Cries of "go on, go on."] I am as solicitous as any other gentleman on this floor can be, to see the practice of the law simplified, but I am anxious to avoid everything like destructive legislation in the Constitution. A few wholesome and simple reforms in the practice of the law can be easily introduced, but they should not be attempted directly by this body. An hundred and fifty men assembled as we are, and naturally impatient of all delay, would be wholly incompetent to devise and perfect the necessary legislative details upon a subject of such great practical importance. My idea is, sir, that the necessary reforms could be secured by a single act of a few short sections, but such an act should be drawn with great care and well matured. It would not receive the necessary deliberation in the Legislature.

The section, as I propose to amend it, would require the appointment of commissioners, to simplify the practice, but, as it would contain no legislative provisions to which they would be compelled to conform, their duties would not be onerous. The idea of such commissioners has become associated, from the experiments made in New York and elsewhere, with that of a permanent office, and of great expense. But, sir, rather than see such commissioners fastened upon the country from year to year, at a salary of some $3,000, I would suffer the laws to remain as they are, or leave the whole matter to the action of the Legislature. Three discriminating and experienced lawyers could be appointed by the Governor, or by the Governor and the judges of the Supreme Court. They could mature the necessary reforms at leisure moments, in their own offices, during a single season, and by occasionally interchanging opinions, could agree upon a bill to be submitted to the General Assembly, at a very small expense to the State. Why may we not be satisfied with such a section without the legislative provisions contained in the section reported by the committee? Will the Legislature or the people be any less favorable to wholesome reforms than this Convention? What, then, the necessity for any legislation on the subject at our hands? It is highly probable that all distinction between actions, and much of the distinction between law and equity, may be abolished without any evil consequences. Such a reform would be useful to the people generally, and a decided convenience and benefit to lawyers. Certain gentlemen seem to think that lawyers oppose what are called reforms, from a fear that their craft will be endangered. It is not my office to vindicate the motives or character of the bar. But it is difficult to conceive what motive a lawyer could have for preserving useless and burthensome forms. Neither the amount of litigation, or of his fees, is affected by them. In this State, as is well known, he has no fees allowed by law, as costs in the case. The more concise and simple the forms, the less laborious will be his duties. Indeed, sir, so far as my knowledge extends, lawyers desire no exclusive privileges. [A voice—"no good lawyers do."] For one, I can say that I am willing that all bar rules should be abolished, and that any man of good moral character should be authorized to practice law. I am tired of the clamor against lawyers, and of being told that we have exclusive privileges, without being able to reply—you are a lawyer, too, sir. The lawyer and advocate under the Roman commonwealth needed no special license to practice his profession. Open the door wide to free competition; and integrity, learning, and ability, will be a sufficient certificate, and without such a certificate, a man will have but a poor practice. The law must be a vast and learned science, so long as it affords protection to the varied interests of civilized society. The idea of making every man his own lawyer, by simplifying the rules of practice, amounts to about as much as the scheme of some one who wrote a book, entitled "every man his own washer-woman."

But, sir, while I am a friend to simple and useful reforms, I feel great distrust of any sudden and sweeping innovations. The practice of the law is not the complicated system in this State, which many seem to imagine; and I protest against any wholesale system of codification.

I should look upon it as wholesale mischief. I should regret to see even a practice code adopted. The code of procedure, as it is called in New York, is a volume of considerable size, and all the courts are now busy in adjudicating upon its provisions. When their reports are piled up to twenty or fifty volumes, books of practice under their new code will be written, quite as large and complicated as Tidd or Graham, and, according to the idea of some reformers, it would then become necessary to get up another practice code to go through the same process.

But, sir, my strongest objection to the section as reported, is on the ground that it abolishes, unalterably, all distinction between the proceedings at law, and in equity, and I fear that its effect will be to abolish essentially the entire system of equity jurisprudence. Were such a provision to be adopted by the Legislature, it could be modified as experience might prove necessary; but when we propose to do it, we should look well to the consequences. It is one peculiar province of equity to take cognizance of matters too complicated, to come before a court of law, and where there are many parties in interest. In such a case, under the present system, depositions can be taken, and the whole case spread out upon paper, for the deliberate judgment of the court. But we propose to say that the most complicated case which ever can arise, should be conducted precisely in the same way as a simple action by one neighbor against another, to recover the value of a horse. When, in order that there be an end of litigation, a party files his bill of complaint against twenty different persons, having different and perhaps conflicting interests, will you compel them all to bring their witnesses into court, and keep them in attendance for weeks, and then have the twenty different interests all decided upon by one jury? or will you have twenty different juries empaneled to try one case? or will you—which I greatly fear—deny the remedy altogether, by abolishing whatever has heretofore been peculiar in the mode of conducting such a suit? I trust, sir, that we will not be over-anxious to pull down before we are prepared to build up.

Mr. HOWE. I have a proposition which I wish to offer as a substitute, and I think it concedes everything that a reasonable man can ask. [Cries of "read it, read it."]

The PRESIDENT. If the gentleman intends his proposition as a substitute for the entire section, it is not in order at present.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. "Read it any how."

Mr. HOWE read his proposition as follows:

"At the first session after the adoption of this Constitution, the General Assembly shall revise and simplify the rules, practice, and pleadings in courts of law, or shall appoint commissioners to effect that object."

Mr. HOWE. My proposition leaves with the Legislature the responsibility, and that is where it ought to rest. All that we ought to do is to empower the Legislature to act upon the subject. I think it is proper we should go thus far; that is, to declare that the Legislature shall have power to act upon the subject, but I do not think it is proper for us to prescribe to the Legislature what their action shall be. I am in favor of simplifying the practice and proceedings of our courts, because the whole objection to our system of jurisprudence rests upon this point. The whole objection in relation to the practice of our courts relates simply to the rules of practice and pleadings. It goes no further. I hold, then, we should be satisfied with remedying this evil. I am opposed to the idea of abolishing the distinction between the proceedings of law and in equity. I have no objection to allowing the Legislature, however, to make such provision as they think proper in reference to that subject. I have no objection to allowing parties, if they see proper to do so, to submit at one time all their causes of action as against the same parties. But the remedies are of distinct character, and the proceedings should therefore be different, and I here assert as my deliberate opinion, that if you sanction the idea of abolishing all distinctions between law and equity, you take away a component part of the system, and destroy its unity. I am in favor of retaining the practice of written or recorded evidence in certain kinds of chancery causes—that being frequently one of the most important objects—and I am only opposed to the abolition between law and equity proceedings, so far as that abolition may endanger the integrity of the equity system, and the practice of written depositions.

There is a manifest reason why there should be in by far the greatest number of equity causes a complete and perfect record of evidence. The reasons I will not now state.

Now one word as to the other branches of the section, which looks to a general codification of the laws, as well unwritten as written. I here affirm my deliberate opinion, that all attempts at codification of the unwritten law in this State will be vain. The thing is utterly impracticable. There never was but one codification that was carried out and perfected, and that occupied years and years of labor of the first lawyers of the Roman Empire. The code that I refer to is the Justinian code.

The greater part of our law, except the system of landed estates, had its source in judicial decisions, and the text of the civil law; but the principles which prevailed in the Roman courts were set forth in perspicuous terms in the answers and opinions of eminent lawyers. They were developments of principles of natural equity. Now, I ask you, is it possible for any one man or set of men in any code, to bring together all the principles and rules of our law?

I say it is not. In order to get up a code of this kind, you must embody abstract principles of jurisprudence. It will require men who have devoted their lives to the subject. The profound and philosophical mind of Bacon might have approximated to success in framing a code out of the discordant materials of the common law, but if you attempt a codification of your laws, I predict a signal failure. I am altogether opposed to the idea. I am willing in this matter of reform to go as far as I think the mischief goes, and there stop.

I hope, therefore, the pending amendments will be voted down, and something like the proposition which I have read will be adopted.

Mr. McCLELLAND. On this question, sir, I am instructed.

It has been remarked by some gentlemen that it is a matter which the people care nothing about; but, sir, my constituents feel a deep interest in the subject of the administration of justice.

I am aware that it is perfectly useless to make any remarks in relation to the subject at this time, as there appears to be a disposition in the Convention to have no more speeches. But, sir, I must be permitted to say a few words.

That some reform is necessary, is plainly to be observed from the fact that the people have called for it. Every delegate on this floor must know that some change is absolutely necessary. An eminent lawyer (Judge Wells) on this subject says:

“Controlling it is the fell spirit of law-craft which borrows its spurious wisdom from the age in which witches were burnt—in which judicial combats decided right—when kings held their office by jure divine. It has no affinity with common sense, candor is its aversion, and simple truth its enemy.”

The Law Magazine says in relation to law reform in Indiana:

“The question of reform and simplification has, however, been considerably agitated and discussed throughout the whole State during the late canvass to elect delegates to a Convention to revise the Constitution, and the proposition has met with general favor.”

In addition to the foregoing, we have the testimony of the able and experienced gentleman from Floyd, (Mr. Thornton,) who, after a practice of forty years at the bar, says that the present system is wrong, and reform is absolutely necessary.

Take the example given by the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit) on yesterday. He ably exhibited some of the absurdities in an action of ejectment; but some, I think, he failed to point out to the Convention. He certainly satisfied all who heard him that reform is necessary.

Let us follow the proceeding a little farther: After John Doe complains of Richard Roe,

(who are fictitious persons,) the owner of the land receives a notice of the pendency of the suit, &c., and he is permitted to defend the case on certain conditions, namely, that he will acknowledge three positive falsehoods and one truth; he must acknowledge "that a lease was executed to John Doe," that "John entered on and took possession of the premises," and that "Richard Roe forcibly ousted the said John from his possession;" and the truth which he must acknowledge is, that he (the defendant) is in possession of the premises, and thereupon comes a jury, and returns a verdict "that the defendant is guilty of the trespass and ejectment," which is false, fictitious, and untrue in every particular.

The jury is sworn to render a true verdict according to the evidence. They are told by the court that John Doe and Richard Roe only exist in the imagination. It is admitted that the whole history of the matter is a fiction; nevertheless, under their oath, they say that the defendant is "guilty of the trespass and ejectment," when in truth and in fact they are trying whether A or B is the owner of the premises described.

I ask the gentleman from Wayne, (Mr. Rariden,) who tells us that if there is anything he is acquainted with and understands, it is the mode of administering justice, and the practice in our courts of law, to give me one single reason why it is necessary to have such absurd proceedings as this; why it is necessary to introduce such unmeaning fiction into the law proceedings? I ask for one single reason.

The jury are sworn to render a true verdict, according to the evidence given; yet, sir, you here compel them to give them a verdict that is untrue.

Would it not be as easy to say, A B complains of C D, because he has taken possession of a certain piece of land, and asks its recovery, so that all men can understand what you mean?

And there are other cases that are equally ridiculous.

The gentleman from Switzerland speaks in a contemptuous manner of my aged friend from Floyd—a man who has spent all his life in courts. The gentleman from Switzerland endeavors to make it appear that my friend from Floyd goes in favor of the proposition because he is going to be a candidate for a county judgeship, and is, therefore, a pettifogger. As to who is the sound lawyer, and who the pettifogger, I leave it to others to judge. I have no doubt the gentleman from Switzerland would much prefer meeting my friend from Floyd by wager of battle, than to meet him in a court of justice in an intellectual contest before a jury and intellectual court, as I presume that would be his only chance of success.

Mr. KELSO. I am a better lawyer than either of the gentlemen.

Mr. McCLELLAND. As to that, I leave the Convention to judge; however, the gentleman from Floyd stands A No. 1 at the bar of the Supreme Court.

It is said that this provision is not wanted. I tell those gentlemen who oppose it that it is wanted, and that I wish their votes to be placed upon the journal; let the people of this State see how you stand. I want your votes to go to your constituents.

The gentleman from Switzerland yesterday volunteered to make all necessary forms of proceedings in five lines. Why does he not favor the Convention with his plan? When I see the country paying thousands of dollars a year for keeping up fictitious proceedings between John Doe and Richard Roe, John Den and Richard Fen, simply to recover possession of certain land, which C unjustly holds from D, I am at a loss to discover the utility and simplicity of such a system. I am in favor of having a reform in this particular. I have an amendment which I intend to offer in case the others are voted down.

I voted against the proposition to appoint commissioners; the voice of the Convention was against me. I will vote for the section now pending; and, in case it is not adopted, I have an amendment which I intend offering, which will probably meet with a favorable reception. This amendment, it will be perceived, may suit the views of both parties. It leaves it discretionary with the Legislature to appoint commissioners or not. [Cries of "read! read!"]

It is as follows:

SEC. —. The General Assembly, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall revise, reform, simplify, and abridge the rules and practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings, both civil and criminal, of the courts of this State. And they shall provide for the abolition of the distinct forms of action at law now in use; and that justice may be administered in a uniform mode of pleading, all distinction between law and equity is hereby abolished. The General Assembly may, if they think proper, appoint commissioners for that purpose, who shall, from time to time, report the result of their labors to the General Assembly, with such recommendations and amendments as to said commissioners may seem necessary. Provision shall be made by law for filling vacancies, regulating and abolishing the tenure of office, and the compensation of said commissioners."

It would leave all those objections which are here urged against the measure to be settled by the Legislature hereafter, and still would secure the great reform which is so loudly called for by the country.

It is urged that a reform cannot be effected. One reason given by the gentleman from Hendricks (Mr. Nave) is, that it is dangerous to "make innovations on the ancient land-marks." If that reason be true, then let us adhere to the ancient system, and have issues tried by wager of battle—by the fiery and water ordeals. It would be a beautiful sight, truly, in this enlightened age, to see criminals walking over red-hot plow shares, and cases decided by wager of battle.

In my humble opinion, there can be but little difficulty in making the necessary reforms, instead of a long fictitious narrative about John Doe with force and arms ousting Richard Roe, &c. A simple statement that A B complains of C D, who holds certain premises which belong to the said A B—a simple statement of the complaint, and of the defense, (if any,) is all that is absolutely necessary for the administration of justice.

MR. KELSO. I am very much disposed to accommodate my friend from Randolph. The amendment which he has read to the Convention is precisely similar to one which I proposed to offer yesterday. It covers the same ground and I will help to vote down all the propositions that are now pending, and then vote with him for his amendment. I will forego the right of offering mine, and he shall have what little reputation appertains to the offering of the proposition. He shall have the honor of offering the amendment, and I will aid and assist him in procuring its adoption. I must say, however, that the gentleman has suffered himself to be made the cat's paw of somebody else, in attacking me. I have never given him any cause to make the attack; he could not have made the attack for himself. I want him to have the honor of offering the amendment that his name may go down to posterity in connection with the names of Kent, and of Story, and Swift, Chief Justice Marshall, and all the other distinguished jurists of the day, that among those illustrious names, high in the niche of judicial fame, shall stand that of the Honorable Judge McClelland, Probate Judge of Randolph county.

MR. GIBSON said—

MR. PRESIDENT: I had not intended to have again occupied the attention of this body with any remarks; nor should I now do so, but for the fact that it seems by many to be assumed as true, that the bar, as a body, are opposed to legal reform.

The question before us naturally divides itself into two branches. First—is reform of any kind necessary? Second—does the section under consideration afford the most appropriate remedy for existing evils?

To both of these questions, I give an unequalled answer in the affirmative. I know that great and intolerable abuses exist in the practice and pleading of our courts; abuses of which nothing but habit could for a single day, reconcile court, bar, or people. I believe that it is our duty to take the initiatory steps in this reform, and feel little hesitancy in saying, that the section under consideration presents the safest, the surest, and in all respects, the best means of effecting the desired reforms.

And here permit me to define clearly the position I occupy on this question. I desire to see a thorough and radical reformation of pleading and practice; just such a one as is contemplated by the imperative portion of the section under debate. I desire to see the old and antiquated forms and senseless fictions of the special pleader swept away; the useless and troublesome distinctions between actions abolished; to see justice administered by one uniform law, without inquiry into the fact whether the cause has come before the court by a bill in chancery or a declaration on the common law side of the court. Thus far do I go, but not one step further. I would not force upon the Legislature the codification of our statute law, much less the endless, I may almost say impossible task, of codifying the whole of the common law.

The great body of the common law may be aptly compared to some mighty temple, reared by the ceaseless labor of successive ages; its foundations deep in the past: its fair proportions and matchless symmetry challenging the admiration of the world; but its portals choked with the rubbish of ages, and overgrown with brambles and thorns, until it requires greater skill to thread their mazes than it does to master the intricacies of the labyrinth within.

While I would seek to throw wide open the doors of the temple, and remove every obstacle to its entrance, I would most sacredly respect the mighty pile itself; and never, either here or elsewhere, shall I by my vote be found assisting in the attempt to tear it down, for the purpose of erecting a more modern edifice upon its ruins and from its materials.

Sir, if there is in this country any one body of men more than another interested in this reform it is the lawyers themselves. Where does the student of law find his greatest difficulties? It is when the ponderous tomes of Chitty are first placed in his hands; and he finds his head bewildered, and his reason and common sense at fault, in endeavoring to master the distinctions between actions, and the senseless rules, or, as lawyers call them, "niceties" of special pleading. What most puzzles the young lawyer just entering the arena; and I might add sometimes the gray-haired veteran of the bar? What are the most perplexing questions for the judge on the bench? The experience of every lawyer will answer, those arising from the pleadings and rules of practice. Sweep away this worse than useless science, and the time now devoted by the student to its mastery, and the practitioner to its application in practice, can then be profitably employed in the study of the great principles upon which the whole fabric, alike of law and government rests —principles too often lost sight of by the special pleader; too often sacrificed by courts to antiquated forms. Human intellect is finite in its powers; there are limits beyond which the most untiring industry will not enable it to pass; and I will here venture the assertion, that seldom or never has a thorough knowledge of special pleading, and a ready and discriminating judgment upon, and intimacy with the general principles of law, been found united in the same person.

You will frequently hear it said of particular lawyers that they are thorough special pleaders; but you will generally find the commendation stop there. A distinguished anatomist of the West was wont to remark to his class, that the man who thoroughly and minutely understood the anatomy of the fore arm could not possibly know anything else of the science of anatomy.

If any man doubts the extent of the evil, let him turn to the decisions of our own Supreme Court; let him there hunt up and trace out the various decisions upon these questions; let him see as he will there see, the numberless instances in which the real merits of the case are wholly lost sight of and forgotten in the discussion and settlement of questions of form alone, and he will doubt no longer.

It has been said truly by a distinguished law writer of New York, that no State in the Union has so closely adhered to the technicalities of special pleading, as Indiana. Sir, we are behind the age, behind our sister States, behind even England, the model which we profess to follow. Reforms to a considerable extent have already been effected there, and others are in progress.

The situation and interests of the legal profession in the two countries are widely different. Here, the bar can have no possible interest in maintaining the present system. In England, where the attorney is paid as we pay our clerks, according to the length of the declaration, bill, or plea, they have a direct interest in making the pleadings as verbose as possible; and it is to that cause that much of the verbage of legal forms is to be ascribed. No such cause operates here, and I repeat again, that no class of men in the State have as deep an interest in this reform, as the members of the bar.

After what has been said by the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit) and others, and in the face of the experience of every member of this body, in times past, it seems to me almost unnecessary to add anything to the argument showing the absurdity of the present system. I will cite the Convention to but a single case. A client comes to me with two promissory notes, each drawn by the same payer, both due, and each for the sum of one thousand dollars, payable in current bank paper. To one of the notes the payer has, after his signature, added a scroll or seal, making it what is technically called a "specialty," or sealed instrument. The holder of the notes wishes suit brought upon them.

Now, sir, I ask those who defend the present system to give us some reason, if such there be, why there should be two separate suits upon those notes? Yet such is the law. The defendant must be harassed with the costs of two separate actions, one called assumpsit and the other covenant. There must be two trials, two juries, two bills of costs, and two executions. Is this right? Can there be a shadow of a reason offered to sustain it? Tell me, ye veterans of the bar, who cling with such death-like tenacity to such forms and rules as this, upon what principle of reason, justice, or common sense do you rest them?

Give us some plausible show of reason for maintaining them—something beyond the mere fact that they have heretofore existed—or else quietly acquiesce in the sentence that dooms them to their proper place among the forgotten rubbish of the past. Show us, if you can, that the reform ought not to be made, but do not evade the question by telling us that the Legislature will have the power to make these reforms without the adoption of this section. It is true that they will have the power—true also, that they have had it for the last thirty-four years, and equally true, that during all that time they have never even attempted to exercise it. Local questions and party considerations govern the election of members of the Legislature. Upon a question like this, they do not, and they never will, reflect the wishes of the people. It is a question peculiarly proper for the action of this Convention. If this reform is necessary and proper, let us make it, and leave consequences to the future. Right or wrong, it is our duty to act upon it, according to the conclusions our several judgments may have arrived at, as to its necessity and propriety.

There are two ways, sir, of meeting a proposition in debate. One by fair, and open, and avowed opposition—that fights the ground inch by inch—that meets the question and its supporters face to face, and yields only when yield it must, to the force of numbers. So, sir, like knights of the olden time, with lance in rest, met us, at the outset, the gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole) and the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. Kilgore). There is no mistaking their position—no fear of their stealing into our camp in the guise of friends.

But there is another and more dangerous, because more insidious, system of tactics, sometimes resorted to in debate, to defeat a measure, and it, too, has not been wanting here. I refer to that kind of opposition that assumes the garb of friendship—that can "Smile, and smile, and murder while it smiles," —that with one hand proffers friendship, while the other wields the secret dagger. [Applause.] It is from such friends of reform as this, that the amendment comes, requiring the Legislature to prepare the code, instead of Commissioners. Sir, the Legislature could not do it in a year. They would not attempt it. And this no gentlemen know better, than do those who propose such an amendment.

There is but one way, effectually to carry out the reform contemplated; and that is by means of Commissioners, as proposed in the reported section. How long, think ye, this Convention would have to sit, before they could prepare and agree upon a code of pleading and practice? I apprehend that the millennium would find us still in session. And yet this body could do it with more facility than a Legislature, because, though equal in number to the aggregate of the Legislature, it yet possesses the great advantage of being constituted a single body.

Another gentleman has told us that a common sense Legislature can, in five lines, provide for all the reforms contemplated by the friends of the section. What those wondrous five lines would be, we can only conjecture from the amendment which the gentleman from Switzerland (Mr. Kelso) has told us he intends offering, declaring by the act of this Convention, that all distinct forms of action, and all distinction between law and equity shall henceforth be abolished.

It is not the part of wisdom, sir, to tear down the house which shelters us, however much we may be dissatisfied with its accommodations, until we have provided another. And yet this is precisely what the amendment of the gentleman from Switzerland (Mr. Kelso) proposes to do. It would blot out of existence all rules and precedents of pleading and practice, without providing any substitute whatever. We should be left without any system, good, bad, or indifferent. Instead of rendering access to our courts more easy, we should close their doors entirely. The ablest lawyer in your State would be without chart or compass to guide him, in prosecuting the rights of his clients.

Each lawyer would be forced to adopt a system of his own. It would then be the province of your Circuit Courts to decide which one of the various modes of commencing suits which different lawyers might adopt, they would approve. Therefore different Circuit Judges, acting without concert, would in all probability adopt thirteen totally different systems of practice, and out of this chaos your Supreme Court would perhaps in the course of ages be able to fashion some sort of a misshapen, disjointed, rickety, system, such as the world never has seen, and I hope never will see.

Sir, before such a system could be perfected by such means, we should not only be in our graves, but the very inscriptions on our tombstones have become illegible from time. Such a proposal is the merest midsummer madness; and the lawyer who proposes it can have no other object but the defeat of all attempts at reformation.

Sir, we have had too much judicial legislation. It is one of the popular delusions of the day, that your courts only expound and enforce them. Every lawyer in the land knows that for one law made by your Legislature, ten is made by your courts. Under pretence of giving construction to a statute they fritter away its meaning, as in the case of the statute abolishing the distinction between case and trespass; or repeal the law entirely, as in the case of the statute of eighteen hundred and twenty-four, relative to the effect of a collector's deed. I have had occasion once before to advert to the repeal of the statute of eighteen hundred and twenty-four by the Supreme Court, and I then, as I do now give it as my solemn conviction that it was one of the most high handed acts of judicial usurpation that any free country ever tolerated. By the act of 1824 providing for the sale of land for taxes it is provided that "the collector's deed shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of the sale." If there is one word in the English language the meaning of which is clearly and unmistakably settled, both as an ordinary and as a legal word, it is the word conclusive. Under that statute thousands and tens of thousands of acres of land were sold and the purchasers relying upon the plain, unquestionable language of the law, supposed their title indisputable. That law the Supreme Court repealed. It would be an insult to common sense, to call a decision which declares "conclusive evidence" to mean only "prima facie evidence" by any other name than a repeal of the statute.

I have been told that a long opinion was written out in support of the decision. If so the reporter showed his good sense by suppressing its publication.

A meagre statement of the points decided, without the slightest attempt to sustain the decision by argument or authority, is all that the report contain.

I mention this, sir, only in elucidation of what I mean when I speak of judicial legislation, and not because it has any particular bearing upon the question under consideration.

In conclusion, sir, I would say to the friends of reform in this body, that if you wish to carry out effectually the changes you desire, stand firmly to the section as reported; it is the result of careful deliberation and compromise in the committee, and will assuredly effect all that we desire. Abandon it for the cunningly devised amendments of its enemies, and my word for it you will find that you have thrown away the substance to grasp the shadow.

[Mr. WALPOLE next addressed the Convention, but his remarks are withheld for revision.]

Mr. MARCH. I do not desire to occupy the time of the Convention on the present occasion in making what is here commonly called a speech; for time, I apprehend, is becoming much more valuable than speech-making, even in the opinion of those who have heretofore been most prodigal of it. Contrasting, also, the votes taken with the speeches made upon many questions in this body, one would be led to conclude that speaking, like blank discharges of artillery, was much more effective in uncovering and disclosing the weak point in the position of the party employing it, than in damaging that of an antagonist. I propose, therefore, simply to give in my adherence most strongly in favor of legal reform. So far as relates to a system of practice and pleading, I am for no partial, half-way reform, but for a thorough re-building from the foundation. I am for reform, not in that spirit which says: "Well, if you will have reform, take it; you will get enough of it; it will only increase litigation, and put money in the pockets of the lawyers;" but in that other spirit, which goes to work in good earnest to ascertain what and where are the existing defects, and to remove them and supply their place with new and simple provisions. Whilst we are advancing with such rapidity in reforming the whole process of making laws, why should not something be done in the administration of them? And, sir, with all due deference to gentlemen, I think that the only way in which it can be accomplished is by the proposition contained in the section, making it imperative upon the Legislature to appoint commissioners, and pointing out the duties of those commissioners.

It is admitted on all hands that there is need of reform. I have heard no member speak who has not admitted the fact; and the question is, how can it be best accomplished? The gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole) says that, under this section, the commissioners are to hold their office as long as the Constitution exists—there is to be no termination to it. Is it so? I believe, sir, that it is not. "Provision shall be made by law for filling vacancies, regulating the tenure of office, and the compensation of said commissioners," &c., &c. What is the meaning of "regulating the tenure of office," if it does not give the Legislature the power to say how long the commissioners shall hold their office? When their duties are terminated, and the work assigned them is satisfactorily completed.

Mr. WOLFE (interposing). We have regulated in regard to the tenure of all our offices. Could not these commissioners sit one, two, three, or even five years?

Mr. MARCH. I will answer the gentleman. We have decided in the Constitution what shall be the tenure of the office of Governor, judges of the courts, &c., &c., &c. These commissioners, however, we leave to the Legislature to determine as to their term of office; and the reason why it is left to them is, because it is impossible for the Convention to determine how long it will take to accomplish the work. It would be utter folly for the Convention to say how long these officers shall be employed in simplifying the rules of pleading. They may be occupied but six months, or one or two years, or perhaps even longer. Whatever time it requires, it will be money well expended. It was well said by the gentleman from Posey (Mr. Owen) yesterday, that, if the framers of the present Constitution had placed but five lines more in it, millions squandered in fruitless undertaking might have been saved to the States. So a vast amount of expenditure, compared with which the cost of these commissioners will be as nothing, may be avoided by a simplification of the rules of pleading. Look at the report of the Auditor lying upon our tables, and see the expense of litigation in Indiana, arising under our present system of practice and pleading. It is a relic of a barbarous age, and is well calculated to foster the spirit of litigation. It breeds and keeps up a feeling of contention and strife in the community. A large portion of the time of courts and lawyers is taken up in discussing and deciding points and questions which have nothing to do with the merits of a case.

If you really desire reform, you must throw away all this old rubbish—these relics of the feudal times. I would as soon think of building a granite fortress upon a log cabin foundation, as imagine that the Legislature could erect, upon the narrow, contracted forms of the common law, a correct system of administering justice. You might as well undertake to fashion a well proportioned and finished statue like the "Greek Slave," by patching over a rude heathen idol with chips of marble, as to construct a simple and consistent method of administering the law, when tied down by the arbitrary rules of the special pleadings of the common law. These old forms must be swept away, and the foundation of our system of practice and pleading laid broad and deep as justice itself. I believe it can be accomplished, and in no other way but by making it imperative upon the Legislature to appoint these commissioners. Let them be able men, appointed without reference to politics, or their profession or business; and, above all, let them be men who have at heart the success of the cause in which they are enlisted. I think such men can be found in Indiana; if not, let us send abroad and get them. Let gentlemen beware of the counsels of those who pretend to be the friends of this measure, but at heart are its enemies. Of all opponents, as was well said by the gentleman from Clark, (Mr. Gibson,) those who pretend to be the friends of a measure are the most dangerous. Now, sir, this report is a compromise report. For one, I am in favor of the three propositions contained in it, and of another one not contained in the report. This report proposes to abolish all distinction between forms of action at law. It proposes, also, that all distinction between law and equity shall be abolished; and, in addition to that, to simplify or arrange the statute law of the State. I am in favor, in addition to that, of laying the foundation of a codification of all the general principles of the common law. I believe it is perfectly practicable, and until it is done, "the glorious uncertainty of the law" will be a by-word in the mouths of all. It has been truly said by the gentleman from Clark, (Mr. Gibson,) that our courts enact more laws than our legislative bodies; and if the proposition made by the gentleman from Dearborn had prevailed, we would have twenty-four Legislatures sitting all the year, enacting not only general, but local, and special, and individual laws. If this system is ever to be reformed, and a correct system established in its place, we must begin at the foundation, so far as regards the administration of the law, and reduce into a concise and systematic code, all the great outlines of the law.

I did not rise for the purpose of going into a detail of the arguments in favor of this measure. I do not deem it necessary. I believe the people of the State have become convinced that there is need of reform. I believe that a majority of the Convention are in favor of it, and are prepared to act. Look at the position we occupy for a moment. We have assembled here as a Reform Convention; we commenced with the bill of rights, and have gone through and reformed that, according to the latest and most improved fashion. We even tried the hazardous experiment of knocking the soul out of it, in the shape of the first section, and then re-placing it again, though somewhat mutilated and shorn of its former proportions. With the keen, bright cimeter of the gentleman from Posey flashing in the van, we have made a grand excursion into the fairy region of woman's rights, where our alternate success and defeat have gone far to establish the truth of the saying, that the winds which blow from that quarter are rather fickle and uncertain; but it has not been altogether "love's labor lost;" for a new interest has been awakened in relation to the subject of woman's rights, which will eventually be productive of much good. Under the guidance of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, with his good broad sword, "marshaling us the way we were going," we have taken a tilt at the Grand Jury system, and it bent before us like a reed in a tempest, though backed by the usage and sanction of a thousand years. If still suffered to stand, it is indebted to the discretion and clemency of its opponents, rather than its own strength in this Convention.

With numerous leaders, we made a rushing charge upon the old State Bank, and though we were forced to make a slight detour round it, yet it is certain that the money changers of Indiana will no longer dwell apart in their "marble halls," but will hereafter be found standing at every corner of the street. [Laughter.]

We have now approached this antique structure of special pleading standing like a feudal castle of the middle ages, with its formidable array of demurrers, rejoinders and sur-rejoinders, rebutters and sur-rebutters frowning in the distance. At this critical moment, I regretted to hear the voice of my colleague, the gentleman from Delaware, calling a halt, and others with ominous looks advising a retreat, and intimating that the old pile is filled with ghosts and all kinds of hidden dangers, and that we had better let it alone.

Sir, would it look well for this Convention, composed of one-half or one-third lawyers to reform everything else and leave this system of administering justice untouched? [Cries of "no, no."] Would it look well for the "lay gentlemen" who compose the majority of this body, to go home to their constituents and say "we have reformed everything else, but have left this system of special pleadings standing in full force and effect, just as it was before?" For one, I do not desire to bear any of the honor that may attach to the profession in taking such a course. I am for reform and the section as it now stands, and also an additional proposition that will bring before the Legislature the subject of codifying the general principles of the law.

The codification of the common law or any portion of it has been denounced as a dangerous, foolish, and impracticable scheme, calculated to produce litigation and increase the uncertainty of the law. The strength of this kind of dogmatical reasoning depends very much upon the superiority of the information and judgment of those who use it, over all others who have given their attention to the subject, and differ with them in opinion.

This naked assertion is refuted by the nature of the thing itself, by history, and the authority of men quite as eminent in their knowledge of the law as any of those who oppose the measure. Law is "a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a State." It is also a maxim of the common law that "ignorance of the law excuses no one." Law then being the rule for the government of the conduct of persons in all the varied relations of life, and each individual bound to understand it at his peril, it is of the highest importance, that it be placed in such a form that its general principles, at least, may be accessible to and known by all. It should be reduced to determinate propositions and settled and fixed, so that the administration of it may be uniform in all the courts throughout the State. If any principle of law is so far settled that it can be ascertained by a court and applied and declared in the decision of a cause, it can as easily be expressed in a code, and receive the sanction of the Legislature. Let the code be an affirmation of what the common law now is, and not in derogation of it, and be used and applied in the same manner that the principles of the common law are now used and applied. The objection that because we cannot have a perfect code, therefore we should have none, may be made with just as much force to every human production. A good code must be the gradual work of years. We ought now to make a beginning. A common objection to a code is that it will give rise to a great deal of judicial construction in ascertaining its meaning. This objection is just as strong to the common law, when floating through a hundred thousand volumes of treatises, opinions, and reports, as after it is reduced into a code. A proposition of law when distinctly expressed in a code cannot give rise to any more litigation or be more difficult of construction than when enunciated by a judge from the bench.

A good code would bring a knowledge of the general principles of the law within the reach of all reading and reflecting men, an object of vast importance in any free and enlightened nation. It would lessen the labor, and consequently the expense of counsel and litigation in the community. It would avoid a great many mistakes which are now occasioned by the uncertainty, obscurity, and vast amount of rubbish with which the law is surrounded. It would settle and fix beyond judicial control, and so as to be relied upon, a great many propositions, upon which there are at present a multitude of conflicting opinions and decisions, constantly leading the best counsel astray and, upon which no opinion can be said to be correct, until the highest court has given its final and irreversible decision. The codification of the law, has to sustain it, the highest historical authority. The civil code of Justinian was the law of a vast empire for centuries. It has been substantially adopted by nearly all of the modern civilized nations of Europe. And it is the fountain from which the boasted common law of England has stealthily drawn many of its best principles, thus in itself affording the strongest argument in favor of that measure, which its ardent admirers spurn with so much contempt.

France, also, in her civil code, has a monument of the genius of her Napoleon far more enduring than the giant statue cast from the cannon captured on the field of Austerlitz. A few propositions briefly and perspicuously stated, have supplied the place of cart loads of commentaries and decisions. We have also in favor of the measure, the opinion of many of the ablest lawyers in our own country. The following is an extract from a report made to the Legislature of Massachusetts, on the subject of codification, by Judge Story, Theon, Metcalf, Professor Greenleaf, Charles E. Forbes, and Luther S. Cushing, all eminent lawyers bred in the school of the common law:

"The commissioners are of opinion that it is expedient to reduce to a code those principles and details of the common law of Massachusetts in civil cases, which are of daily use and familiar application to the common business of life, and the present state of property and personal rights and contracts, and which are now so far ascertained and established as to admit of a scientific form and arrangement, and are capable of being announced in distinct and determined propositions."

"The commissioners are in the next place of opinion, that the law of evidence, as applicable both to civil and criminal proceedings should be reduced to a code." "Among these contracts the commissioners would especially recommend as the subject of a code the following titles, viz.: the law of agency, of bailment, of guarantee, of suretyship, of bills of exchange, of promissory notes, of insurance, and partnership."

On the score of authority this would seem to be sufficient, but let one more be added on the general subject of legal reform. Within the past year the Solicitor General of England has used the following language in the House of Commons: "I must warn the House if they attempt legal reforms, that they must not allow lawyer after lawyer to get up and tell them that they were not capable of understanding the subject. The House may depend upon it, if they could not reduce a legal proposition to the plain principles of common sense, comprehensible to persons of ordinary intelligence, the defect was that it was a technical system, invented for the creation of costs, and not to promote the due administration of justice." These are some of the arguments and authorities which may be produced in favor of codification, but as the subject is not directly before us I will not further consume the time of the Convention.

Mr. NEWMAN. I would ask the gentlemen from Tippecanoe and Clark, and the grave gentleman from Delaware, if they think there is neither honesty or integrity in any gentleman who ventures to differ with them in the mode or manner of effecting a reform in our course of legal proceedings? It would appear to me as though gentlemen expected to carry a measure by denunciation, and to deter other gentlemen from doing their duty in the face of this Convention. For one, I hesitated for some time whether or not I should address the Chair. But I will state, directly, that I have no opposition to any salutary, legal reform. And, so far as these gentlemen are concerned, I have no personal objection to their making a code, if they choose, either of practice or of the general law, for it will not interfere with the profit or the convenience of my position. I have no fear of it; for every time you make a change in the existing laws of the land, you call for adjudication upon the legislation that has been used in making the change, and that necessarily makes more business for the lawyers, and the greater the profit. No doubt some of the gentlemen will have as great a share in the profits as those whom gentlemen denounce as being opposed to a salutary reform. But the objection to this measure lies not against it as a measure of reform, but because of its imperative character. I am met, however, by gentleman in advance, who say that if any one does not march up to the line they have marked out, he is an insidious enemy of the proposition—that there is no integrity in those who oppose it, and that no one shall dare to stand up and say there is anything right but what these gentlemen have advocated. This sir, is but the language of declamation and not I presume, the language of those gentlemen's hearts. It is merely a speech, and sounds well—it will go abroad to their constituents, and they will thus be hailed as the exclusive friends of law reform.

There is a minority report from the Convention on "Law Reform" which provides that the Legislature may, at its first session, after the adoption of the Constitution, or at any subsequent session, make provision for the appointment of commissioners to make a revision similar to that proposed in this section. The only difference between the two reports is, that one makes it imperative upon the Legislature to appoint this commission at its first session after the adoption of the new Constitution, while the other says at its first, or any other subsequent session. The reason which induces me to favor the minority report, is on account of the expense to be incurred by the authoritative obligation on the Legislature to appoint the commissioners at its next session. Let me call attention to the facts surrounding the calling of this Convention. When our constituents went to the ballot box to deposit their votes in favor of calling the Convention, did they suppose, for one moment, that they would have to pay $100,000 for the revision of their Constitution? Did any one entertain such a supposition? If they had they would have refused to call this Convention, and have been willing to live on under the old Constitution that has so long sheltered us during the storms of time, and brought us securely, with our rights and liberties unimpaired, down to the present day. Yes, sir, I have no doubt but that they would have chosen to continue under the old instrument, rather than to put their hands in their pockets and pay out $100,000 to this Convention, to do what may be very questionable—improve the Constitution of the State.

After incurring all this vast expense, are we now to put an additional burden upon the shoulders of the people by the appointment, of these commissioners coming upon the very heels of her other burdens?

The salaries of these officers cannot be merely nominal, for if you want men competent to the discharge of the duties appertaining to the commission, you must compensate them for abandoning their business. The compensation, sir, must be ample, because these commissioners will be obliged, when they have terminated their labors, to go once more into the professional arena, to compete for the business they have abandoned. Then, again, the Legislature must be in session a considerable length of time in order to take action upon the report of the commissioners—another item of expense.

It is said that this commission is not to be continuous. I hope not; but in New York, in 1846, they appointed commissioners for a purpose similar to that contemplated by this section, and I understand they have not as yet concluded their labors. I would inquire of the gentleman from Allen (Mr. Borden) if such is not the fact?

Mr. BORDEN. The gentleman is mistaken. Last fall the commissioners on the Reform of the practice of the Law completed their labors and were discharged. I am not mistaken in the statement I make in regard to the matter.

Mr. NEWMAN. I had supposed that they were still in session. What compensation did they receive?

Mr. BORDEN. I do not know as to that.

Mr. NEWMAN. They each received three thousand dollars a year. Add to that the necessary expense of Legislation, of printing, and the contingent expenses always attending such a commission, and then the distribution of the report among the people of the State, and my word on it, if you add to the other enormous expenses of the State an item of no trifling amount; if gentlemen are prepared to shoulder this additional, and they think the people will be satisfied under the infliction, then, in all conscience, let them do it. But if they want to leave a little discretion with the Legislature to ease the people of the burdens imposed upon them by the calling of this Convention, leave it discretionary with them to appoint this commission at the first, or if they prefer, some subsequent session.

Mr. STEELE. There is a doubt arising in my mind, as to how I shall give my vote on this question. Having to vote, however, I am inclined at least, to present my views briefly on this measure, to this Convention.

I ask the gentlemen of the bar this question, who is to derive advantage from this law reform?

A VOICE. The Lawyers.

Well, gentlemen say that the lawyers are the parties interested; it may be so, perhaps, but, sir, will the lawyer's fees be reduced? I presume not. If there be no reduction of their fees—and I am one of the laity and have always employed counsel—I ask what advantage I will derive from the reform? None, sir. The yeomanry of the country—the great mass of the community are to derive no benefit whatever, after they have incurred the expenditure attending these commissioners, to be appointed under this section. If the gentlemen of the bar will reform in regard to fees, and come down and work for half the money they now receive, I will go in and vote for the section. No, sir, they won't do it.

Now, I wish to say a few words in regard to this matter called reform. We have now been near four months engaged in reforming the Supreme Law of the land. I will here say, however, to my friend from Ripley, who has appeared among you as a reformer, that with the purest motives and best intention, he has reformed one man out of office and another man in. It is only a lousy dog out and another dog in. [Loud laughter.] And let me tell you that a great portion of the reform made here, is of the same character. I have no doubt about it. And if the gentlemen from Allen can get a place upon this commission, he will have to cage the most troublesome red headed wood pecker that he ever tried to cage in his life. [Much laughter.] [The course of the speaker's remarks was here interrupted by the loud and continuous barking of a dog in the lobby of the Hall. This created much confusion and merriment, and amidst loud cries of "hear him, hear him,"]

THE PRESIDENT said: The Sergeant-at-Arms will remove the dogs from the lobby. [Laughter.]

MR. STEELE. Mr. President, it appears to be one of my greatest misfortunes that every time I have obtained a right to this floor, I have been involved in greater difficulty than any other man among you. But I am decidedly of opinion that all which transpires is in the best of feeling.

A VOICE. Yes, sir.

And I hope when the time comes for me to leave you, I shall leave you all in this good feeling. [Cries of "consent."]

Let me say in conclusion, gentlemen, that when I compare your new with your old Constitution, I am decidedly of opinion that we have to some extent, reformed the old one; and have prepared a better Constitution for the people than the one they are now living under. No one can get up an instrument of this kind, which will suits every man's views and feelings. I know I could not do it.

But I wish before I sit down, to notice the position taken by some gentlemen, in regard to making it imperative on the Legislature to appoint this commission. Among others I would notice the position of the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit). [Cries of "give it to him."] How does it happen that these leading men at one time are in favor of leaving important matters to be decided by the Legislature, and then upon the turning of a needle's point, the Legislature, in their opinion, is entirely disqualified to settle any question—no confidence should be placed in them, or the least liberty given them for the future? If you leave this great question of the "Grand Jury," to the Legislature, to continue or abolish it at their pleasure; or if you leave with them the power to establish probate and other inferior courts as they may desire, why not leave this matter, in the same manner?

What is the good of this reform if it only reforms the practice of the law, so as to enable a man to become a lawyer in one-half the time required now, and they to continue charging the same fees as at present? It would just put so many more dollars in the lawyer's pockets. If this be all the people have to obtain from the reform proposed by this section, we had better vote it all down. But I am willing to leave the whole matter with the Legislature, for them to act in the premises as they may think fit and proper. I want all these ancient forms stricken out, and the useless technicalities used in deeds should be swept away. I know that when a deed is originally lodged in my office, it will not cover over half a page of a common blank book. But, however, these small matters are all dressed up by the gentlemen of the bar, until they become ridiculously voluminous, and overlaid with useless technicalities. I say let us leave this subject to the Legislature so that the people can get all the reforms they require in this respect, through the medium of their representatives.

[MR. MATHER then proceeded to address the Convention—his remarks will appear hereafter.]

MR. FOLEY moved the previous question, which was agreed to.

The main question was then ordered to be put by consent, and the main question being on the amendment offered by the gentleman from LaPorte, to the amendment by the gentleman from Perry, it was decided in the negative.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Perry, and it was decided in the negative.

THE PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading.

On this, the yeas and nays were demanded, and being ordered and taken, the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 92, nays 30:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bourne, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Goozee, Gordon, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, May, McClelland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Scott, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Work, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—92.

NAYS.—Messrs. Barbour, Beach, Beard, Blythe, Bowers, Clements, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Farrow, Graham of Miami, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Mather, McLean, Moore, Nave, Newman, Niles, Rariden, Smith of Ripley, Spahn, Steele, Stevenson, Thomas, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, and Zenor—30.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDENT. The next thing in the order of the day, is section No. 35, on its second reading.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. Would it now be in order to make the motion of which I gave notice upon yesterday, in reference to the thirty-seventh rule?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNN. Then I move that the thirty-seventh rule, for the government of this Convention, be rescinded. I will here state the rule requires that resolutions, if of an imperative character, if objection be made, shall lie over one day.

The question was put and decided in the affirmative.

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Mr. OWEN gave notice that on to-morrow, he would move to amend the rules by proposing the following additional rule:

"That, when an article is disposed of, it shall be in order to move an additional section."

The Convention then resumed the consideration of the

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The first thing in order being an additional section reported from the committee on the legislative department.

The PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Marion, to re-commit the section with instructions to add the following words: "Under a general law."

The section and instructions are as follows

"The Legislature may confer upon the board doing county business in the several counties of the State, such powers of a local, legislative, and administrative character, as they shall from time to time prescribe."

Mr. PETTIT. That section was laid upon the table long ago.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that this section was reported by the committee, with a recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. PETTIT. And it has never been taken up from the table.

The PRESIDENT. It never was laid upon the table. The question is, Shall the report of the committee be concurred in?

The reading of the report being called for, it was read by the Secretary.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. As we have now commenced the article on local legislation, I think we had better lay that report upon the table until we get through with the article. I, therefore, move to lay the report upon the table.

The motion to lay the report upon the table was not agreed to.

Mr. DOBSON. I hope that this section will either be re-committed or adopted. It should be remembered that the Legislature are to have no power of passing local laws; yet the power should be vested somewhere, and it should be done under a general law.

Mr. PETTIT. I protest, Mr. President, that there is no necessity for any such section as this. If any gentleman will point out to me one single thing which needs local legislation, or for which there need be local legislation, they may pass as many local laws as they please. But I say that no such thing is at all necessary. Why not, then, at once say that your laws shall be general and uniform. The gentleman from Allen, (Mr. Borden,) the other day, said, we ought to have some local legislation to protect cranberry patches and fish ponds.

Sir, in God's name, let me ask if legislation is necessary in this respect, why not have a general law to protect your cranberry patches and your goose ponds? [A laugh.] The gentleman said it was necessary to have laws for the protection of fish in your waters, and the killing of game in your forests and prairies. Why not do this by a general law, saying that wherever fish shall be found, the law in regard to catching them shall be so and so, and that deer and other game shall not be killed between such a month and such another month? I hold, sir, that the laws should be general in every instance. Sir, if this is not done, you are just leaving undone the very thing which, most of all others, we are sent here to do—to cut down this whole system of local legislation, so that a man, in stepping over the boundary line of one county into another county, might not be under the painful uncertainty as to whether he was living under the same system of laws. Why, sir, what is more easy than to say that, wherever there is a cranberry patch, the berries shall not be picked, except within a given time. If you do not do this, you will make ninety-nine local laws, where one law would answer the purpose.

Mr. BORDEN. The gentleman from Tippecanoe does not, with his usual ability, discriminate what I said the other day. Now, in one part of the State, the people may not wish to pick cranberries at a particular season, while in another, that may be the very season in which they wish to pick them. In some parts they may wish to pick them when they are ripe, and in others when they are green. The object of the proposition is to invest the county boards under a general law, to regulate all these little matters, so as to suit the wishes of the people of such county. In most of the new Constitutions of the different States, there is a provision of this kind. Where laws can be general, I hope we will have such a clause as will effect that object; but the reason why we want a regulation of this kind, is, to prevent the Legislature from spending its time in legislating upon these little matters.

Mr. DOBSON. From the remarks of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, I should judge that he entertains the opinion that no county can have any regulations which another county should not also have.

Mr. PETTIT. They never ought to have.

Mr. OWEN. If the gentleman from Tippecanoe had traveled as much after cattle, and horses, and hogs, as I have traveled, he would think very differently to what he appears to think, in regard to this matter, and, I think, could not fail to see the necessity of some such regulation as that proposed.

Mr. PETTIT. There can be no necessity for it.

Mr. DOBSON. Sir, in one part of the State the people want their hogs, and sheep, and cattle, to run at large, while in another part of the State, it is desirable that they should be kept within inclosures; and if the people of the south find it to their interest to have the matter one way, and the people of the north desire to have it another, can that possibly do any harm to either party?

As to your fish ponds and cranberry swamps, everybody knows that in one part of the State the cranberries are ripe much earlier in the season than they are in another, and I suppose the gentleman from Tippecanoe wants to change the whole seasons, and to swear that there shall be but one summer time and one winter time all over the United States; that it shall commence on one given day, and end on another; and that when it snows or rains, it shall do so at the same time all over the Union. [Great laughter.] This might, perhaps, be a very glorious thing if it could be done; or it might, perchance, happen to be very inconvenient.

Now, we have many things to do in regard to fences and roads, and the working of roads, which, in the south could be done at one time, and which could not be done in the north at the same time. There is a difference in the climate, the customs, and the manners of the people, and in the products, and, indeed, in everything else; and many regulations may be required in one part of the State, which would not answer at all in another. There is a difference in the seasons too. The dog blossoms are blown two months earlier in my county than in some other parts of the State; and it must be manifest, when all things are considered, that there may be many matters in every county, which may, from the location, the character of the soil, and, indeed, everything else, require a different regulation to that which may be required in another county. We cannot make the seasons the same. We cannot change our prairies into forests, or our forests into prairies. We cannot change our mountains into plains, or make corn-fields on the surface of our rivers. When we can do all these things, then we may, perhaps, be able to adopt that general system in regard to all our legislation, which the gentleman from Tippecanoe appears so much to desire.

Mr. PETTIT (in his seat). Do you want a law to regulate the dog-wood blossoming? [A laugh].

Mr. DOBSON. Independently of the blossoming of the dog-wood, I contend, Mr. President, to be serious, that the people of the south, having different manners and pursuits, and being surrounded by different circumstances, require, in many respects, different laws from those of the people of the north. If the people of the north want to have their cattle kept up, they can do so, and the people of the south will not feel aggrieved. On the other hand, if the people of the south want theirs to run at large, why they can do so without injury to the people of the north. The county boards must have some legislative power. They always have had it, and I suppose they always will have it, where there are county boards. We want to delegate this power under a general law, and not under any special law.

Mr. OWEN. In my judgment, Mr. President, the true principle in regard to this matter may be comprised in a very few words. In regard to any matter of such a character as that which has been referred to, I entertain no doubt that under the present system if a single county applied to the Legislature to have an act passed for that county, the Legislature would, as a matter of course, grant it. But under our new Constitution, no such matter could come before the Legislature at all. Now, sir, it will perhaps be impossible to have uniformity in all the regulations throughout all the counties of the State, and I am therefore satisfied that it will be necessary to delegate some powers to the county boards.

Mr. PETTIT. Now I repeat to the gentleman from Owen, (Mr. Dobson,) and the gentleman from Posey, (Mr. Owen,) that in no single one of the propositions or positions they have taken or supposed have they named a Legislative object or idea—not one. They are every one ministerial or judicial. They are merely to carry out what the law is to say. The gentlemen say now that the various county boards of the State have Legislative authority. I say that they have not in one single instance. There are none of their powers that are Legislative; none of them that are creative of law, but administrative of law or executive of it. The law says now that a board of county commissioners being petitioned by certain persons that they want a road laid out, or where they need one altered, the board shall appoint reviewers, and if the reviewers shall report favorably, then the commissioners should order the road to be opened if in their judgment it is necessary. Now, sir, there is not one bit of legislation in that. It is only carrying out the directions of the Legislature. There is no law making power there. So it is with everything else.

And now to return to the cranberry patches. The gentleman from Allen says that in some counties the people may want to pick them when they are green, and in others when they are ripe. Now I protest against the necessity for anything of this sort. These cranberry patches do not belong to the State at all; they are the lands of the United States Government, and the people of California have just as much right to come upon them and pick cranberries, or to come for that purpose from Illinois or Michigan, as any citizen of Indiana. [A voice—"You are wrong there."] I am not wrong, sir. These are the public property of the United States, and the citizens of any other State are not excluded from picking berries on them any more than we are.

Now here is precisely what I want: you take a line dividing two counties, and in one county the gentleman says they do not want them picked until they are ripe. Now here is a man living close upon the borders of a cranberry patch, and another ten or fifteen miles away, and he has as much right to go and pick cranberries whether ripe or green as the man who lives upon the border of the patch; or if a man wants to start from the south in the fall and take hands and his wagon with him to get cranberries in the north, he has a right to do so, and might want to do so; and ought he not, in such case, to have an opportunity of knowing what the general law upon the subject is, and not be subject to be governed by a law made in a township?

Sir, there is no necessity for this local legislation—none whatever. To be sure your county boards are authorized to open roads and to do many other local matters, but all this can be done under the regulation of a general statute. There is no legislation in it; there is no creative power at all. It is all ministerial, and is the mere carrying out of the provisions of the Legislature. You need no such laws as those that have been suggested here; and even if you had them, what would be your position? If you are to have these little local Legislatures, you will have as many laws as there are forty acre lots in every county in the State. Sir, if one Legislature here at the centre has made so many odious local legislatures which have been a cause of so much complaint throughout the State, how many more of such laws will be made by ninety local Legislatures? You have come here, have you, to abrogate local legislation, and you are to have ninety Legislatures to make laws for every county!

Sir, our object ought to be to make our laws uniform, so that wherever a man treads the soil of Indiana, he shall have the same rights and privileges, and stand in all respects surrounded by the same laws, and be governed by them.

Mr. BADGER. I think, Mr. President, that we have spent time enough upon this subject, and I therefore move the previous question.

The call for the previous question was sustained, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on re-committing the section, it was decided in the negative—ayes 37, noes not counted.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the report and recommendation of the committee, namely, that the section be laid upon the table.

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken resulted as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Beeson, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Helm, Helmer, Huff, Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Mathis, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Sharron, Sherrod, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Wunderlich, and Mr. President—68.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Bicknell, Biddle, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Carter, Chapman, Chenerwith, Clark of Hamilton, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Frisbie, Haddon, Harbolt, Hardin, Hawkins, Hendricks, Hitt, Hugin, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Johnson, of D., Logan, Maguire, March, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller or Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Prather, Sims, Spann, Stevenson, Toda, Wa. pole, Watts, Wolfe, Work, Yocum, and Zenor—53.

So the report of the committee was concurred in.

LOCAL AND SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

THE PRESIDENT. The next business in the orders of the day is report 35.

This being a report from the committee on local and special legislation, it was read by the Secretary as follows:

"Sec. —. The General Assembly shall not pass any local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say:

"Regulating the jurisdiction and duties of justices of the peace and constables.

"For the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors.

"Regulating the practice at law and in chancery.

"Providing for granting divorces and changing the venue in civil and criminal cases.

"Changing the names of persons.

"For laying out, opening, working on, and repairing highways, and the election or appointment of supervisors.

"Vacating roads, town plats, streets, alleys, and public squares.

"Summoning and empanneling grand and petit juries, and providing for their payment.

"Regulating county and township business.

"Regulating the election of county and township officers, and their compensation.

"For the assessment and collection of taxes for State, county, township, and road purposes.

"Providing for maintaining common schools or the preservation of school funds.

"In relation to fees or salaries.

"Providing for opening and conducting elections for State, county, or township officers, and where electors may vote.

"Providing for the sale of real estate by executors, administrators, or guardians.

"For the creation of private incorporations.

"For the incorporation of colleges, seminaries, schools, churches, religious, scientific, or benevolent societies.

"Providing for the incorporation of railroad, plankroad, turnpikeroad, canal, and bridge companies.

"In relation to municipal corporations, such as congressional townships, school districts, cities, boroughs, towns, and villages.

"And all laws in all such cases shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the State.

"And in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, no local or special law shall ever be passed.

"And every statute shall be a public law unless otherwise declared in the statute."

Mr. MILROY proposed to amend the article by striking all out after the word "laws" in the first line. [Cries of "no, no, no."]

Mr. HELMER. A motion to amend by perfecting the original section having precedence of a motion to strike out, I move the following as an amendment:

"And in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, no local or special law shall ever be passed."

The yeas and nays being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion to strike out the section.

Mr. CRUMBACKER moved to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. MILROY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, and the question being taken, the motion to strike out all the article after the word "laws" was agreed to.

Mr. NEWMAN moved to amend by inserting between the twenty-first and twenty-second lines the words—

"In relation to the interest on money."

The amendment was adopted by consent.

Mr. CHAPMAN moved to amend the article by adding, in the proper place, the following words:

"All laws regulating licenses of every kind."

[Loud cries of "Consent! consent!" and "No! no!"]

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. I am not prepared to say precisely what would be the effect of the adoption of that amendment; but if it is to give to the people of the State the freedom of the dram-shops, then I am opposed to it. Sir, a wholesome reform has been effected in the State of Indiana on the subject of temperance; and it owes much of its progress to the fact that, to the people has been given the power to say whether or not these infecting establishments shall be maintained in their vicinity. Now, this is a matter which I am fully disposed to leave to the people. If they are willing to have no dram-shops within their towns or counties, and a majority of the voters so decide at the ballot-box; I say it is right that they should have the power to correct so great an evil. If I understand the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Marion, it is, that no laws shall be passed that will give the people the right to say whether or not grog-shops shall be established among them. If that is done, sir, then we cannot suppress grog-shops in any portion of the State without the consent of the whole people of the State.

Now, I ask whether the people in any part of the State have complained, or are complaining that this question of licensing or not licensing grog-shops is left to them? Sir, whenever we do anything that will interfere with the progress of temperance in Indiana, we are making a retrograde movement. It has done more good for us, as a people, than perhaps any other moral movement; and I would not throw one straw in the way of its onward progress. I wish to leave this matter where it has been for years past. If a majority of the people in a town or county say that they will not have dram-shops, let them have the right to abolish them; and, on the other hand, if a majority are willing to have them, then give them the power, trusting to the effect of public opinion, in the hope that the time may come when these places will be as much placed under the ban of law as your gambling-shops.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I did not introduce this amendment for the purpose of eliciting speeches either for or against the cause of temperance, but to show the Convention that cases might arise in which it might be wise to give certain powers of legislation to the county boards. The Convention has refused to confer any powers of that kind; although I would be willing that the county boards should legislate according to the sentiment of the counties on that subject, as in others, where a majority of the people were disposed to prohibit the sale of liquor. But if we are to have no powers of that kind vested in our county boards, then we should settle the matter by a general law, for the purpose of preventing the question from being agitated as a political one. Although this is a question which ought to be regarded as a moral one, and only as such, yet it has been used as a political question. I present it, however, simply for the purpose of creating an issue on the question we have just voted down. I have never seen any evil grow out of a restricted degree of local legislation given to the county boards. I have seen its good effects in the Eastern States, where they have always had the power in their townships, by their twelve select men. No difficulty ever occurred there, where the people had the power of acting through their own immediate agents in their own neighborhood, by which the Legislatures of the States have been relieved of the necessity of legislating on a great many questions that would have come before them. Now, we should require a settlement of that question by a general law, to give power to the county boards to settle these matters according to the opinions of the people of their several localities.

Mr. OWEN. I am opposed to this amendment, since its effect will be, that either a law permitting licenses shall be passed for the whole State, or there shall be no license in any county. The people will not have power to determine for themselves what shall be done in regard to it in their several localities. Now, I consider that no such general law, either on the one side or on the other, ought to be passed. If there should be a majority in one part of the State against license, let them have the power to forbid it; on the other hand, if, in the other localities, public opinion is not so far advanced as to refuse license, so let it be.

If you make a law notoriously adverse to public opinion, it will become a dead letter; nor is that the end of it; for any law becoming a dead letter has a demoralizing tendency—a tendency to induce disrespect for other laws which the public mind approves. On the other hand, if a law should be passed that there shall be license throughout the State, then you deprive those counties where the temperance cause is strong of the right to exclude this traffic from among them. In either case, I think a general law is wrong, and that public opinion in regard to this matter ought to be allowed to follow its own course. As the gentleman from Marion has truly said, there are some matters—and this is one—which might well be left to regulation by the county boards.

Sir, I hold the true principle to be this: whatever a State can as well do as the General Government, ought to be left to the State; whatever a county can as well do as the State, ought to be left to the county; whatever the township can as well do as the county, ought to be left to the township; and, finally, whatever the individual can properly determine for himself, ought to be regulated neither by township, county, State, or General Government. The less the power is removed from the individual, the better. The further you remove it from him or from his township, or from his county, the more is it liable to abuse. Sir, I conceive that to be a safe, and sound, and important democratic principle.

In regard to this matter of license, I am confidently of opinion that it ought to be left to the sentiment of the people in the different parts of the State.

Mr. BADGER. What part of the section does the gentleman propose to amend?

Mr. CHAPMAN. The first paragraph.

Mr. BADGER. I would like to offer an amendment to the section, so as to make it read as follows—

The PRESIDENT. It is not now in order.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I will withdraw my amendment, having accomplished the object I had in view in offering it.

Mr. NEWMAN offered the following amendment:

"And every statute shall be a public law, unless otherwise declared in the statute."

The amendment was adopted by consent.

Mr. BADGER. I now offer my amendment. I propose to insert, after the word "cases," the words "but may confer such power by general laws on the boards doing county business."

Mr. GIBSON moved to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. WOLFE demanded the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and, being taken, resulted as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Bourne, Brookbank, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Jariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimby, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—96.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bicknell, Biddle, Blythe, Borden, Bowers, Butler, Clark of Hamilton, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Fisher, Gootee, Haddon, Hardin, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Johnson of D., Logan, McClelland, McLean, Milroy, Morrison of Washington, Pepper of Ohio, Tague, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, and Work—35.

So the amendment was laid upon the table.

Mr. MATHER moved to amend the section by adding the following:

"Provided that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prohibit the Legislature from conferring, by general laws, on the boards doing county business, such powers of a local, legislative, or administrative character, as they may deem expedient."

[Cries of "No! no!" and "Consent! consent!"]

Mr. GIBSON. I move the previous question.

Mr. PETTIT. The sense of the Convention has been taken on the same amendment several times over—substantially the same—and been every time rejected.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order, being substantially the same as the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Putnam, (Mr. Badger,) and which the Convention has just voted down.

Mr. KELSO. I have a small amendment which I wish to offer. It is to strike out of the fourteenth line the words "and townships," so as to have the provision to relate to county business only. The reason why I ask for the adoption of this amendment is this: As far back as 1825, a law was passed specially for Dearborn county, allowing them to adopt a particular mode of doing county business by three trustees, and the election of a township clerk. Switzerland county was included; and in 1844 Ohio county was placed under the same law. Now, they have adhered to that mode of doing their township business ever since, and it is found to be a great saving of expense. It might so happen that the Legislature would not choose to make such a regulation for the whole State—

Mr. DOBSON (interrupting). Let me ask the gentlemen if that is a local law?

Mr. KELSO. It is a local law.

Mr. DOBSON (ironically). Then it ought to be abolished.

Mr. KELSO. I differ with the gentleman from Owen; there are some very good local laws that ought to be continued in existence; and if the State generally is not willing to adopt them, those who have long tried them ought to have an opportunity of retaining them. Now, sir, I know that I would not speak out of bounds, when I say that nine-tenths of the votes in these three counties will be against the new Constitution, if this law regulating township business is not to be left them.

Mr. PETTIT (in his seat). Very well; make all the laws in all the other counties like this.

Mr. KELSO. But we are not sure that the Legislature will do this; and therefore, I offer my amendment.

Mr. BASCOM. I am opposed to local legislation, but like the gentleman from Switzerland, I am anxious that our township arrangements should not be interfered with. The counties of Adams and Wells are governed by the same laws in relation to their township affairs, as the counties of Switzerland, Dearborn, and Ohio. We should be happy if we could have the law made general; but as there can be no certainty of this, I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Switzerland will prevail and that these words may be left out, so that we may be permitted to enjoy our present mode of conducting our township business as we have heretofore done. We like the township trustee mode better than any other, and for this reason I go for striking out these words.

Mr. PETTIT. I would rather for my part, say that the Convention should put into the Constitution a clause saying that the law now existing in the counties of Dearborn, Ohio, Switzerland, Adams, and Wells, in relation to township business, should forever be the law, than that any exception should be made in regard to local legislation. Yes, sir, I would rather that the law as it is adopted in those counties should be the law of the State, than that there should be any exception. Sir, we are one people from the Ohio to Lake Michigan; and we should have but one system; and I am willing, rather than have any exception in regard to this matter, that the Legislature should say they will pass no other laws in reference to township business, but that they would consider the law as it exists in the counties of Adams, and Wells, and Dearborn, and Ohio, and Switzerland, as the law of the whole State. Let them tell the Legislature that this system has worked well, and they will perhaps extend it all over the State. Sir, if local legislation is to be preserved in regard to township matters, the same kind of argument would apply to everything else. Now that is the whole error—the whole incongruity—the whole oppression of our law, and almost the whole necessity of calling this Convention, was to do away with this local legislation. I would much rather say that the lex loci of any particular township or county should be the law of the whole State, than to vote for making any exception north or south. All that is most necessary is to have uniformity in our laws.

Mr. HOLMAN. As has been remarked by the gentleman from Switzerland, the townships of Dearborn county were incorporated by an act of the Legislature. That system has been extended to the county of Switzerland—the county of Ohio still retaining their original township organization when separated from Dearborn. Each township being organized under an act of incorporation, with trustees possessed of certain corporate powers, it is not possible that the article incorporated into the Constitution would protect the right heretofore granted to these townships.

Now, sir, I undertake to say that in the counties in which this system has prevailed, if there was a reasonable probability of that system being hereafter repealed by legislative enactment, it would militate more in those counties against the adoption of the new Constitution than any other provision that could be incorporated in it.

Mr. PETTIT. Well, that is easily avoided. If the system is such a good one, extend it at once over the whole State.

Mr. HOLMAN. It never will be extended over the whole State. The question has been repeatedly before the Legislature, and no other county (excepting the two northern counties which have been named) has adopted the policy. Our people are attached to it; and I do not see how the county of Tippecanoe can in any way have suffered from the mode in which we have done our township or county business. And so long as the people are attached to it, let me ask who is injured by it? Why, sir, it appears to me to be tyrannical to say that the people in their primary organization shall not control their own matters as may seem good to them. I am satisfied, Mr. President, that if we carry this matter to the extent proposed by the gentleman from Tippecanoe, instead of enlarging the arena of liberty, we shall but limit, and curb, and bridle the exercise of the powers of the people—a thing which they by no means sent us here to do. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLFE. I am not at all satisfied with the section in the way it is about to pass. If we pass this section as reported, and infringe on all the rights of townships, I think we shall do more harm by it, than by anything we have done since the Convention met. I contend, Mr. President, that we are going too far in regard to this matter—that we are restricting the people entirely too much. The gentleman from Tippecanoe seems to think that what suits one county must necessarily suit another.

Mr. PETTIT. I give up mine. All I ask for is uniformity.

Mr. WOLFE. Sir, it is impossible to have uniformity in these matters. It will not suit the people. Now in my county we have large levees, which are necessary to be kept up for the purpose of keeping the water from overflowing the land. How are you going to protect these, if you have uniformity in your township taxation? In one township a slight amount of labor will do all that is necessary in keeping the roads in repair, while in another, it may cost an amount of tax equal to fifteen cents on every hundred dollars worth of property. Sir, you might just as well come upon my farm and tell me that in all my operations I shall do just exactly as another individual does; that when he cuts his grass, I shall cut mine too; and that when he draws his corn, I shall draw mine also. [Laughter and applause.]

Sir, I want to have some liberty left to the people. The way that we are going on here is just like tying a man up hand and foot, and throwing him into the water, and then civilly telling him to swim for his life. [Applause.]

Mr. WATTS. I know that the gentleman from Tippecanoe is of too generous a nature to throw obstacles in the way of the people of any township, unless there can be some reason either on the part of himself or his constituents, or of the people in some other portion of the State. If he can show that the privileges we have enjoyed in a portion of the counties for nearly thirty years, have injured any other portion of the State, then most assuredly that would be a good reason for withholding these privileges hereafter. Let me tell that gentleman that in 1825, when this law was enacted allowing Dearborn county to organize its townships under the present system, I was a representative from that county, and assisted in framing the first law that was passed on this subject. It was first presented to the Legislature as a general law; but we ascertained that the people of Indiana, then as now, were some of them from North Carolina, some of them from Kentucky, some from Tennessee, some from Pennsylvania, and some from Massachusetts and other States; and they all had their peculiar method of doing county and township business, and the Legislature consented to allow us because we desired it, to try the experiment and to organize our townships in the manner we then proposed. Since that time we have practiced the same system; and I believe there is no portion of the people of any other county, which has enjoyed these privileges, willing to surrender them. Why then prevent us from enjoying them, if they do nobody else any damage! I hope that gentlemen will be generous enough to leave our township laws alone where we carry them out without interfering with any other interests.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. I do not like, Mr. President, to move the previous question, but it really appears to me that this matter has been sufficiently debated, and I feel under the necessity of calling it.

The motion for the call of the previous question was sustained on a division—ayes 50, noes 40.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

And the question being first on the amendment of the gentleman from Switzerland it was decided in the negative—ayes 40, noes 59.

The question then recurred on ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was decided in the affirmative.

MOTION TO RE-CONSIDER.

Mr. LOCKHART. I believe, Mr. President, that a great number of delegates voted under a misunderstanding, this afternoon, on a motion to concur in the report of the committee on the legislative department, recommending a section which had been re-committed, to be laid upon the table. In order that the Convention may have an opportunity of fully understanding the question on which that vote was taken, I move that the vote be re-considered.

Mr. WALPOLE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The reading of the report was called for, and it was again read.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable.

Mr. OWEN. I only wish to say—

The PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot allow the gentleman from Posey to say anything on the subject. The report was concurred in under the operation of the previous question.

The question being taken on the motion to re-consider the vote, and a division being called for, there were—ayes 74, noes 53.

So the motion to re-consider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the report of the committee.

Mr. RARIDEN. I do not desire to make a speech, but—

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order for the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. RARIDEN. Is it not in order to read an article?

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order to read an article. It is not in order to do anything but vote. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee which recommends that the section be laid upon the table.

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken, resulted as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Beeson, Biddle, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Crawford, Crumbacker, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Edmonston, Foley, Garvin, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Helm, Helmer, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Monroe, Read of Clark, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wheeler, Wiley, and Mr. President—57.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Badger, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Bicknell, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Farrow, Fisher, Frisbie, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Warrick, Had-don, Hawkins, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogg, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Kelso, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Sherrod, Sims, Spann, Stevenson, Todd, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Work, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Zenor—69.

So the report of the committee was not concurred in.

Mr. DOBSON. I believe the previous question is now exhausted. Is it in order now to move to amend?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir; it is not in order to amend. The previous question is not exhausted. The question is, Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. PETTIT. The section is certainly open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair believes not. We are under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. DOBSON demanded the yeas and nays. The question was then taken on ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading, and a division being called for, there were—ayes 56, noes 58.

So the section was not ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. WALPOLE. The gentleman from Owen demanded the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear him.

Mr. WALPOLE. I voted with the majority, and I move to re-consider the vote just taken on ordering the section to be engrossed, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RARIDEN. Are we still under the operation of the previous question?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir; as a matter of course.

Mr. MOWRER moved that the Convention adjourn.

The Convention refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken on the motion to re-consider, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 67, nays 58.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on ordering the section to be engrossed.

Mr. DOBSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the engrossment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Bicknell, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Farrow, Fisher, Friable, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Harbott, Hawkins, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Kelso, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Sherrod, Sims, Spann, Stevenson, Todd, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Work, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Zenor—69.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Beeson, Berry, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Crawford, Crumbacker, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Edmonston, Foley, Garvin, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Helm, Helmer, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Nave, Newman, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Shannon, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, and Mr. President—57.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

STATE LIBRARIAN.

The PRESIDENT. The next business in the orders of the day, is article No. 36.

The article was read by the Secretary, as follows:

"There shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State, a State Librarian, whose powers and duties shall be prescribed by law, and who shall hold his office two years, and until his successor be elected and qualified."

Mr. HELMER moved to amend by striking out all after the word "be" in the first line, to the word "State," inclusive, and to insert the following: "appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice of the Senate."

Mr. MATHER moved to lay the section and amendment on the table.

A division of the question was called for, and the question was taken first upon laying the amendment on the table, which was agreed to.

The question being then upon the motion to lay the section on the table, it was decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT. The next business in order is article thirty-seven on its second reading.

The article was read by the Secretary as follows:

"SECTION.—All the revenues derived from the sale of any of the public works belonging to the State, and from the net annual income thereof, and any surplus that may at any time remain in the Treasury derived from taxation for general State purposes, after the payment of the ordinary expenses of the Government, and the interest on bonds of the State, (other than bank bonds,) shall be annually applied, under the direction of the General Assembly, to the payment of the principle of the public debt."

Mr. HALL said, I have been instructed by the standing committee on the State debt and public works, to offer for the consideration of the Convention an additional section. But before doing so, I will lay before the Convention a statement, prepared prior to the fifteenth day of November last, when the above article was presented, together with a report, asserting that our public debt would be paid off within eighteen years, by a continuance of our present rate of taxation. The returns of the taxable and number of polls for the year 1850 had not been fully made to the auditor's office when this estimate was made.

[Basis of report of Committee on the State debt and public works, by Judge Hall Chairman, showing that the entire debt of Indiana will be paid off in sixteen years, or at farthest, in eighteen years.]

It is assumed that the revenue for the years 1850, 1851, and 1852, after paying the ordinary expenses of government and the interest on the State debt, will pay off the balance of our domestic debt, put down November 1849, at two hundred and fifteen thousand five hundred and thirty dollars.

Of the 11,048,000 dollars foreign debt, which the State owed, at the time the arrangement was made with the bond-holders, there had been surrendered in bonds of the State under that arrangement, prior to the first of July 1849, nine millions, three hundred and twenty thousand dollars. One-half of which sum is chargeable to the Wabash and Erie Canal. The other half to the State of Indiana. There remained, then outstanding, one million seven hundred and twenty-eight thousand dollars. It is understood that a portion of that sum has been since surrendered; and that it will all be brought in under the arrangement made with the bond-holders, as no other provisions has been or will likely be made by the State for the liquidation of that debt. When surrendered, one-half of the amount will also be charged to the Wabash and Erie Canal, leaving the other half to be paid by the State.

[N. B. The above does not include the sum of one million three hundred and ninety thousand dollars, which the State nominally owes on which the State Bank pays interest, and is to redeem the principal.]

The State also owes one million six hundred and fifty-six thousand two hundred and seven dollars, which is denominated two and a half per cent. stock, the principal of which is payable at the pleasure of the State, the interest on which commences in the year 1853. As this stock bears but two and a half per cent. interest, it is worth but little more than half as much as the five per cent. stocks. Its market value being a fraction over forty cents to the dollar, while the five per cents. are worth eighty cents to the dollar. In the estimate which follows, for the sake of convenience in making calculation, this debt is put down at one-half of the gross sum, to wit: eight hundred and twenty-eight thousand six hundred and four dollars, and five per cent. interest cast thereon—instead of casting two and a half per cent on the whole sum—which brings about nearly the same result.

On the first of January 1853 our foreign debt may be put down at six millions seven hundred and fifty-two thousand six hundred and four dollars, which is made up of the following items, to wit:

Amount of five per cent. stock issued on bonds surrendered prior to July 1st. 1849, under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly passed on the 19th day of January 1846, and the act amendatory thereto, passed on the 27th day of January 1847. $4,660,000.

Amount of bonds outstanding on the 1st. of July 1849, $1,728,000. But as these bonds will undoubtedly be surrendered under the provisions of the acts above referred to, and, when surrendered one-half thereof will be chargeable to the Wabash and Erie Canal, and the other half will be chargeable to the State of Indiana, amounting to 864,000

Probable amount of interest on these bonds chargeable to the State.

400,000

Amount of two and a half per cent. stock $1,656,207, the market value of which is equal to, say 828,604 dollars of five per cent. stock.

828,604

Making $6,752,604

The interest on this debt for the year 1853 will amount to the sum of three hundred and thirty seven thousand six hundred and thirty dollars.

Assuming that a re-valuation of the taxable property of this State will be provided for by the Legislature in the year 1851, or at farthest by the year 1852, it will be a safe calculation to put down the total valuation of taxable property for the year 1853, at two hundred millions of dollars. And it will be equally safe, to fix the number of taxable polls for 1853, at one hundred and seventy-three thousand seven hundred and twenty.

The taxable property for the year 1849 exceeded that of 1848, nearly four and a half million of dollars. It is conceived that it will be a low estimate, to fix the annual increase of taxables, after the year 1853 at five million of dollars, which is a little more than three and a half per cent. per annum.

The polls of 1849 exceeded the number for 1848, seven thousand four hundred and fifty-five—it will be fair to estimate the annual increase (at least for a number of years to come) equal to that of 1849 over 1848.

The State will receive in dividends from the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company, commencing in the year 1853, at least fifty thousand dollars—some think seventy-five thousand dollars.

There will be paid into the State Treasury, annually, until the year 1857, on account of tax on individual bank stock about five thousand dollars.

The following calculations are based upon the foregoing data, and upon the assumption that the existing rate of taxation, (to which the faith of the State is pledged,) that twenty-five cents on each one hundred dollars worth of taxable property, and seventy-five cents on each poll, will be continued, until the State debt shall be finally paid. It may then be reduced more than fifty per cent.

The plan proposed for paying off the State debt, is, to apply the surplus remaining in the State Treasury, after paying the ordinary expenses of government, and the interest on the State debt, to buying up our outstanding bonds, or stocks, at their market value. This will annually lessen the amount of interest to be paid, and consequently, annually increase the sum to be applied to the payment of the principal.

The Domestic debt being provided for as before stated.

The Foreign debt may be put down on the 1st of January, 1853, at.....

Valuation of taxable property for 1853..... $200,000,000
No. of polls for 1853 173,720
25 cts. on the $100 taxable amounts to..... $500,000
75 cts. on each poll..... 130,290
Tax on individual bank stock 5,000
Dividends on the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad stock..... 50,000

$6,752,604

$685,290

N. B. The ordinary expenses of the government have hitherto been fixed at about $75,000 per annum, and it is thought that biennial sessions of the Legislature may lessen the expenses. However, to be safe in the calculations here made, the ordinary expenses of Government are put down at $90,000 per annum until the year 1861, when they are placed at $100,000.

Ordinary expenses of Government..... $90,000
Cost of Collecting... 33,000
Delinquencies..... 40,000

163,000

Interest on public debt for 1853

522,290

337,632

This sum, to-wit, $184,658, appropriated to the purchasing of State stocks, will buy up at the rate of 80 cts to the dollar this am't

$184,658

230,822

$6,521,782

Amount of State debt on the 1st of Jan., 1854..... $6,521,782

Valuation of taxable property for 1854..... $203,000,000

No. of polls 1854 181,175

25 cts. on the $100 taxables, amounts to..... $512,500

75 cts. on each poll..... 135,881

Tax on individual B'n'k Stock 5,000

Dividend on the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Stock 50,000

50,000

$703,331

Deduct ordinary expenses of Government..... $90,000

Cost of Collecting... 34,000

Delinquencies..... 42,000

166,000

537,381

326,089

Interest on public debt for 1854

$211,292

This sum, to-wit: $211,292, appropriated to the purchasing of State Stock, will buy up, at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar, this am't

264,115

$6,257,667

Amount of State debt on the 1st of Jan., 1855..... $6,257,667

Valuation of taxable property for 1855..... $210,000,000

No. of polls 1855 188,630

25 cts. on the $100 taxables amounts to..... $525,000

75 cts. on each poll..... 141,472

Tax on individual B'n'k Stock 5,000

Dividends on the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Stock 50,000

50,000

$712,472

Deduct ordinary expenses of Government..... $90,000

Cost of Collecting... 35,000

Delinquencies..... 44,000

969,000

$552,472

Interest on public debt for 1855

312,883

$239,589

This sum, to-wit: $239,589, appropriated to the purchasing of State Stocks, at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar, will buy up.....

299,486

$5,958,181

Amount of State debt on the 1st of Jan., 1856..... $5,958,181

Valuation of taxable property for 1856..... $215,000,000

No. of polls 1856 196,083

25 cts. on the $100 taxables amounts to..... $537,500

75 cts. on each poll..... 147,063

Tax on Bank Stock..... 5,000

Dividends on the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Stock 50,000

50,000

$739,563

Deduct ordinary expenses of Government..... $90,000

Cost of Collecting... 37,000

Delinquencies..... 47,000

174,000

$565,563

Interest on public debt for 1856

297,909

$267,654

This sum, to-wit: $267,654, appropriated to the purchasing of State Stock, at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar, will buy up.....

334,567

$5,623,614

Amount of State debt on the 1st of Jan., 1857..... $5,623,614

Valuation of taxable property for 1857..... $220,000,000

No. of polls 1857 205,040

25 cts. on the $100 taxables amounts to..... $550,000

75 cts. on each poll..... 152,655

Tax on Bank Stock..... 5,000

Dividend on the Stock in the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad..... 50,000

50,000

$757,655

Deduct ordinary expenses of
Government..... $90,000
Cost of Collecting... 39,000
Delinquencies..... 50,000

179,000

$578,655

Interest on public debt for 1857

281,180

$297,475

This sum, to-wit: $297,475,
appropriated to buying up
State Stock, at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar, will purchase

371,843

$5,251,771

Amount of State debt on the 1st Jan., 1858..... $5,251,771

Valuation of taxable property
for 1858..... $225,000,000

No. of polls 1858 210,995

25 cts. on the $100 taxables, $562,500

75 cts. on each poll..... 158,246

Dividends on Stocks in the Madison and Indianapolis
Railroad 50,000

$770,746

Deduct ordinary expenses of
Government..... $90,000
Cost of Collecting.... 41,000
Delinquencies..... 52,000

183,000

$587,746

Interest on public debt
for 1858.....

262,588

$325,153

This sum, to-wit: $325,153,
appropriated to buying up
State Stock at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar will purchase

406,447

$4,865,324

Amount of State debt on the 1st of Jan., 1859..... $4,845,324

A revaluation of the taxable property of this State will probably be had in 1858, which will increase the value of taxables from twenty-five to fifty millions. That amount is assumed in this estimate.

Valuation of taxable property
for 1859..... $250,000,000

No. of polls 1859 218,450

25 cts. on the $100 taxables, $625,000

75 cts on each poll..... 63,837

Dividend on Stock in the
Madison and Indianapolis
Railroad..... 50,000

$838,837

Deduct ordinary expenses of
Government..... $90,000

Cost of Collecting.. 45,000

Delinquencies..... 55,000

190,000

648,837

Interest on public debt for 1859

242,266

$406,571

This sum, to-wit: $406,571,
appropriated to buying up
State Stock at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar, will purchase

508,213

$4,337,111

Amount of State debt on the 1st of Jan., 1860..... $4,337,111

Valuation of taxable property
for 1860..... $255,000,000

No. of polls 1860 225,905

25 cts. on the $100 taxables, $637,500

75 cts. on each poll..... 169,428

Dividend on stock in the
Madison and Indianapolis
Railroad..... 50,000

50,000

$856,928

Deduct ordinary expenses of
Government..... $90,000

Cost of Collecting... 46,000

Delinquencies..... 57,000

193,000

663,928

Interest on public debt for 1860

216,855

$447,073

This sum, to-wit: $447,073,
appropriated to buying up
State Stock at the rate of 80 cents to the dollar, will purchase

558,841

$3,778,270

Amount of State debt on the 1st of Jan., 1861..... $3,778,270

Valuation of taxable property
for 1861..... $260,000,000

No. of polls.... 233,360

25 cts. on the $100 taxables, $650,000

75 cts. on each poll..... 175,020

Dividend on Stock in the
Madison and Indianapolis
Railroad 50,000

50,000

$875,020

Deduct ordinary expenses of
Government..... $100,000

Cost of collecting... 48,000

Delinquencies..... 60,000

208,000

667,020

Interest on public debt for 1861

188,913

$478,107

This sum, to-wit: $478,107,
appropriated to buying up
State Stock at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar, will purchase

597,633

$3,180,637

Amount of State debt on the 1st of January, 1862..... $3,180,637

Valuation of taxable property
for 1862..... $265,000,000

No. of polls for 1862, 240,815

25 cts. on the $100 taxables, $662,500

75 " on each poll..... 180,611

Dividend on stock in Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company,

50,000

$893,111

Deduct ordinary expenses of Government.....	$100,000
Cost of collecting.....	50,000
Delinquencies.....	62,000	212,000

	681,111
Int. on public debt, for 1862, ..	159,031
		$522,080

This sum, to wit: $522,080, appropriated to buying up State Stock, at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar, will purchase

652,500

$2,528,037

Amount of State debt on the 1st of January, 1863.....	$2,528,037
Valuation of taxable property for 1863.....	$270,000,000
No. of polls for 1863, 248,270
25 cts. on the $100 taxables...	$675,000
75 cts. on each poll.....	186,202
Dividend on stock in Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company	50,000
	911,202

Deduct ordinary expenses of Government	$100,000
Cost of collecting.....	52,000
Delinquencies.....	64,000
	216,000
	695,202
Int. on public debt, for 1863..	126,401
	$568,801

This sum, to wit: $568,801, appropriated to the purchasing of State stock, at the rate of 80 cts to the dollar, will purchase

711,001

$1,817,036

Amount of State debt on the 1st of January, 1864.....	$1,817,036
Valuation of taxable property for 1864.....	$275,000,000
No. of polls for 1864, 255,725
25 cts. on the $100 taxables,	$687,500
75 cts. on each poll.....	191,793
Dividend on stock in Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company.....	50,000
	929,293

Deduct ordinary expenses of Government	$100,000
Cost of collecting.....	54,000
Delinquencies.....	66,000
	220,000
	709,293
Int. on State debt, for 1864..	90,851
	$618,442

This sum, to wit: $618,442, appropriated to buying up State stock, at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar, will purchase

773,052

$1,043,934

Amount of State debt on the 1st of January, 1865.....	$1,043,934
Valuation of taxable property for 1865.....	$280,000,000
No. of polls for 1865 263,180
25 cts. on the $100 taxables,	$700,000
75 cts. on each poll.....	197,384

Dividend on stock in Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company.....	50,000
	$947,384

Deduct ordinary expenses of Government	$100,000
Cost of collecting.....	56,000
Delinquencies	68,000
	224,000
	723,384

Int. on State debt, for 1865...	53,199
	$671,185

This sum, to wit: $671,185, appropriated to buying up stock, at the rate of 80 cts. to the dollar, will purchase

838,981

$205,093

According to this calculation, the entire State debt will be paid off in the year 1866.

If the State stocks should even be estimated at ninety cents to the dollar, (a sum altogether above their present market value,) even then the revenue of 1868 will pay off the entire balance of our public debt.

It may be added that if the General Assembly shall continue the present rate of taxation for benevolent purposes, there will be a surplus arising from that source, which may be applied to the payment of our State debt.

It is not pretended that the sums and dates used in this calculation are correct, to a fraction. But it is believed that, for all practical purposes, they are so nearly correct as to justify in the main, the conclusions arrived at.

It may be urged that, as the outstanding bonds of the State shall be reduced in amount, their market value will advance. But this will not be the case. These bonds, after twenty years from date, are payable at the pleasure of the State. So long as the State pays the interest thereon, the principal never becomes due. The value of them will always depend on the amount of the dividends they yield, or rather the interest paid thereon. And so long as money is worth six per cent. interest, the utmost extent of the value of these bonds will be a fraction over eighty-three cents to the dollar. If money shall become so abundant as not to be worth six per cent. interest, then the value of those stocks will be enhanced. But, on the other hand, if money shall become scarce, and demand more than six per cent., then their market value will be reduced.

Indiana is indebted for the arrangement, by means of which her indebtedness will ultimately be paid off, to Charles Butler, Esq., of the city of New York, aided and assisted, as he was, by several distinguished citizens of our own State. Before that arrangement was made, our prospects were gloomy in the extreme. Indiana had, in fact, practically repudiated her foreign debt—not from choice, but from necessity—her utter inability to meet her engagements. To have levied a tax on her citizens to raise a sum sufficiently large to pay the annual interest on the enormous debt then hanging over her, would have been more than her citizens could have borne. In consequence of the non-payment of interest, the debt against the State was increasing over a half a million of dollars per annum. At that dark hour of her existence, the plan that was ultimately agreed upon, was concocted, and the honor and credit of the State thereby saved; and, at the same time, the interest of our creditors was secured by the transfer to them of a public work, (the Wabash and Erie Canal,) which, in the course of time, it is hoped and believed, will amply remunerate them to the utmost extent of their claims.

Indiana is now flourishing far beyond the most sanguine hopes then entertained by her most zealous friends. With a redeemed credit as a State, and a happy, industrious, and enterprising people, she occupies a high position with her sister States, and is destined, in a few years, to rank in population, as the fourth State in the Union.

The concession which was so promptly made by our creditors to the embarrassments and weakness of the State, in accepting the terms of the compromise, and from which such beneficial results have flowed, will ever be appreciated by the citizens of the State; and while realizing its benefits and blessings, in a redeemed credit, and a solid prosperity, they will protect that credit henceforth with sacred regard to the pledged faith and honor of the State, and by the application of the taxes supplied by the people, pay off the debt at the earliest practical period.

Mr. HALL then offered the following additional section:

"The faith of the State being pledged for the payment of all its existing indebtedness, in order to provide therefor, the present rate of taxation, to wit: twenty-five cents on each hundred dollars of taxable property in this State, and seventy-five cents on each poll, subject, by the existing laws, to taxation, shall be continued until such indebtedness shall be fully discharged."

Mr. SPANN. This appears to me to be a matter particularly appertaining to legislation; for it strikes me that this Convention has no control over the revenues of the country; for I cannot see how we could, by any section, of whatever nature it might be, control them. The only thing that is proposed by this additional section, is to pledge the faith of the State of Indiana for the redemption of the bonds. That, sir, has already been done; and the faith of the State being once pledged, it is as much pledged as it can be by a repetition of that pledge in our new Constitution. This is a matter which most fitly belongs to the Legislature, and I do trust the Convention will not take it in hand. The explanation of the gentlemen from Gibson only goes to show that the taxation now levied should continue to be levied for eighteen or twenty years. This, in my opinion, would be a most extraordinary step, and I think it would be quite proper to lay the section on the table, or to make some other summary disposition of it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "seventy-five cents on each poll." As I wish to reply to the remarks offered by the gentleman from Gibson, (Mr. Hall,) and as it is now the usual hour for adjournment, I move that the Convention adjourn.

The question being taken, the Convention refused to adjourn.

Mr. GRAHAM (proceeding) said: It must be obvious to every gentleman in this Convention, on a moment's reflection, that injustice will be done to the people of Indiana, if the latter part of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Gibson should be adopted. It is neither more nor less than this: It says that every citizen of Indiana, no matter what may be his circumstances in life, shall be taxed in an equal amount, for the payment of the debt of the State. This, sir, will operate very injuriously upon the poor citizen. We all have an interest in the wealth and prosperity of the State; and when the State is involved in debt, we should tax the property of the State to pay that debt, and not the citizens themselves.

Now, sir, by this proposition, a man, however poor, however hard run, however indifferent his circumstances may be, is called upon, in addition to his ordinary taxation, to pay the annual sum of seventy-five cents, for the liquidation of the State debt. I trust no such proposition will be incorporated in the Constitution. As, however, the Convention are tired of speaking, and as I have but little to say, feeling that the amendment has merits in itself, I will say no more, but submit it to the consideration of the Convention.

Mr. KELSO. I want to inquire whether the proposition last submitted proposes to double the present poll tax?

The PRESIDENT. The proposition of the gentleman from Gibson proposes to continue the present rate.

Mr. BASCOM. I move to lay the additional section and the amendment on the table.

The question being taken, the motion was decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. HALL. I think the Convention has not voted in the way they intended to vote, by laying the additional section on the table. They will see that the faith of the State is pledged, by an arrangement with the stock-holders, to pay a tax of twenty-five cents on every hundred dollars of property, and seventy-five cents poll tax; and this pledge having been given, it should be continued, until the debts of the State are paid off.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark to the gentleman from Gibson, that the amendments are not now before the Convention.

Mr. HALL. Then I hope that some gentleman will move to re-consider the vote.

Mr. SMITH of Scott moved to lay the section on the table.

Mr. HALL demanded the yeas and nays.

Before the yeas and nays were ordered,

On motion, by Mr. DUNN of Jefferson,

The Convention adjourned.

SPEECH OF MR. ROBINSON,

On the subject of Banking, delivered Wednesday morning, January 8, 1851.

It is with a great deal of diffidence, Mr. President, that I attempt to say anything upon this subject. I had intended, when this discussion was first entered into, to have been only a silent listener to it, and I would not now take part in it, were it not that an institution that I believe called for by the country—that has given to the people a sound currency and a circulating medium—on which they have and I believe can safely rely—was in danger of being put down. I am not, sir, a practical banker; I know but little of the manner in which they should be managed. So far as concerns the practical operations, however, I know that the wants of the community demand that we should have a paper currency—something that is the representative of specie. That such a circulating medium is indispensable and cannot be done without, is a question, I think, that is not susceptible of discussion. I know it has been said, and I know that gentlemen on this floor have assumed the ground, that banks should not exist, and that gold and silver is the only currency that should be in circulation. Sir, the idea that a specie currency can subserve the wants of the people at this enlightened and commercial age, certainly to my mind is a very absurd and unsound one.

I, sir, am a State Bank man. I am in favor of the present State Bank, with some modifications; but if I have to choose between the present State Bank as it is, and the free banks which it is now attempted to be thrust upon us, rotten, too, as I believe them to be, I am for the State Bank as it is. I would rather have no banks than those banks on which the country could not rely, and which would furnish a sound currency. Sir, we are compelled to have a currency that is the representative of gold and silver, and the question to be decided by this Convention is, what kind of a currency shall we have? The wants of the people demand that we should have a currency on which to rely, and the question presents itself between the currency afforded by the State Bank as it is, and the currency that will be afforded by the free banks, if they go into operation as their friends propose. I contend that there is no feature in the operations of the State Bank which gives it more credit than the name, State Bank of Indiana; the fact that the State has an interest in the bank gives to her paper a credit and a stability which would not otherwise exist. There is a charm in the very name of State Bank; the fact that the State Bank of Indiana is a bank in which the people have an interest, and the State government also, and that its bills are endorsed by the State, gives to its currency a stability which nothing else can give; it attaches to its circulation a confidence which will make its paper current at home and abroad, and thereby make the institution useful; and, sir, I now venture the assertion, if bills issued by free banks find their way into circulation, there would not be a delegate on this floor who would not select the bills issued by the State Bank in preference to the bills of the most safe free bank in existence. Why is this? Inquire into the reasons of it! It is because the word State Bank is there; because the credit of the State is attached to it. I know there was a time when a party war was made upon the U. S. Bank—when it was said that it was not a solvent institution. I know there was a time when the doctrine was preached, that State banks were the only banks connected with the interests of the people—that the United States Bank was unsafe, and ought to go down. One thing I found, however, by experience, and that was, at the time this very tirade was raised against the U. S. Bank—when it was spoken of as insolvent, and unable to pay the demands against it—there was not a man who made those charges who would not have taken her paper in preference to any other paper in circulation. It was the name of being connected with the General Government that gave that bank influence and credit, and gave currency to its paper and confidence to its issues; and I believe that the only way to give stability to your currency is to have it regulated by a State bank, which the State and the people have a pride in sustaining, and which, if properly regulated, will furnish a paper currency that can be relied upon by the community, and will meet the wants of the people in regard to their agricultural and commercial operations.

But I have been told out of doors, and it has been said on this floor, that no man who is a friend of the State Bank has attempted to defend her, and that she cannot be defended—that her conduct has rendered her defenseless. Now, sir, I have only to say, in reply to this, that I am one of those who have attempted to defend her, and will continue to do so; and I believe she can be defended successfully, and that it can be clearly proven that the State Bank furnishes a better system of currency to the people than can be furnished by any other system of banking that can be adopted by this Convention, at least on the free bank plan.

In the first place, I say, in defense of the management of the State Bank, that from the very moment its charter was granted, and it sprang into existence as a bank, up to the present day, it has had to contend against the greatest difficulties of which we can conceive, owing to the pecuniary embarrassments under which the State has had to suffer since the explosion of the internal improvement system; yet, sir, except a short suspension, she has been prompt, and met her engagements without default. The State Bank was not chartered by a party vote—it was not, at the time, a party measure; it came into existence at the time the U. S. Bank went down, when all parties, whigs and democrats alike, stood shoulder to shoulder, and united their efforts in securing something to supply the loss of their circulating medium, occasioned by the withdrawal of the paper of the bank of the United States. They then hit upon the expedient of a State Bank, gave her a charter, and she went into existence.

Now, I ask delegates under what circumstances the State Bank went into existence. It is well known that she went into existence at the darkest time in the pecuniary affairs of the State. It was a time when general distress was pervading the country—when the agriculturist and the trader were alike suffering for want of a more extended and stable circulating medium. What have we experienced under the administration of that bank? It took but a short time for it to furnish to the country, a circulating medium, and it was not long before that medium entered into all the avenues of trade and commerce. The farmer obtained a market and money, or at least current paper, for his wheat and pork, and the trader the money due him for his goods, and the consequence has been, Indiana stands forth redeemed and prosperous—rising in point of wealth and increasing in greatness almost beyond conception. Sir, where has she got her means if not from the State Bank System? Will it be pretended by any delegate here, that she has drawn them from the mines of California?—that it has been a gold and silver currency that has enabled her people to raise from the state of embarrassment, want, poverty, and suffering, and above all the difficulties that then surrounded them, until prosperity crowned the efforts of the farmer and the merchant every where? Where, then, has the means come from? Certainly, sir, from the State Bank of Indiana and its branches, and other States in the Union. How does it operate? I know how it operates in many sections of the country, and from experience and observation, I am satisfied that the farmer has a deep and abiding interest in banks, and in the soundness of their circulation—he cannot get along without them.

The farmer who raises wheat, corn, oats, and other products, would have his crop rot upon his hands unless he finds a market for his produce where he can dispose of it and convert it into money. There must be a circulating medium in order that he may receive pay for his labors. How have other State Banks operated? The traders and those who wish to buy up the products of the country and the stock of the farmer have went to those banks—I mean, sir, the branches of the State Bank—for the money wherewith they have bought up much of the products of our State, and the products of our farms, much, sir, to their accommodation and the general good. Withdraw from circulation, then, the paper of the bank now filling up every avenue of trade and commerce in your State, and in place of a people prosperous and happy, the State of Indiana would be involved in general distress and ruin. One of the most serious evils that ever fell upon a commercial and agricultural people, would follow in the wake of a withdrawal of bills of the bank now in circulation, representing as they do, gold and silver. It is admitted, sir, that we must have a currency.

I hear in this Convention, many objections to the State Bank of Indiana, and hear many charges made against the bank, and it is much easier to make charges, Mr. President, than to substantiate them, and those gentlemen who have made charges here, have not followed the legal mode of proving them. I have always understood the rule of jurisprudence was that on him who makes the charge rests the burden of proof. Since this discussion has been going on, I have heard the State Bank of Indiana charged with being corrupt, insolvent, fraudulent, and unworthy of credit. But the proof of these charges is yet to be found, and I ask every member who is willing to come forward with such charges, if it is not fair at least to require them to bring with them evidence of the facts which they allege as existing in the management of the State Bank, or abandon them.

I propose for a few moments, to consider what I lay down to be incontrovertible and undeniable in the history of the bank, that there never was a State Bank went into existence whose charter was better drawn and more completely calculated to guard the rights of the citizen and the rights of the community, than is the present State Bank. And, sir, I desire in this connection, to refer to one or two provisions in the charter to support the truth of this assertion and show that the complaints are not well founded, and, sir, I think I hazard nothing in saying that since the State Bank has existed in Indiana, it has been the business of the Legislature to lay new burdens upon it, instead of lightening the weight it has had to carry in sustaining itself. It has been made to carry the pecuniary burthens of the State, and to aid and assist the State in her darkest hour of the embarrassment brought on by the system of internal improvement. It is said, however, that the State Bank is a monopoly fraught with mischief and, therefore, ought to go down. Sir, I cannot concede the truth of this argument. By the fifth section of her charter, it will be found that she is subject to the claim of the most humble individual—that the most humble citizen having a claim against the bank, may bring suit against her, whenever she fails to meet her engagements or fails to comply with her contracts, and, sir, any individual, if they have just cause, may bring suit against it. It is just as amenable to the laws of this country, as any delegate on this floor, and as much bound by the courts of justice. This section contains a further clause, which appears to be very objectionable to some gentlemen, and that is it authorizes her to deal in bills of exchange. Surely, sir, there is no reason why a privilege should be allowed to a private individual, which in principle ought not to hold good with corporations. Sir, why not allow them in their corporate capacity, all the privileges you allow a private citizen, and no more. If this principle is true, then this provision which confers upon the bank the privilege conferred upon individuals, is neither dangerous nor unsound. Will gentlemen who oppose this provision tell me where there is a law in existence which prevents the citizen from dealing in bills of exchange, or buying promissory notes at their value real or supposed? You cannot find such a law, and yet this is one of the grounds of hostility to the bank and its existence. Sir, such objections are without satisfactory foundation, either in theory or practice.

But we are told the bank is a monopoly, and will accumulate power and property to itself—that it will become a large property holder, and wield an improper influence. Now, sir, by the sixth section of the charter there are restrictions imposed upon the bank which will prevent it from becoming a monopoly so far as accumulating property and becoming a large property holder, and thus exercising an improper influence, as some gentlemen have predicted. The right to hold real estate by a corporation, and dispose of the same, is a power looked upon by all governments as one to be feared as a monopoly. But no such danger can exist in regard to the bank. By the sixth section of the charter of the bank it is provided that the bank shall only be allowed to hold real estate for certain specific purposes that would not be denied to an individual, and which are inseparably connected with the interests of the bank, to enable her to prosecute and carry on her business. She is allowed to hold property in real estate in the following manner, and for the following purposes: the houses in which she banks; and, also, to hold property on mortgage for money loaned on promissory notes, or otherwise to secure what is due her. She has, also, the liberty to take and hold property given to her in discharge of a debt that is justly due her, and to purchase, in property, where the same is sold on judgments due the bank. Here, then, are no privileges but such as the citizen can claim. He may own the house in which he transacts and does his business, or he may take, in payment of the debts due him, real estate or any other security, or he may loan money on bond and mortgage. I see no privilege conferred upon the bank in relation to property that carries with it, in any way, any thing unfair or unsafe. She may hold real estate when she obtains it by purchase at a judicial sale, for her own debts which might otherwise be lost, or in any way in which her rights are at stake, but the section concludes with placing the bank under a certain obligation—such, too, as will forever prevent her acquiring any powers of a monopoly in real estate—and that is, that real estate thus acquired shall be put in market and offered for sale once a year, thus guarding against the accumulation of real estate.

There is another feature in this charter which goes a great way to sustain the right of the citizen; it is that contained in the eighth section. It must forever put the citizen on safe ground with the bank. It was put there to guard the interests of the people, and it does protect them, and guard their rights, in my estimation, most effectually.

What, sir, is the reading of the eighth section of this bank charter, which it is now attempted to cry down, and have supplanted with the New York system of banking, untried, as yet, in this part of the Union. It is provided that whenever a citizen of Indiana has a bill on the bank, and presents it at the counter of the bank, and it refuses to cash it, he can recover his money and obtain twelve per cent. for every hour that payment is refused, thus compelling the bank, by interest, to be prompt. Gentlemen talk about selling bills of exchange, and call the bank an odious monster, for loaning money at ten per cent., and yet, the very moment she fails to redeem her paper, you compel her to pay her billholders twelve per cent. This, sir, seems to be only viewing one side of the question, making that a crime in the bank which you allow a private individual to practice with impunity. But, sir, these kind of feelings grow out of a desire to speculate, and unite that speculation with the New York free bankers, and the Rothschild of England.

Another feature in this charter—and I would like to know if such a feature can be inserted in the charter of any of these beautiful birds of passage called free banks—is a feature which, in times gone by, and which, in times to come, will keep the State Bank of Indiana solvent; that is the feature of mutual liability and interest. It is a feature I admire, that every branch of the State Bank is mutually bound for each other. I care not what their losses may be, they are mutually bound to stand by each other; they stand as a unit or fall as a unit. If there is a branch that fails to meet the demands upon her the balance of the branches step in between the failure and the people, and redeem every dollar of her paper, or if there is a failure they all fail together. There is another feature in the charter of this great monster monopoly, as it is called, which I very much fear would be greatly depreciated by the free banks. It is a feature drawn in favor of the citizen. It is the facility with which the citizen can compel the bank to meet her engagements, by sale of her property without valuation. You have extended to your citizens since 1840, the right to stay laws, and the right to the benefits of the appraisement laws, and they have the right and privilege to put these laws into immediate operation, and claim these benefits when sued by the bank, when the bank cannot collect her debts unless under peculiar circumstances, without giving to the citizen the benefit of the relief laws, though it may operate on the bank in the most deleterious manner. There is also an obligation imposed on her by the twelfth section of the charter which operates harshly on the bank, and much in favor of the citizen of Indiana. If a citizen sues the bank and recovers a judgment, she must submit to a sale of her property without the benefit of the stay law, while the citizen, on his debt due the bank, is allowed a stay of six months, in some instances, and, sir, in all instances the length allowed by law.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would inform the gentleman from Decatur that his half hour has expired.

Mr. COOKERLY. In order that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed with his argument, I move that the rules be suspended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. PRESIDENT: I do not design abusing the courtesy which the Convention has conferred upon me; and I shall occupy their time but a little while longer. Restrictions have been thrown around this institution which have never been violated. Sir, since the granting of the charter, she has always redeemed her notes in specie, only on one occasion, when she was permitted to suspend, from the necessity of the times, and I would here say that I look upon the charges which have been brought to bear against this bank, without any proof to sustain them, as a craven and cowardly attack upon the institution. Our Legislature, sir, has its duty to perform in this matter. The bank is bound to report the yearly proceedings of its business and accounts every year, to the Legislature; and if it has been receiving the interests of the State, pecuniarily, I ask gentlemen why they have not called upon their legislators to investigate and examine into its conduct, and if it were found dishonest and corrupt, compel the Legislature, as they would be bound to do, by joint resolution of the two houses, to put an end to its existence. If the bank is violating any of the principles of its charter, I ask gentlemen why they do not call upon the Legislature to attend to its duty in the premises. Cause ascire facias to issue according to her charter, and wind her up, and seize her franchises into the hands of the State. It is evident, sir, that gentlemen are only indulging in declamation, not in the relation of facts, as they connect themselves with the history of the bank. The books of the institution are open at any time, to the inspection of an examining agent, and if its business affairs are in confusion and embarrassment, its business can be wound up by the proper officers and legislators of State.

Sir, to talk about free banking—and that the system will be open to all, is perfectly ridiculous; for, unless the Legislature chartering these banks, can furnish the poor man with funds, and means on which to bank, how, sir, I ask, can he become a banker?—it is idle thus to talk; it may sound well in theory, but it must and will fail in practice. It must turn out to be a mere humbug, an idle tale—a mere whim of the brain, amounting to nothing but visionary notions of things that cannot exist.

There is another restriction in this charter of which I will speak briefly. We are told here and out of doors, that the officers of this bank are at this time corrupt, and not making true reports, and that the bank, if the truth were known, would be found to be insolvent. Now, there is an antidote to this evil, if it were true, to be found in the one hundredth section of the charter. If the officers are corrupt, the very moment that corruption is made tangible, brought to light, exposed, made known, and the light of day falls upon it, and it is shown that any officer is making false reports, it becomes a felony, and they are liable to be incarcerated in the penitentiary for their infidelity and unfaithful conduct. The truth of it is, sir, all these charges originate, in my opinion, in a desire to break down this State Bank of Indiana; and I believe, if we could get at the truth of the matter, it would be found that a good many capitalists care not so much for the interests of the people, in declaiming against the State Bank, as they do about lining their own pockets with the fruits and speculations by them anticipated in the process of free banking.

There are other restrictions imposed upon the State Bank, which I think free banks would not submit to very readily, or at least very cordially, which is of profit to the people. One of them is, that the Legislature levies a tax on the stockholders, and upon the profits of their dividends, which goes towards the expenses of government, and aids the State in bearing the burden imposed upon it by the internal improvement system of taxation. If there is a private bank—er here from New York, or elsewhere, who would be willing to pay this taxation, I would like to know it. I, sir, would like to hear from him an open avowal of his liberality.

But the Legislature did, at a certain time and on a certain occasion, grant to the bank a privilege much talked of by some, and who, on that account, raise objections to the bank, to wit: the privilege of issuing small notes and circulating them—notes of a less denomination than five dollars. This privilege was granted for the good of the bank, and the people and the Legislature, in granting it, provided for a tax of one per cent., to be paid by the bank as a bonus for this privilege, and the fund thus raised went to assist in furnishing means to pay off the taxes of the State government. Permit me here in this connection, to allude to a remark made by the gentleman from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit,) in regard to our trust funds, held by this bank. He stated that these funds had been unfairly given to the bank by legislative provision; but, sir, why were they placed there? I do not know but that the gentleman was in the Legislature at the time when a large portion of these funds were scattered in loans, over the State, in private hands, some of which never have, and I fear never will be recovered, but are, in all probability, forever lost. It was under these circumstances the Legislature thought the best policy was to call them in, and place them in safe hands; and, sir, by act of the Legislature, these funds were placed in bank, since which time they have been considered safe, and, sir, they are now considered safe, and for managing those funds we gave the bank the right to issue small notes, as the sole and only compensation for this trust, which some gentlemen speak of as a great favor to the bank.

Then, sir, when gentlemen come here with these objections, and say that the bank is monopolizing the trust funds, we point to the Legislature of the State, and say, that, by a special act of the Legislature, they were placed there at the instance of the people's representatives for security, and where it was thought they would be most safe, and where they have been safe until this day.

We find at another time, something to the credit of this bank; for certainly I think she ought to have all the credit she is entitled to, and if she is to cease to exist on the termination of her charter, she should carry with her the mention of her good deeds. We find, by the report of the State Bank, that she had on hand, as a debt due her by the State, a considerable amount of Treasury five and six per cent. notes. Did the bank ask us to issue them? Were they put in circulation at the instance of the bank? If gentlemen will look to the history of the past, they will find that the bank took these treasury notes on credit, and paid the money for them, out of her vaults, to aid the State of Indiana in sustaining herself under the heavy burthen imposed upon her by her system of internal improvements, at a time when the revenues of the State fell short, and she was not able to meet her engagements. Sir, was it not creditable to the bank, at this time, and under such circumstances, to come forward to sustain the credit of the State and help her out of her difficulties, though at the present time she has, perhaps, nearly half a million of these stocks in her vaults, for which she has not yet realized the money? I believe it was much more creditable and politic for the State to borrow the money of the bank, to meet the exigency, than to have gone abroad for the same, and surely it was much to the credit of the bank to furnish the means.

There has been a great deal of legislation, Mr. President, in days gone by, which has not been of the most wholesome character. Banks, and almost every institution in the State, have been, at times, attacked, set upon, and assailed by the Legislature, to bolster up the whig and democratic parties—not for the true interests of the people. But I trust in God, this will not be the case again. I hope, sir, the action of legislation will hereafter be directed to the welfare of the country, and not so much to party organizations and party ends.

But, sir, we hear the cry, this bank 'must go down; she is to be persecuted. And, sir, for what? For furnishing our people a currency, safe and sure—for aiding the State in the payment of her debts, instead of taxing the people—for doing her duty as a faithful agent. But, sir, this is not strange, for we are taught in the Scriptures, that the righteous are persecuted. [Laughter.] She is to be persecuted and hunted down like a partridge on the mountain. For what, sir? For the crime of furnishing a sound circulating medium to the country, and for advancing money to pay the debts of your State. If she is to be put to death, and sacrificed to open the way for private speculation and private bankers, I suppose some able free banker will openly preach her funeral sermon, though I shall not attend it, or be present to witness the ceremonies. [Laughter and applause.]

If this bank goes down, what shall we have in place of it? To use a sentiment put forth by the gentleman from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit,) banking is to be open to every man, "from Dan to Beersheba." All may become bankers. How, sir, is this to be accomplished?—how brought about on the plan of free banking? Free! how free? Free, sir, to none but the wealthy. Free to him who is willing to invest his capital in a bank of his own, and become a sharper—a Shylock. Sir, is it free to a man who has not a dollar in his pocket? Is it free to the farmer, who can bring a certain number of hogs to market and sell them for money sufficient for his immediate wants; or who, with his cattle and the products of his farm, can barely obtain a supply. Such men as these be bankers!—these men, the bone and sinew of the country, go to banking! Sir, this is all poetry—a humbug. No, sir, it would be a set of shavers and brokers, more to be dreaded than the plagues with which God cursed Egypt, in the days of Pharaoh. Sir, I would almost as soon see the country infested with those plagues, as to see such institutions as these things called free banks, thrust upon the country as monied institutions.

Sir, if you put in operation these free banks, in whose hands will you find them? You will find them in the hands of a few stockholders—a few corporations—a few English nobles. It will be free to a set of New York bankers and Wall street brokers and speculators, who have got the bonds of the State into their hands, at thirty-seven cents to the dollar. These bonds will be turned upon you as bank capital, and while our people will be taxed year after year, to pay the interest on those bonds, the holders will be operating on the country, with the same bonds as bank capital; thus, sir, playing off on us a double game, based, as it will be, on your own bonds and stocks. And if these banks should fail, as I honestly believe they must, then, sir, with their paper abroad, in the hands of the farmer, the mechanic, and the day laborer, the loss must fall on their hands; while the free banker is living in luxury and splendor. Sir, I pray God to protect the country from the infection of such an evil as the system of free banking—such, at least, as the one here proposed.

In almost every argument that I have heard on this floor in favor of free banks, we are referred to the free banks of New York, and we are told that it works well in that State. Sir, if this Convention will look back over the history of this State—look at the faithless and rotten corporations that have swindled your State out of her bonds, by failing to meet their contracts, by not paying us the money justly coming to us, and then, sir, you have a sample of those beautiful republican institutions, free to all, as some gentlemen say. You, sir, have a sample of free banking, or rather, I should say, free swindling.

Sir, in providing a currency for the people I here have the honor to represent, I shall not take, as my guide, the policy of any State, unless such policy accords with my own judgment. Sir, gentlemen on this floor may look for examples to New York, but, sir, in regard to that State I must say, that although that State is a powerful and wealthy State, yet it has been guilty of more folly, in regard to this subject of legislation, than ever Indiana thought of. Sir, I have only to say, that if you engraft upon this Constitution free banking, it will be condemned and voted down by the hardy yeomanry of the country, as in justice it ought to be. I speak boldly on this subject. I say the people will do it, and I will help them to do it.

Sir, when this free banking system went into operation in New York, provisions were made like the one we propose here—ample security for payment of the bills and also for an individual liability clause to the amount of the bills issued. According to the system in New York, if gentlemen's argument be true, these banks ought to have been solvent and trustworthy to have furnished a safe and sound currency, good at every point in the Union, redeemable at all times, when presented by the holders. But, sir, how was it. In the years '47 and '48, there came into existence in that State, some one hundred and nine of these beautiful free banks with a capital of near a million or perhaps a million and a-half of dollars, and when they went into operation they had to furnish this ample security for the redemption of their paper, and what kind of security was it? Why, with the exception of near forty-eight thousand dollars in specie, the balance was State stocks and real estate mortgages. What was the result? Why, in Dec., '48, out of the one hundred and nine banks, forty-eight of them went down, and owing to some unaccountable disease having got hold of them, closed their doors and left the people to get along the best way they could with their protested bills, worthless and unpaid. In the face of all this, we are told that this is a good currency to be depended on. Sir, suppose this money had been offered to one of your farmers for his wheat, his beef, his pork, what, sir, would he have said? He would have told the man who offered it him for his stock, to go back from whence he came with it. The stocks on which those free banks are to be based, are too uncertain and too fluctuating on which to base a currency for the people. But, sir, when these celebrated free banks, of which I have been speaking, exploded and blew up—when they went by the board—their stocks on which they had been banking, sold in market at a rate not higher than sixty-three cents, and some as low as eighteen and three-quarter cents to the dollar. And this was the free banking capital now so loudly commended in our hearing.

Mr. President, I believe if there is another word necessary to say, it is in refutation of the charge that the State Bank is not solvent. The condition of that bank is made known yearly to the Legislature, and if it can be clearly shown that it is not solvent, and that it is a swindling institution, I go for inflicting the highest penalty the law guaranties upon its officers, for a neglect of their duty and improper conduct. How stands their account now? What, sir, is her condition as to solvency? By their last report made by her, to the Legislature, made in '49, if we can give it any credit, and it is not likely that this report would be false, when the penalty is so severe, the liabilities of the bank amounted to six million one hundred and ninety-nine thousand six hundred and forty-nine dollars and sixty-three cents. How has she to meet it? If she has funds or means to meet it, and if those means are as good as New York stocks, I cannot see any good reason for making the change. I will tell you how she meets it. She had discounted notes amounting to one million six hundred and seventy thousand and eighty-eight dollars and fifty-one cents, and what kind of notes are they? They are notes signed by the farmers of the country, and signed by the best security in the country. If I am wrong I trust some gentleman will correct me, and I do not think that such notes in the hands of the bank, signed as they are, can be very dangerous securities. But, sir, I think they are as good and reliable as State bonds at least. Sir, as further means, the bank has got one million nine hundred and eleven thousand nine hundred and forty-two dollars and fifty cents, in bills of exchange. But if gentlemen do not desire that bills of exchange should be dealt in by the bank, let the Legislature, when it re-charters the bank, provide for that emergency. I know but little in a practical sense, of bills of exchange, not having dealt much in such paper, but I do know that it is the most popular commercial paper in existence, and, also, that it will go as far in sustaining the issues of a bank, and keeping her right in point of solvency, as any paper the bank can hold as evidences of debt, and as easy converted into money for the purpose of meeting the demand against her.

The bank has a suspended debt of two hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars; and I understand that this debt, called the suspended debt, consists of debts not paid at the time they fell due, and hence called the suspended debt. I would much rather take this debt, with the endorsers, and risk their final collection than to take the same amount in any of these new fangled stocks on which those new banks are to be founded, and which we are told is to produce money for the people.

The next thing to which I will allude as the resources to meet her indebtedness is one hundred and seventy-five thousand, seventy-three dollars in banking houses. This species of real estate is necessary to be owned by the bank, and of course good and solvent security for that amount. And, sir, I find among all men engaged in money speculations, that real estate of this kind is always looked upon as good security on which reliance can be placed at all times. At least, sir, I should think them as good as stocks which may be up-to-day and down-to-morrow, which rise and fall with every change in the market, and which are so uncertain that you cannot tell this week what they will be worth next week. Sir, base free banks, as they are termed, on such securities as these, and the people will have a currency, but what kind of a currency? A currency that will not pay your tavern bill out of your own State, and perhaps not at home. Sir, I find that the State Bank in real estate other than what I have above given, holds securities to the amount of one hundred and ninety-nine thousand two hundred and eighty-seven dollars and eighteen cents, and bank furniture to the amount of four thousand nine hundred twenty-nine dollars fifty-six cents. She has in her vaults eastern funds to the amount of four hundred and seventy thousand three hundred and sixty-two dollars, fourteen cents. She has due from other banks two hundred and seventy-four thousand five hundred and one dollars seventy-three cents. She has branch balances due of twelve thousand twenty dollars twenty-three cents. She has due her from remittances, deposits, &c., two hundred five thousand five hundred and eighty-six dollars, one cent. She holds United States and Indiana bonds to the amount of seventy-one thousand dollars. She has one hundred and thirty-one thousand four hundred and ten dollars in five per cent treasury notes of the State of Indiana. She holds thirty-four thousand eight hundred and five dollars in six per cent treasury notes of Indiana. She holds the notes of other banks to the amount of one hundred and one thousand nine hundred and seventy dollars; and, sir, at the time of making this report, which was submitted to the Legislature December 1849, she had in her vaults gold and silver to the amount of one million two hundred and eighty-five thousand four hundred and six dollars, and ninety-three cents; thus showing her means equal to her liabilities, and if she was compelled to wind up would, as I believe render her solvent, and, sir, I believe she will prove to be so. But, sir, we are told that the reports made by the officers of the State Bank are not practically true—that if we could get at the bottom of the institution it is rotten to the core—that it acts upon the principle of favoritism—that it will accommodate one man and refuse accommodation to another—that she is acting unfaithful—that she is swallowing up the trust funds and will never be able to pay them back—that they are lost to the State. These charges are put forth in this Hall and out of it. But, sir, who makes these charges? From what source do they come? Not from the honest farmer, who, on account of the currency furnished by the bank, finds a ready market for the products of his farm, and a reward for his industry. But, sir, these complaints come from the enemies of the State Bank. They come, sir, from men who wish to break her down, and on her ruins establish what some call free banks, but what I fear would be free speculation and free swindling.

Sir, I am opposed to the change. We have tested the State Bank system—we have found it work well—have found under its operation your country has prospered—the farmers have advanced from poverty to wealth and opulence—the country has thrown off her embarrassments, and the farmer, the merchant, the mechanic, and the day laborer now stand erect. Sir, with these facts before us uncontested and incontestible, we had better let well enough alone. Yes sir, in the language of a wise and good politician of our Hoosier State who is no more, we had better let it be. But, sir, put down the State Bank, deprive the State of the advantages that she draws from the Bank, deprive the people of a sound and reliable currency, establish free banks, based as they are, or will be, on stocks, and, sir, who will be your bankers? Who will manage the currency of the country? Will it be the State of Indiana? Will it be the farmers, the mechanics, and merchants of your own State? Sir I say it will not. It will be the stock jobbers, the Wall Street brokers, and speculators of New York. The speculators of England who have got your State bonds at thirty-seven cents on the dollar, the bonds, sir, out of which the State has been cheated and swindled, and for which your children and mine will have to labor for years and years to come, will be turned upon you as bank capital, and these men will be your bankers; they, sir, will manage the exchange of the country, and govern the trade and commerce of our people, and regulate the price of wheat, beef, corn, pork, and products of the State. This policy, sir, will never be sanctioned by the people. Tell the yeomanry of Indiana that their own bank must go down—that the institution that has been brought into existence by our own legislation without distinction of party—built up by our own people—managed by our own citizens, until it has become the pride of every individual, and must go down, driven out of existence, and its place filled by free bankers composed of English noblemen and stock jobbers, New York brokers and speculators; and, sir, the people, the freemen of Indiana will rise in their power and strength at the ballot box, and consign your Constitution to the shade of death.

But, Mr. President, the system of free banks attempted to be thrust upon the State of Indiana, presents to speculators one of the most stupendous and magnificent schemes of speculation ever beheld. No wonder, sir, that the agents of our bondholders are now hanging on these lobbies, exerting every nerve to fix on us this odious free banking system. Why, sir, look at the process first. Sir, they have got our bonds for little or nothing—for a price merely nominal. The people are taxed to pay interest on these bonds yearly, and finally to pay the principal. These bonds are now proposed to be converted into bank capital, on which to base free banks on which to issue paper two dollars for one. Sir, what is the worst and most lamentable part of this scheme and this banking project is, that by the time that they have got fairly under way in complete operation, the paper scattered broad-cast over the land, in the hands of the honest and unsuspecting people, like the celebrated banks of New York, of which I have been speaking, they will go down and blow up in rapid succession, leaving their paper in the hands of the community, to be redeemed, if redeemed at all, at a large discount, the loss to be borne by the people, whose only sin and folly has been to be thus cheated and imposed on by such rotten, false, and faithless institutions.

Sir, these kind of institutions have heretofore been disastrous in the extreme, and, sir, like cause will produce like effect. Pass a section and put it into your organic law, by which you authorize those banks to grow up at pleasure in the hands of foreigners, stock jobbers, and mean speculators, whose only feeling and desire is to plunder and impoverish your people; whose highest motive is self aggrandizement, whose interest is opposed to each other, who will always be at war with each other and at war with your people. Establish, sir, such a class and clan of monsters in the shape of banks, and fix and seal them on the country, and you will find by miserable experience that more has been done to baffle and prostrate the energies of the people, and break down the spirit of enterprise at this time displaying itself in the bosom of almost every Indianian, than one half century can remedy. Sir, these are my notions and opinions, humbly and honestly entertained. In my humble manner I give them to the Convention for what they are worth. If they are worth anything, I hope they will have their desired effect: if they are worth nothing, they can only be passed by. Sir, in regard to the State Bank of Indiana: during her whole history she has never suspended specie payment but on one occasion, and then only for a short period, and that, sir, by the advice and consent of the people, expressed in and through their representatives, and under a class of circumstances which will long be remembered by the people of Indiana.

Sir, in regard to the many charges made in and out of this Hall against the bank, the management of the bank, and the conduct of her officers, that in political matters as well as legal jurisprudence, it is a just and well settled rule that he that prefers charges takes on himself the burthen of proof. And sir, as a friend of the State Bank system, I have listened, I have expected an attempt to prove some of the charges true; but, sir, I have listened in vain—no such attempts have as yet been made—and, sir, I now call on the enemies of the State Bank system to bring the proof—show their hands—establish the truth of those charges—or, like honest and charitable men, abandon them. Sir, I do not say that another bank should be chartered precisely on the same basis of the present. If anything in the present charter is not right, the wisdom of the Legislature that grants another charter will correct those errors and those wrongs which experience has shown to be wrong. Sir, that we must have banks of some sort to supply the wants of the people, is certain; and if we must have banks and use bank paper, we should have those of the best, and which will furnish for the people the best circulating medium. And, sir, time and experience has proven State banks to be more reliable and useful than any private institution which has been tried, at least within my knowledge. For these reasons, and not from any private motives of my own, I prefer a State Bank on a sound basis, and well guarded.

In conclusion I have only to say, that upon a correct settlement of this question depends not only the interests of this but of the next generation. I earnestly ask gentlemen to pause and reflect before they undertake to overthrow an institution which has furnished the people with a sound circulating medium—has relieved the State in time of pecuniary embarrassment when help was most needed—which has aided in paying off the debts of the State, and which has tended mainly to the prosperity and redemption of our glorious State and her fallen credit, and not to substitute in its place a system based on a sandy foundation, and which, when tried by other and more wealthy States than ours, has proved the ruin of thousands, and periled even the solvency of their governments.

Sir, on this occasion I have felt it my duty to say this much, and in doing so I believe I have spoken the sentiments of my people, and in my humble manner tried to advocate their rights. And, sir, by returning to the Convention my sincere thanks for the patient hearing with which I have been favored, I will not further detain them.

THURSDAY, JAN. 23, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. ———

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. LOCKHART presented a petition, signed by Truman Nelson and fifty-nine other citizens of Posey county, expressing their strong disapprobation of the action of this Convention upon several subjects. They express, said Mr. Lockhart, the opinion that the people of this State should not be deprived of the privilege of declaring at the ballot-box, whether they will use the credit of the State to promote such objects of public utility, as to them shall seem just, profitable, and expedient; of which right this Convention has debared them, if the new Constitution should be adopted. They insist that it is impossible to foresee the emergencies which may render the aid of State credit desirable. In short, sir, the petitioners sustain the action of that portion of their delegation who have asked nothing more upon this subject than they promised when candidates. As a petition in the same words was read to this Convention the other day, I move that the petition be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON of Marion, from the committee on the Executive, reported back the section in relation to the veto power of the Governor.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

On motion, by Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe,

The rule which requires the yeas and nays to be taken, on the final passage of a section, was suspended, and

The section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

Mr. DOBSON, from the committee on salaries, compensation, and tenure of office, reported a section, providing that the Governor shall be allowed an annual salary of fifteen hundred dollars; the Secretary, Auditor, and Treasurer of State, one thousand dollars each, with such perquisites as the Legislature shall, from time to time, allow; the Judges of the Supreme Court, fifteen hundred dollars each; the Judges of the Circuit Court, twelve hundred dollars each; the members of the General Assembly, three dollars per day each, and three dollars for every twenty-five miles travel, on the most direct route, in going to and returning from the seat of government. No law shall be passed to increase the pay of members of the General Assembly, which shall take effect until after the close of the session at which such law shall be passed.

The section was read a first time, and passed to a second reading.

NEGROES.

The section prohibiting negroes and mulattoes from coming into and settling in the State, being the special order for this day, was taken up on its second reading.

Mr. HALL moved to strike out "and" and insert "or," so that the section would read, "coming into or settling in the State."

Mr. H. remarked, that as the section now stood there was nothing to prevent a negro from coming into and passing through the State, and thus eluding the pursuit of his owner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question being on the engrossment of the section,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson moved to amend by adding the following:

"And that members of this Convention be required, whenever they see a negro in the State, to catch him and take him out."

Mr. DAVIS of Parke moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

The question being upon the amendment of the gentleman from Jefferson, it was, by ayes 15, noes 114, decided in the negative.

The question then being on the engrossment of the section,

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result—yeas 94, nays 36—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Barbour, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Helmer, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—94.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bicknell, Biddle, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Dunn of Jefferson, Foley, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hogin, Howe, Kendall of White, Kinley, March, May, McClelland, Milligan, Mowrer, Newman, Niles, Smith of Ripley, Todd, Trimble, Work, and Wunderlich—36.

The section which provides that "all contracts made with negroes and mulattoes coming into this State, contrary to the provision of the first section of this article, shall be void; and all persons who shall employ, or otherwise encourage such negroes or mulattoes to remain in this State, shall be fined in any sum not less than ten nor more than five hundred dollars," was read a second time.

Mr. SHOUP moved that the section be laid upon the table.

Upon this motion the yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken resulted thus—yeas 48, nays 85:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bicknell, Biddle, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crumbacker, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Foley, Frisbie, Hawkins, Helm, Hitt, Hogin, Howe, Kendall of White, Kinley, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Niles, Rariden, Shoup, Smith of Ripley, Thomas, Todd, Trimble, Watts, Work, and Wunderlich—48.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Barbour, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Helmer, Hendricks, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—85.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to strike out all after the word "void."

The object, he said, was to leave it to the Legislature to make the necessary provision to carry out the principle embraced in the section. In the first place, it was desirable that the Constitution should be as brief as the necessary degree of perspicuity would admit; and in the second place the provision contained in the latter clause of the section was a matter which was purely legislative in its character, and which should not be introduced into the Constitution. The imposition of penalties was clearly legislative business.

Mr. GIBSON moved to amend the amendment by inserting in the place of the words proposed to be stricken out the following, viz.:

"Any person who shall suffer a negro or mulatto to occupy any real estate, shall forfeit the same for the use of common schools."

Mr. RITCHEY. I approve of the principle of the amendment of the gentleman from Dearborn, because I think it unnecessary to provide in the Constitution for these severe penalties. As a separate proposition it might do no harm, but I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Clarke, and I therefore move that it be laid upon the table. [Cries of "no, no."]

Well, if gentlemen wish to talk about it, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. I have one remark to make in relation to the amendment of the gentlemen from Clark. I understand that when a hog is dead it becomes pork, but when a negro is dead I suppose he is a negro still, and I think the gentleman ought, in such case, to allow him to be buried. If a negro should come into the State and die here and be buried, it should not occasion a forfeiture of the land in which the body may be deposited.

Mr. KELSO. I voted for the first section of this article, viz.: the one which prohibited negroes and mulattoes from coming into or settling in this State.

The next branch of the matter, which is a part of the second section, gentlemen are highly pleased with. That is, that all contracts made with negroes, shall be void. But singular as it may seem, they cannot bear the idea of a white man being put under a penalty for assisting or encouraging a negro to come here in violation of the law. Now, I maintain that the downright abolitionists are more troublesome to us than the negroes themselves. I go for making the restriction upon the man who encourages the negro to come into the State, more severe than upon the negro himself. I am in favor of fixing the penalty as in the section that has been reported: That after we have passed the law and made it a part and parcel of the laws of the State, that no negro shall come into the State and settle here. I then say that the white man who induces him to violate the law, is worse than the negro, and the penalty should be more severe upon him. I am decidedly in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Clark. I hold that he who willfully encourages the negro to violate the law, is more culpable than the negro himself, and if he will encourage him to come among us in violation of the laws of the State, by furnishing him a home, he should forfeit the property which he transfers to the negro, and let it go to the common school fund. There is no sense in prohibiting negroes from coming into our State, unless we prohibit white men from inducing them to come.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. I have heretofore declared my intention to vote against these sections, in all their phases and forms, and perhaps it were prudent for me now to express my vote without further remark. Yet, sir, I cannot forbear a few words in reply to the gentleman from Switzerland. Although that gentleman may be generally right in his opinions, the sentiments which he has just now expressed do not seem to me to be in unison with the spirit of humanity and benevolence, which he usually manifests.

The amendment proposed, punishes a man with forfeiture of goods and lands for the crime of benevolence and charity.

If a negro should come into this State, and be found sick and destitute, or if they were women and children, and some humane person should provide a shelter for them, and supply their wants, certainly this does not appear to me to be such a crime as to justify the extraordinary penalty which is proposed—the forfeiture of the land.

I have read something of the history of nations, and I will venture to say that from the beginning of the world to the present hour, with the exception of China, no nation has passed law so preposterous as this.

They have a law in China, which makes any person responsible for the life of a wounded man, if taking charge of him, and the unfortunate individual should die within forty days after receiving the hurt.

The consequence is that surgery is practically prohibited in that Empire. The wounded man is left to his fate. None are willing even to take him into their houses, lest they be liable to the penalty affixed to the crime of murder.

If it be proper that any provision like this should be made, it ought to be left to the Legislature, that a discrimination at least may be made, between those who entice negroes here, and those who, from a sense of humanity, seek to relieve persons who may be perishing from want.

We ought not to decree by an unalterable constitutional enactment, that the man who, from humanity, may shelter a negro fleeing into this State, in his house or his out-house, or his barn, that he may not die of cold, or disease, or perish with hunger, I say that for this we ought not to decree a forfeiture of the man's property to the State. I can conceive of no greater barbarity than this—no greater outrage upon humanity.

Mr. DOBSON (interposing). I would ask the gentleman what he expected the negro to do here. We have prohibited him from coming?

Mr. CLARK. Well, sir, the negro is forced from Kentucky, or driven from Ohio, running for his life, trying to escape from his pursuers—fleeing from slavery, if you choose—he reaches our State exhausted, he can go no farther. Worn with fatigue, fear, and hunger, he falls down by the road side. Some humane man finds him, and like the Good Samaritan, goes not to the other side, but cares for him and ministers to his necessities. Shall we, a christian people, punish a man who performs the duty of a christian, with the confiscation of his property? If this be the spirit of our progressive christianity, I pray God to deliver us from such a dispensation. I pray for the humanity of Mahomedanism, to deliver us from barbarism such as this. Borrowing the language of the great poet of our race, I may ask, What! Have we turned Turks, and do that which heaven hath forbid the Ottomite!

When the oppressed Hungarians repulsed from christendom, fled to Mussulmen for an asylum, for security, for refuge—when they found that protection in the land of the Turk, which had been denied by their christian brethren, the voice of humanity resounding through the christian nations of the world, cried out, christianity has fled from christendom and taken her abode in the breast of the followers of Mahomet!

Sir, barbarians shall teach us lessons of humanity, and the heathen instruct us in the principle of religion!

Now, sir, I will say one word on the motion of the gentleman from Dearborn, which is to strike out a part of the section, and which motion I think ought to prevail. This part of the section provides that if any one employ a negro, who may have come into this State, after the adoption of this Constitution, he shall be fined not less than ten dollars. If he unwittingly employ such a negro as a barber, to shave him, he is subject to the severe penalty of the law.

All of these penalties may be properly and far more safely left to the Legislature. If the people of the State shall adopt the Constitution and determine to carry out the intention of this article, they will elect men to enact the necessary laws. Or if their sober thought shall show them such harsh laws are unavailing and useless, they will repeal them. And I admonish gentlemen who advocate these penalties, that the more barbarous and unjust they make them, the more will they be opposed, and the more certainly will the people of the State reject them or refuse to enforce them.

Mr. DOBSON. I would not have said a word upon this subject, had it not been that the gentleman from Tippecanoe has advanced a sentiment that ought not to go unanswered—a sentiment that is in opposition to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. The gentleman seems to think it preposterous that an individual should be punished for doing an act of charity to a human being—to a negro who comes into the State. I made the inquiry of the gentleman what business the negro had here? He answered that he might be chased by his master. I answered the gentleman by saying that when the negro is chased by his master into this State, we are bound to give him up. The Constitution of the United States binds us to do so, and no provision we can adopt would discharge us from that obligation.

Now I undertake to say that when we adopt a provision prohibiting negroes from coming into this State, that but few will come here without they are enticed so to do by white men. Therefore the penalty should be greater upon the white man who induces the negro to come into the State, than upon the negro.

All this cry about humanity is intended ad captandum.

I undertake to say that it is impossible to blend the two races and make one of them. Their physical organization is different, and you cannot blend them if you would, and make them become one. The stronger race will keep itself clear of the weaker and thereby keep the blood pure.

It is to accomplish a benefit for them both that I am in favor of this proposition. But gentlemen say that an individual may be punished innocently, if he entertain and provide for a negro who has escaped from his master in another State. Suppose a man should receive and protect a horse thief, not knowing him to be a felon, would he not be liable to be punished? Will any one say that there should be a penalty imposed upon that man, because, from motives of humanity, he had protected a fellow being, or, if he receive stolen goods and is not able to account for having them in his possession, he would be liable and ought to be sent to the penitentiary?

The gentlemen from Clark, Floyd, Vanderburg, and the other border counties, are not afraid of the section. Then why should the gentlemen representing northern and north-western counties object? If negroes are chased by their masters into this State, they would have to pass through the southern counties before they could reach Tippecanoe or any county north of it.

But gentlemen want to leave the whole matter to the Legislature. Well, sir, we might with the same propriety leave almost everything else to the Legislature. The gentleman thinks it barbarous in the extreme, that we prohibit negroes from becoming citizens. I ask the gentlemen if those already here are on an equality with the whites? Look at your statistics on the subject. They would tell a different tale. No, sir, they are not now nor never can be on an equality with the whites. Then why deceive them by holding out the idea that if they come you will make citizens of them? We have the right to say who shall and who shall not become citizens of this country. All countries have that right, and exercise it, too.

The gentleman may go to any of the old countries and ask to become a citizen, and they will tell him—you cannot become a citizen,—and yet he thinks it is a very preposterous thing that we should assume the power to say who shall and who shall not become citizens.

Mr. President, I am not in favor of encouraging negroes to escape from their masters and come to this State. I feel as much for the negro as any gentleman here. But you never will let him become a citizen if you try to do so forty times over. And if all the people consented to it, it would never be accomplished any more than the cross of the horses and jackasses could ever be anything else than mules. It is an inviolable law of nature, and you cannot repeal it or avoid it. You cannot blend two races of men, and make a new race that will endure or remain as a distinct race more than one or two generations. The Jew is now what he was in Jerusalem—the Celtic race has not changed—the Gipsy is the same now that he was when we first heard of him. You cannot make a new race of men and perpetuate it.

I ask those who talk so loudly and so long about inhumanity to the negro, to look back to the treatment that the Pottawatomes and the Shawnees have experienced at the hands of the white man. Go and pay them for the lands you live upon, if you are so conscientious. You say you bought them? Yes, your puritan fathers bought the African with rum and gums and sold them to the planters. One was near about as fair a sale as the other.

Is there a possibility of amalgamation of those tribes with the white race? Not at all. They are as distinct as two opposite principles can be. It is a part of their destiny to be treated as they have been by the white race. They cannot be amalgamated with the whites. They are one of the dark races, and all the dark races are weaker mentally than the white races, and when the two come in contact, the dark race must give way; our race will cover this continent sooner or later—the other race must give way. It is their destiny. Other races gave way to them, and now they must give way to us. Who will occupy it next, I cannot tell!

Mr. READ of Clark demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was, upon a division—ayes 60, noes 35—seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being upon the amendment of the gentleman from Clark, (Mr. Gibson,)

The yeas and nays were demanded, and, being ordered and taken, were—yeas 35, nays 94—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bourne, Butler, Chenowith, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Fisher, Gibson, Gootee, Hall, Hovey, Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Lockhart, Logan, Mathis, Miller of Clinton, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Read of Clarke, Ristine, Sherrod, Spann, Tague, Tannehill, and Wolfe—35.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Bicknell, Blythe, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Howe, Huff, Johnson of D., Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Stevenson, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimble, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Work, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—95.

So the amendment was not adopted.

The question recurred upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Dearborn.

The yeas and nays being ordered and taken, there were—yeas 57, nays 74.

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bicknell, Biddle, Brookbank, Bryant, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Foley, Garvin, Gordon, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Niles, Rariden, Ritchey, Shoup, Sims, Smith of Ripley, Thomas, Todd, Trimble, Wallace, Watts, and Work—57.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Barbour, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Helmer, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Lockhart, Logan, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Shannon, Sherrod, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Walpole, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—74.

So the amendment was not adopted.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading?

The yeas and nays were taken, and the result was—yeas 77, nays 56—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Barbour, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Helmer, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Lockhart, Logan, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Shannon, Sherrod, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—77.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bicknell, Biddle, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Foley, Garvin, Gordon, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Johnson of Dearborn, Kendall of White, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Niles, Rariden, Ritchey, Sims, Smith of Ripley, Thomas, Todd, Trimble, Watts, Work, and Wunderlich—56.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. HOVEY. I would inquire of the Chair whether it is now in order to offer an additional section?

The PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. HOVEY. I would then offer the following section:

"That sections number one and two shall be submitted to a separate vote of the people in this form: 'Exclusion—yea or nay,' and section number three shall be submitted to a separate vote of the people in this form: 'Colonization, with an annual appropriation derived from taxation—yea or nay.'" A word in explanation. I would vote for section number three, provided it be submitted to the people as a distinct question. If however you bind the two questions together, that is "exclusion and colonization," I will vote against them. In the southern part of the State if the two questions be joined together to be voted upon as a whole, the entire article would be in danger of being rejected.

Mr. OWEN. If it be right to do a thing at all, it is proper to do it effectually. I recently voted in a comparatively small minority for what I regarded as an effectual method of excluding, in the future, from our State, all negroes and mulattoes. When I consider a thing right in itself, I do not shrink from its consequences. If justice and expediency alike declare that the African race should not be permitted to come in from other States and increase among us, we are quite as competent as any future Legislature can be, to declare by what means this shall be done.

But, sir, I am not prepared to vote for the amendment introduced by my colleague (Mr. Hovey). Whatever we do in this matter, should be done in accordance with the dictates of true humanity. I believe it to be a principle essential to the well-being of both the races, that they shall be separated. If they be not, what, I ask you, are the alternatives? Either that the negro race shall remain among us in their present condition; or else that their blood shall gradually mingle with ours, until all traces of Ethiopian descent finally disappear.

Shall they remain, as now, a race legally and socially excommunicated, as the Helots of Sparta—as the Pariahs of India—disfranchised outcasts; a separate and degraded caste, to whom no honorable career is open; hopeless menials; the hewers of wood and drawers of water of those among whom they are tolerated, not received? Shall this state of things last for ever? I, for one, am not willing, if by any proper means I can avoid it, that my children should grow up side by side with men like themselves, yet without the rights of freemen. I am not willing we should encourage, by any act of ours, the growing up, in our midst, of what corresponds, in all its worst features, to the mob of Europe; men who are taxed, but not represented; men upon whom laws and burdens are imposed, but who have no voice in determining how those laws shall read, or what those burdens shall be.

Am I told by those who speak as the especial friends of the African, that the public feeling, whence arises such a state of things, ought not to exist? So be it. But it does exist. Can you alter it? Look around and answer the question. Can you change the hearts and feelings of our people, that they shall permit a negro to sit down beside them, an equal at the social board—a colleague in the legislative hall? Call this prejudice, tyranny, what you will, can you eradicate it? Settled, deep-rooted public opinion is one of the facts which a legislator must ever recognize and respect. It constitutes an essential element in all laws. It must govern the decisions of the law-giver, or his statutes will be but as waste paper, or worse.

Look into your statute book, and see what marks public opinion has left upon its pages. A negro shall not be a witness, in any case whatever, against a white man. Think of the gross injustice which, under such a law, may arise. Some villain, so his skin be not black, may penetrate by night into the dwelling of the negro; may there, in the presence of witnesses, commit crimes of the blackest dye—murder, rape, arson; and if these witnesses are all negroes and mulattoes, the murderer, the ravisher, the incendiary, goes free and unpunished; perhaps to repeat, with similar impunity, similar crimes. Is that a state of things that ought to endure in a civilized land? Is it to last, through all time, among us? Ought any good man to desire the continuance among us of a race to whom we are not willing to accord the most common protection against outrage and death?

But is the remedy to be sought in gradual amalgamation? Turn once more to your statute book, and what do you find there? A law declaring that, if a white person intermarry with a negro, or with any one having but an eighth of African blood, the parties contracting such a marriage shall be confined in the penitentiary for not less than a year, and shall, in addition, be fined not less than a thousand dollars. All persons abetting or counseling such a marriage incur a fine of a hundred dollars; and upon the issue of any such union is stamped the brand of illegitimacy. Who, with such laws before him, will talk of amalgamation as the ultimate result? How, except by wholesale violation of public morality, can it take place?

Since, then, public opinion is as it is, what is the ultimate remedy? Separation—colonization. To those whom we are not willing to treat here as men ought to be treated, let us afford the chance of seeking a free home elsewhere. Let us say to the negro: "Equal rights, social and political, you cannot have here; but we will give you the means of going where no prejudice against your color finds place—where you will meet but equals—where all occupations will be open to you—where you may aspire to any station, even the highest.

There is a section, to come up by and bye, which provides that no negro, after the year 1860, shall acquire real estate, except by descent. That is a provision of a very effectual character to produce separation of the races; but I cannot vote for it, except in conjunction with a provision for colonization. The provision should be, that, between this time and the year 1860, a sufficient amount should be raised to take to Liberia every negro and mulatto—man, woman, and child—now within the State of Indiana, who may choose to go. And then, if they elect, even under the disabilities imposed upon them, to remain here, it is their affair. We shall have done an act of justice. We shall have afforded them an alternative. If the Convention refuse this, I must vote against the enacting of any additional disabilities, to be imposed upon negroes now among us.

The sum necessary to colonize our negro population is not a startling amount. The naval committee of the United States House of Representatives recently reported a project, which will doubtless be carried out, to run a regular line of large steamships between New York and Liberia; and their estimate is, that thirty dollars a head will pay the entire expense of transportation. There are about sixteen thousand negroes now in the State, which, at thirty dollars a head, would make the total of four hundred and eighty thousand dollars. A tax of about thirty-five cents on the hundred dollars would raise the amount. This, spread over seven years, would be but five cents a year. Even should the amount prove to be double that sum, it would be money well spent; well spent in doing an act of humanity and justice; well spent for the interests of our children.

It is to be remembered that I propose to colonize those only who may be willing to go. And it is very doubtful whether one-half of those now among us, even when the means are offered them, will avail themselves of the offer. They do not estimate, as we do, the blessings of liberty, of equality, and of political rights.

Each gentleman must judge for himself, whether his constituents are willing to be taxed for such an object. I am satisfied that those I represent are ready to do their share in this good work. I know they are in favor of colonization. For the sake of their children, they are willing to pay that which is necessary to remove from among us a proscribed race, the influence of whom, while they remain in their present degraded condition, must of necessity be demoralizing.

I think, therefore, that the committee did well when they united with the provisions to exclude, the means to colonize. When the people vote on this subject, I desire to see them vote on "exclusion and colonization." Justice, alike to ourselves and the unfortunate race that was brought among us without their agency, demands it.

The PRESIDENT here remarked that the proposition of the gentleman from Posey (Mr. Hovey,) was not in order. It was not an original section, and the article already contained a section on the subject.

Mr. HOVEY. But I offer it as an additional section.

The PRESIDENT. That does not make it an additional section.

Mr. HOVEY. I will ask permission of the Convention to offer a few remarks in answer to my colleague. ["Consent, consent."]

It is either right or wrong to exclude negroes and mulattoes from this State. If wrong, no amount of money paid for colonization, or any other purpose, can justify the exclusion. If it be right, I ask my colleague what authority this Convention has to say to the people that they shall colonize those that are here, or that they shall not be permitted to close the doors against further immigration? If exclusion is right, let it stand upon its own basis. If colonization is right, let it stand there, too, and do not make one the condition upon which the other may be adopted. The article reported back by the committee would compel the people to pay an annual tax of twenty or thirty thousand dollars for the privilege of protecting themselves against that unfortunate though reckless and abandoned class of immigration. Truly, this is rather dear for self-protection! It seems to me that every reflecting man would spurn such a proposition with contempt. The friends of colonization, I should think, would not wish to carry their point by thus forcing the southern counties to purchase the right of exclusion. But my colleague says that he has no doubt his constituents will be willing to embark in this scheme of colonization. I am willing to let them answer for themselves, by submitting it to them as a separate question; but I say, with all due deference, that neither he nor I has the right to fix upon them an annual tax of this kind, without their consent. I regard the whole article reported back by the committee thus coupled with colonization, as an insidious attempt against negro exclusion, and I now tell my colleague that the whole article will fail, if it should be adopted as reported by the committee. He says he knows his people. He is older and more experienced than I am, but, sir, in this instance, I must say he has come to a wrong conclusion. I can vote for a section submitting the question of prohibiting negro immigration into the State, but I will not vote for a section of that kind, coupled with colonization. As my section is ruled out of order, I shall vote for all that part of the article which relates to exclusion, and against the other sections.

The third section was then read as follows:

"There shall be an annual appropriation set apart by law for the gradual colonization of negroes and mulattoes, and their descendants, who may be in this State at the adoption of this Constitution."

The PRESIDENT. This is the second reading of the section. The question is, Shall the section be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. STEVENSON moved to amend by striking out the section, and inserting the following:

"All fines which may be collected for the violation of any of the sections of this article, or of any law hereafter passed by the Legislature, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this article, shall be set apart for the colonization and emigration from this State, of all negroes and mulattoes."

Mr. NEWMAN moved to amend the original section in this manner: by inserting after the word "appropriation," in the first line, the words "of not less than ten thousand dollars."

The question being upon the amendment of the gentleman from Wayne,

Mr. PETTIT. Is it in order to amend the amendment, by naming a less sum?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman has the right to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Wayne.

Mr. PETTIT. Then I move to amend by substituting "two thousand" for "ten thousand."

The question being on the amendment to the amendment,

Mr. PETTIT. I certainly shall not undertake to debate, at this late stage of our session, the entire question of negro exclusion and colonization. I shall merely say a few words in relation to this report, the third section of which is now under consideration. I understand this report to have come from the committee with a recommendation that it should be submitted to a vote of the people. I was in hopes that the whole report would have been taken up and voted upon at once, and submit the entire question for the adoption of the people. I must say that, whether the remainder of the report shall pass or not, I cordially approve of the two sections that have been engrossed. The first section provides that no negro or mulatto shall come into or settle in this State, after the adoption of the new Constitution. The next section declares all contracts made with negroes or mulattoes coming into the State after the adoption of the Constitution, void. For the violation of the injunction that negroes shall not come into this State, penalties are imposed where I believe they ought to be—where humanity and reason directs that they should be placed—on the white man, or white resident of the State, instead of on the black man. Now, sir, upon the amendment, as proposed by myself, or that proposed by the gentleman from Wayne (Mr. Newman)—because I shall be willing to go for his, if mine cannot be adopted—depends my voting for this third section, and, also, for the fourth.

I made some remarks, a few days ago, upon the subject of encouraging all persons in the State, to hold property, believing that it would tend much to prevent mobs, riots, and incendiarism. Then, if you prevent negroes, &c., in 1860, nine years hence, from acquiring property otherwise than by descent, and do not hold out any inducement—in other words the cornucopia, or horn of plenty—to leave the State, I cannot vote for the fourth section. I never will withhold from any person, black or white, the right to hold property of any kind in this State. On the contrary, I would encourage him by all reasonable means, to acquire property, for the reason that he would then be the more readily disposed to protect mine—that he would be the less ready to engage in mobs and riots, for fear his own property might be laid waste and would thus, through motives of self-interest, become a better friend of law and order.

If the section, with the proposed amendment, pass, so that we may say to the negro, "here are the means to convey you to the land of your forefathers, the place of their nativity a climate adapted to your constitution and your health," then I will vote for it. But, sir, I will not vote to make a pauper class amongst us of any kind whatever: rather would I afford this unfortunate race the means to obtain property easily and cheaply.

Let us impose a direct tax for the purpose of carrying out this emigration plan. In the name of all that is just—no, I will not appeal to your sense of justice, but to your own considerations of humanity, and of personal interest—is there any inducement for these men to protect our property, if there be no means afforded them to emigrate out of the State?

Mr. NEWMAN. As I offered an amendment to this section, I wish to be permitted to say a few words. The gentleman from Tippecanoe cannot have made any calculation as to the number of negroes the sum of $2,000 can transport yearly.

Mr. PETTIT (in his seat). I have said of not less than $2,000.

Mr. NEWMAN. If you said not less than $10,000, how long would it take to rid the State of the negroes now in it? If the statement of the gentleman from Posey (Mr. Owen) be right, that it will take nearly half a million of dollars to colonize them, $10,000 a year would not transport them from here in fifty years; it would scarcely take away the increase in fifty years. Then, sir, if gentlemen meant to meet this evil in the face, let them stand up to it. I have heard no gentleman speak upon this question who did not profess to be a friend of the negro race. If gentlemen be in earnest about it, let them evidence their humanity by an appeal to their pockets; that is the place which will give the most striking proof of the truth of the declarations they make on this floor. I say, let this unfortunate class have a sufficient sum to transport them to the land of their fathers. If you will exclude them from the enjoyment of any privilege—from the enjoyment of a little “holding”—if, in fact, you will cut them off from the possession of all the enjoyments and sources of happiness that other people have, it is at least the part of justice to hold forth to them the inducement that the State will lend a helping hand in order that they may leave this for a land more adapted to their condition. I am no fanatic, sir. I regret the existence of the colored race in this country, and would hold out to them every inducement to go. And, if you make an ample provision for their emigration and settlement in comfort in a genial climate, the land of their forefathers, I could view with some toleration the strong feeling to get rid of them which so extensively obtains. Undoubtedly if you that say you are the friends of the separation of the two races, you will put your hands in your pocket and say, “here is the wherewithal to leave this State,” and to send them away paupers; not make them a race of beggars, of thieves, and of robbers within your borders, without allowing them to acquire or affording them the means to return to their own proper home.

Is the sum I propose too large? In all conscience it is not. A number of gentlemen to whom I showed the proposition before submitting it, said the sum should be $20,000. If you hope to rid the State of the number of negroes in it in twenty years, then the appropriation should be $20,000 or $30,000.

Are gentlemen in earnest when they say they are the friends of the separation of the two races? Will they make a decent appropriation, or “a mere song?” Two thousand dollars! How many negroes will that transport?—how many of this race that you so much dread will that rid us of?

If you want to leave to the Legislature (as was remarked by my friend over the way) this question as to the amount to be appropriated to the cause of humanity, let us leave the entire question of “exclusion” to the Legislature, and provide that when they pass a law for the exclusion of the negro race, they shall also make an appropriation to meet the emergency. I do not desire to farther occupy the time of this body at this late period.

Mr. STEVENSON. Having offered an amendment to the section now under consideration, I desire to offer a remark or two on this subject. I look upon the question of prohibiting the emigration of slaves from slave States into this State, and the question of making an appropriation for the purpose of removing them from here, as very distinct questions. The two questions have scarcely any connection, the one with the other. We must certainly have the right to say to the slave States, if you intend to perpetuate the evils of slavery, you must keep your negroes to yourselves, and that we will not open our doors to receive them. Yes, sir, we have that right, and it is not connected in any sense with the question of removing negroes to Liberia.

I say that though we may be disposed to treat that race properly and humanely, we are not compelled in anywise to make an appropriation to remove them, nor do we do them any injustice when we refuse to do so.

But on the other hand, have we the right to say that free negroes shall not come into the State? Sir, my course in regard to that question would be by adopting the section which we have adopted. As one opposed to the institution of slavery, and one who is desirous of seeing it terminate, I would take the course the committee has taken. It is an admitted fact that there is no greater nuisance in the slave States than these free negroes. Are we then to throw open our doors to the importation within our borders of one of the greatest evils connected with the institution? It stands to reason that we should not. Our own self preservation demands of us to exclude them.

Then, when we look upon these two questions, we at once perceive that they are different—that they are entirely distinct. And we can say in all justice that free negroes shall not come in here, and do no wrong when we say we shall not make any appropriation for removing them out of the country.

But this, of course, depends on what we say in regard to negroes holding property. If we say they shall not acquire property, we ought to make an appropriation to enable them to leave the country, and so vice versa. My proposition is, that all fines collected for the violation of the provisions of this article shall be appropriated to the purposes designated. I have no scruples in voting against an appropriation to carry negroes out of the country, provided we do not impose upon them additional disabilities. If we take from them the right to acquire property, we should make not a niggardly but a liberal appropriation, in order to convey them to a place where they can enjoy all those things which are denied them here.

I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Wayne will not be adopted. I say, let all fines arising from the violation of the laws passed to carry out the provisions of this article, be appropriated to the colonization of the negroes in our State.

Mr. BASCOM. Mr. President, I move the previous question.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and
The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention resumed the consideration of the

ORDERS OF THE DAY,

The pending question being upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit).

The amendment was rejected.

The question then was on the motion to fill the blank with the words "two thousand."

The yeas and nays being demanded and ordered, were taken, and resulted—yeas 28, nays 98—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bicknell, Brookbank, Bryant, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Dunn of Jefferson, Hawkins, Hitt, Howe, Kinley, Mather, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Pettit, Ristine, Thomas, Todd, and Wheeler—28.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Barbour, Bascom, Biddle, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bright, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hugin, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, McClelland, McLean, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Work, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—98.

So the motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Putnam.

The amendment was read as follows:

"All fines which may be collected for a violation of any of the sections of this article, or of any law hereafter passed by the Legislature, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this article, shall be appropriated and set apart for the colonization of such negroes and mulattoes as are now in this State, and are willing to emigrate."

The question being taken, the amendment was adopted.

Mr. EDMONSTON. I would like to inquire whether that amendment strikes out the original section?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETTIT. Is that section further amendable?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir, not under the operation of the previous question.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ACQUISITION OF REAL ESTATE BY NEGROES.

The PRESIDENT. The next business in order is section 4.

The section was read as follows:

"After the year 1860, no negro or mulatto shall acquire real estate, or any interest therein, otherwise than by descent."

Mr. PEPPER of Ohio. I move that the section be indefinitely postponed. [Cries of "no," "no."] I do not wish to occupy one single moment upon this subject. I have prepared myself to dispose of the contents of this section so that it need not annoy the Convention any further this session. I am opposed to taking any steps which may have a tendency to degrade the colored race in the country, and for that reason I wish to see this section postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PETTIT. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALPOLE. I shall go against the indefinite postponement. I desire that this section may remain as an inducement to the African to sell out and leave our State. If you strike that section out, he and his posterity will ever remain in Indiana, and I desire that he may have every inducement to leave the State. That, in my opinion, is the best mode of colonization you can adopt.

Mr. KELSO. It ought to be remembered that these negroes are human beings, and that they came here when the State permitted them to come. They have acquired property perhaps as laboriously and as honestly as we have, and I think they ought to be permitted to enjoy it in the same way. Sir, it is no reason, that because his skin is of a different color, we should pass laws to rob them of what property they have honestly acquired. We have already passed a provision in that article prohibiting them from coming into the State, and I think that is going far enough. Now what is the money to be applied to the purposes of colonization? Why, simply fines for a violation of the law as provided by the last section we have passed, and every one knows that this is a source of revenue that will not be very prolific. I care, therefore, very little about that; but to say that the men who are here, and who came amongst us in good faith and in compliance with the law as it then existed, shall not only not be allowed to acquire property by honest labor, but that even that which has been thus acquired, shall not descend to their offspring, is carrying the matter, in my opinion, with a high and tyrannical hand.

Sir, there is no good reason for the adoption of such a provision. Suppose that these people should choose to remain here as long as they live, have they not a right to be here? Did they not come here with our consent? Did they not come in obedience to our laws? Did they not come when it was right and proper that they should come? And what good reason is there that those who have thus come should not be allowed to remain here till it shall please God Almighty to make a proper disposition of them? Sir, there is no reason to say that they shall not increase their property, or that they shall not make a good living for their families, so that they may not become chargeable to the public; nor is there any good reason why they should be forcibly driven out of the State. I say that the section ought to be indefinitely postponed, and indeed that it never ought to have been there.

Mr. MURRAY. It seems to me that a strange want of charity has taken possession of the minds of the members of this Convention. If we could settle the matter whether these people should have been, or be, permitted to land on the North American continent, that, indeed, would be a very different question. But that is not so. They have been brought here in chains. We have wrung the sweat from their brows and the labor from their sinews, and some of the neighboring States which have been enriched by their toil, have made it felony for them to remain within their borders unless they are in a state of slavery; and we are also to pass laws determining that they shall not tread our soil, or breathe the air of heaven.

Mr. President, I am as far from being what is termed an "abolitionist" as any man upon this floor. I have no sympathy with them. But, sir, it is too late in the day now to say that these men, although they do differ from us in the color of their skin, are not human beings. They are moved by the same feelings, actuated by the same motives, and have hearts and sensibilities as other men who are not born in slavery. I feel, sir, that we stand in a position that is peculiarly interesting—that we are in a position in which the world will look upon us as having assumed a stand that was contrary to every feeling of humanity—that we are actually outraging humanity and violating its every principle; and that our course here has been one that we shall hereafter be ashamed to look upon. [Applause.]

It seems to me that we ought not to meddle with this matter in the way proposed—that we ought not to adopt a provision in our organic law prohibiting these men from breathing the very air of heaven which the great God of the Universe has made free alike to all. The edict of Haman against the Jews was not more severe, not more designed to extinguish these people from the face of the earth, than the edict we are here seeking to pass against the negro race. If they are to have no place to live or breathe in—if we are to drive them from every position they may take—whether in Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, Kentucky, or elsewhere—we shall drive them to final extermination. They cannot live without air any more than we. They cannot live without food any more than we. They cannot live without a place on which to rest their wearied limbs any more than we. There is, to be sure, a place belonging to the crown of Great Britain to which they may go; and where they may possibly exist; but how are they to get there? Sir, were they ever so willing to emigrate from other States, and were it necessary for them to pass through ours, we do not even permit them to travel over our soil. We give them no privileges whatever. We do not even give them the possibility of existence. Sir, it seems to me that it is wrong—that it is perfectly outrageous to every principle and feeling of humanity, to take this course.

Mr. SPANN. If I understand the question now before the Convention, it is the fourth section of this article, and reads as follows:

"After the year 1860, no negro or mulatto shall acquire real estate or any interest therein, otherwise than by descent."

Mr. President, I do not understand that the adoption of this section will have the effect to drive any negro or mulatto now here, from any property which he now possesses. The section does not propose to rob any one of them of anything he now has.

Sir, I regard this matter in a political point of view, and in none other. Men may enlist their sympathies in favor of the colored race, merely on the score of religion or humanity. That is one thing; but the question has assumed a political feature, and in that point of view I look at it.

Sir, the whole question may be summed up in a few words—whether we shall, by a provision in this Constitution, encourage the owners of worn-out negroes in other States, to force them into the State of Indiana, where they are to become paupers, and where we shall have to support them. [A voice, "That's the question."]

Now, sir, if any man in this Convention might have sympathies for the black race, I might have them. I was born among them, and raised among them; and I never would deprive them of any privilege which they ought to have. But, sir, that is not the question. When we undertake to leave out of this Constitution this particular section, we yield every iota, as far as we have gone, and we might as well strike out every section we have passed, and leave out every thing we have done, as to leave out this section. Sir, as I have already said, it does not propose to rob them of anything which they now possess. It merely proposes to guard the State of Indiana from the influence of the black pauper population of Kentucky and other States.

And now, sir, I merely wish to add, that I hope this section will not be stricken out; but, sir, I do trust that the succeeding section, which proposes to submit this matter as a separate question to the people, may be stricken out. There is no need of its being submitted to the people as a separate question. If we do anything in regard to this matter, it should be done effectually, and not be left subject to a contingency. I trust, sir, that the section will be retained.

Mr. STEVENSON moved to lay the section on the table.

Mr. PETTIT demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and, being taken, resulted as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bicknell, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Farrow, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Harbott, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Kelso, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Morgan, Mower, Murray, Nave, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Steele, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimble, Watts, Wheeler, Work, Wunderlich, and Mr. President—77.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Barbour, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Butler, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Fisher, Foster, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hardin, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Lockhart, Logan, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Read of Clark, Ristine, Sherrod, Smith of Scott, Spann, Tague, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Zenor—54.

So the section was laid upon the table.

Mr. OWEN. I believe it is now in order to offer an additional section. I offer the following:

"SEC. — There shall be an annual appropriation set apart by law, for the gradual colonization of so many of the Negroes and Mulattoes and their descendants, who may be in this State at the time of the signing of this Constitution, as may desire to leave it; and such appropriation shall be of sufficient amount to colonize, previously to the year 1860, all such Negroes and Mulattoes so desiring to leave the State. After the year 1860, no Negro or Mulatto shall acquire real estate, or any interest therein, within this State, otherwise than by descent."

The PRESIDENT. That will not be in order; the Convention has just voted down a section of similar import.

Mr. OWEN. There is what appears to me to be an essential difference between the provisions of the two sections. The one proposes a certain thing to be done at the time of the signing of the Constitution, the other at the time of its adoption. Besides, there are two other propositions in the section which I have offered, which were not contained in the section which was voted down.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that it is out of order, the Convention having voted down the same principle once to-day. The principle of the sections is the same. A mere alteration of the phraseology, or a question of time, as to whether the thing shall take effect this week or next week, or even this year or next year, does not, in the opinion of the Chair, make such a difference in the question as to allow it to be offered again; at least, not on the same day that it has been rejected. The Chair, however, may be wrong, and the gentleman from Posey can appeal from the decision, if he is not satisfied with it.

DUTY OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN REGARD TO FOREGOING PROVISIONS OF THIS ARTICLE.

The PRESIDENT. The next business in order is section fifth, of the same article.

The section was read, as follows:

"SECTION 5. The General Assembly shall pass laws to carry out the provisions of the foregoing sections of this article, if adopted by the people."

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend by striking out the section, and inserting as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to impose such penalties as will fully carry out the provisions of this article."

Mr. F. said: As this question was fully discussed, in all its bearings, some two months ago, I will not detain the Convention with any remarks. I am much pleased that the first and second sections of this article have passed, and I should have been still better pleased if the third section should have passed, in a modified form. It will be perceived that there is a difference between the section as reported by the committee, and the substitute I have offered.

[Much noise and uproar, and thumping on the desks, and a voice. "We have had speeches enough on this question."]

Mr. F. (continuing). I just wish to be heard in the mere explanation of my amendment; but if gentlemen are determined to clamor me down, I shall keep the floor for at least half an hour. [The noise partially subsided.] The section reported by the committee provides that the article shall be submitted to a separate vote of the people. In the substitute I have offered, it will be seen that I do not want anything of that kind to be done. I want the Convention to take the responsibility of this matter, and not to agitate the people with such questions. Sir, in a much more important measure—a measure for taxing the people—I proposed that it should be submitted to them, and the proposition was rejected by the Convention. I see no necessity for submitting this question to the people, under any circumstances whatever.

Then again, sir, the section I have offered is much stronger than that proposed by the committee. It declares that "It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to impose such penalties as will fully carry out the provisions of this article." Now I know—we all know—that in the Constitution of Illinois a provision was adopted, similar to that reported by the Committee, and that it has never been acted upon to this day. Unless we say that the General Assembly shall impose such penalties as may be necessary for carrying out the article, you may rely upon it, it never will be acted upon. This proposition which I have offered, is more emphatic—more imperative in its nature. These are the reasons which induce me to offer the section: In the first place, that we should take the responsibility of passing the article; and in the second, that we should make the section much more stringent and binding upon the people.

Mr. WATTS moved to amend the original section by striking out the words "if adopted by the people."

Mr. BASCOM moved to lay the amendment of the gentleman from Dearborn on the table.

Mr. WATTS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken, with the following result—yeas 52, nays 78;

YEAS.—Messrs. Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Borden, Bourne, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crumbacker, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Howe, Kent, Kinley, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Mooney, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Pepper of Ohio, Smith of Ripley, Trimble, Work, and Wunderlich—52.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bicknell, Blythe, Bowers, Butler, Chapman, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Gibson, Gootee, Haddon, Harbolt, Helmer, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—78.

So the amendment was not laid upon the table.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment, and a division being called for, there were—yeas 72, noes not counted.

So the amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Monroe to strike out the section and insert the substitute which he has offered.

Mr. KELSO. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

The section as amended was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MOTION TO RE-CONSIDER.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move to re-consider the vote taken on the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Putnam to the third section.

The PRESIDENT. Did the gentleman vote with the majority.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I believe I did.

The PRESIDENT. The rule requires that any one moving to re-consider must have voted with the majority, and the gentleman from Daviess must be certain about it.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Well I am certain about it. The reason why I move to re-consider is that I think we ought to make it incumbent on the Legislature to make an annual appropriation for the colonization of negroes. [Loud cries of "no, no, no."]

The question being taken on the motion to re-consider, it was decided in the negative.

SUBMISSION OF ARTICLE TO A SEPARATE VOTE OF THE PEOPLE.

The PRESIDENT. The next business in order is section six.

The section was read as follows:

"SECTION 6. This article shall be submitted to a separate vote of the people in this form: 'Exclusion and colonization of negroes and mulattoes—Aye, or No.'"

Mr. PRATHER. I move to lay the section on the table.

The yeas and nays being demanded and ordered they were taken with the following result—yeas 58, nays 73.

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Barbour, Blythe, Bourne, Bright, Butler, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cookerly, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Haddon, Helmer, Hogin, Hovey, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Lockhart, Logan, Mathis, May, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Sherrod, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Thomas, Thornton, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—58.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bicknell, Borden, Bowers, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Foley, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Kent, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Tague, Tannehill, Todd, Trimble, Work, and Wunderlich—73.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

Mr. KENT. The Convention having refused to adopt the third section of the article, and also to set apart any sum annually for colonization purposes, I move to strike out the words "and colonization" in the second line of the section. [Cries of "consent, consent."]

Mr. PETTIT. I rise to request that we may have the section re-read which was offered by the gentleman from Putnam. I believe it provides that all sums arising from fines inflicted for violation of any of the provisions of the previous sections, shall be set apart for colonization purposes?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

[The section was again read.]

Mr. PETTIT. I hope the gentleman from Floyd will withdraw his amendment, as the words are necessary to make the section correspond with the section offered by the gentleman from Putnam.

Mr. KENT. I look upon that section as a mere nullity.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was rejected.

Mr. HAWKINS moved to amend the section by striking out all after the word "submitted" in the first line, and inserting "at the time of submitting the Constitution to a separate vote of the people by ballot in this form: 'negro exclusion,' or 'no negro exclusion,' and unless a majority of all the votes given shall be in favor of said exclusion, this article shall not become a part of the Constitution."

Mr. NAVE. I think we have now had quite enough upon the subject of negroes, and I therefore move the previous question.

The call for the previous question was sustained, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being first on the amendment offered by Mr. Hawkins,

Mr. HAWKINS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and, being taken, they resulted as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bicknell, Biddle, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Foley, Garvin, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Kinley, March, Mather, McClelland, McFarland, Milligan, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Smith of Ripley, Thomas, Trimble, Watts, Work, and Wunderlich—44.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Barbour, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Harbolt, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robison, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Todd, Wallace, Walpole, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—87.

So the amendment was not adopted.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Miller of Gibson). The question now is on ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading.

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and, being taken, resulted as follows :

YEAS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Bicknell, Biddle, Borden, Bowers, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Chenoweth, Clark of T., Coats, Cole, Coifax, Crawford, Crumbaker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Farrow, Foley, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tannehill, Thornton, Todd, Trimble, Wallace, Work, and Wunderlich—78.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Barbour, Blythe, Bourne, Bright, Butler, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cookerly, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Edmonston, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Haddon, Helmer, Hogen, Hovey, Jones, Kelso, Lockhart, Logan, Mathis, May, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Ristine, Robinson, Sherrod, Snook, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—57.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

SECTIONS ON THIRD READING.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The next business in the order of the day, are sections on their third reading.

MR. PETTIT. We have got through this thing of negro-ology. [Laughter.] I now move that the Convention adjourn.

The Convention refused to adjourn.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The thirty-third section of article 12, will now be put, upon its third reading.

The section was read providing that the General Assembly may confer upon the boards doing county business in the several counties, such powers of a local, legislative, and administrative character as they may from time to time prescribe.

MR. PETTIT. My object in moving an adjournment a few moments ago, was because the Convention is nothing like full. Now, sir, I move to re-commit the section with instructions to strike out the words "legislative and." The section will then read as follows :

"The Legislature may confer upon the boards doing county business in the several counties of the State, such powers of a local administrative character, as they shall from time to time, prescribe."

A few words now in reference to this matter. I do not believe, Mr. President, that when the Convention adopted that section, it was ever designed to authorize the boards doing county business, to enact local laws. Now, I must be permitted for a moment to turn to a provision which you have already passed. Some six weeks ago, you passed this section :

"The General Assembly shall provide by law, for a uniform mode of doing county and township business."

Now, that is an adopted section, and the section which you yesterday ordered to be engrossed, and which is on its third reading, directly thwarts the one you have passed, and says that a little Legislature of three men in each county may legislate for the counties and townships as they please—that the Legislature may confer upon them authority to make law in every county. Sir, to what will it lead, if this power is delegated? Sir, they may confer upon the county boards the power to regulate the practice of the law, and in chancery—they may confer upon them the power to regulate the marriage ceremony, the explanation of wills, the registry of deeds for transfer of property real and personal—in fact every kind of legislation that should not be conferred upon the county boards, if the section remains as it is.

Now, sir, the great clamor of the people has been for less local and partial legislation, and now you come and say that there may be ninety times as much legislation of a local character as there has been heretofore. And where are your laws? How will they be published? Why, sir, there will be no publication of them at all. They will be recorded in the order books of your county commissioners. They will remain, sir, a dead letter, and will be silent as the tomb, as indeed they ought to be. In less than five years, with that section in your Constitution, you will have a conflict between your sovereign Legislature and the legislatures of your counties. Sir, you need no such law making power in your counties. All that you need in a board of commissioners is power to administer the laws as the Legislature shall make them. I say that that is a point which their power ought never to exceed. No board of county commissioners ever did make laws. All that they have ever done is to carry out the provisions of the law, and there is no necessity for a such a provision.

¶ Now, one word in reference to what fell from the gentleman from Sullivan, yesterday, in reference to road taxes and so forth. Why, sir, what is more easy than to regulate this by a general provision? Nothing in the world. Then again in those counties, where the lands are low and subjected to inundation, what is more easy than to say that the owner of the land shall do it, or that the county board may direct that it should be leveed for the purpose of keeping it from being overflowed? Sir, no law is necessary to be made here by these commissioners. No legislative authority would be conferred. Sir, I would not give one farthing for all the reforms in your Constitution, with that provision in it. I am constrained to say that no advantage which that Constitution could confer upon the State, would or could induce me to go for it if you were to scatter over the State, in addition to the main Legislature, ninety miniature legislatures with power to legislate for one section of land. Let them be, as they should be, executive boards to put in force the provisions of general law.

Mr. WALPOLE (in his seat). Oh, submit the question to the people. [A laugh.]

Mr. SPANN. I voted for this measure yesterday, and for the reason that, as it seems to me, we have abolished the legislative department of the government. There never will be any laws passed by any future Legislature. In the first place, we have provided that the Legislature shall meet only once in every two years. In the second place, that when they do meet they shall not sit for a longer period than sixty days; and in the third place, that it shall require a majority of the whole number of both branches of the General Assembly to pass any bill. There never will be a revenue law passed.

Now, I want the board of the county which I represent, to have the power to do some matters connected with the immediate interests of the people. If the gentleman from Tippecanoe will give the legislative department power to legislate for the State, I will go with him; if not, I will vote here as long as I am able until we obtain for the representatives of the people some powers. Sir, I am opposed to local legislation if we can have any legislation; but it occurs to me that we never can have any legislation with the provision we have in the new Constitution.

Mr. KELSO. For twenty-five years, Mr. President, the people of Switzerland and Dearborn have enjoyed the privilege of regulating their own township business, and the county boards have—

Mr. PETTIT (interrupting). I ask the gentleman from Switzerland whether the county boards have ever made any law? Or whether it has not been their business to put the laws in force made by the Legislature?

Mr. KELSO. I admit they did not make the law, but I can tell the gentleman from Tippecanoe more than that. A proposition was made for the State of Indiana at large, that there should be in each township three township trustees and one clerk, elected by the people, and that they should transact all matters in relation to the repairing, and laying out, and opening, of roads, &c., and it would have saved an immense amount of trouble and expense to the citizens in traveling to the county seats. They refused, however, to adopt this provision, and the people of Dearborn asked that they might be allowed to adopt it themselves. The majority of the Legislature granted the privilege to a single county when they would not make it general, or even unite two counties under the provision. In 1834 that law was improved, since which time the county of Switzerland has been admitted into the arrangement. Now, they are not willing to part with this mode of transacting their business under any consideration. Now, whether we could induce even ten other counties to go with us for such a law, I cannot answer; but it is certain that in the counties of Dearborn, Ohio, and Switzerland, not three persons out of every ten would vote for any Constitution which would prohibit them that privilege. Now, what harm is there in leaving the people of a township the privilege of managing their township business just as they please. How can it affect the State of Indiana that our county should have three trustees in each township?

Mr. PETTIT (in his seat). I don't object to that. I object to the county commissioners having power to make a law.

Mr. KELSO. Who, then, can do it so well?

Mr. PETTIT. The Legislature.

Mr. KELSO. But the Legislature won't do it.

Mr. CHAPMAN. And if they did they would violate the Constitution by passing local laws.

Mr. KELSO. Yes, sir, most certainly. Now, we are not to suppose that the county commissioners are all dishonest, or would interfere with the judiciary, or undertake to direct what should be the practice in our courts of law, or chancery. We expect no such thing. We ask no such thing. Sir, are the men who come after us to be trusted in nothing? Is it to be supposed that we are the only and the last honest men in the State of Indiana. Sir, I believe no such thing. I believe that we may trust the trustees of townships as we have trusted them heretofore. It has been well remarked by the gentleman from Jennings, that we have almost annihilated the Legislature. True it is, that we have complained that we have been over-legislated for, but if we go on at this rate we shall have cause of complaint the other way. Now, I maintain that the section, as we have engrossed it, is right, and I hope it will be retained.

Mr. STEVENSON. I introduced this section, and it appears to me that gentlemen are mistaken as to its import. Now, what does it provide? It is simply a question whether a certain power can be trusted with the Legislature. You confer, by this Constitution, upon the county or township boards, no powers, whatever; and whatever powers are conferred upon them hereafter, are to be conferred by the Legislature. Now, Mr. President, from the feeling which has been manifested, there appears to be in the minds of many gentlemen, a holy horror of the Legislature. We have already said, Mr. President, that the Legislature shall not pass any local laws; that all laws shall be general. Well, sir, it is a necessary consequence of this provision that you should leave discretionary power with the Legislature, that if they find it necessary they may confer certain powers upon the county boards; and there is very little fear of their doing so unless they should find it necessary. Now, is no confidence to be placed in the Legislature in such an emergency? But the gentleman from Tippecanoe says it is wrong even to leave discretionary power with the Legislature to give this power to county boards, and he says that there never has been any such power conferred. If gentlemen will look into the Constitution of other States they will see to the contrary; and from all we can learn, no evil has been experienced by it. There is no danger—nothing to fear; all the horrors that gentlemen conjure up are but phantoms of the imagination.

Mr. WALPOLE. The powers sought to be conferred on the county boards, by the section of the gentleman from Putnam, are just such powers as it has been the every day practice to confer upon private corporations; and what is a county but a corporation? He proposes simply to grant such powers as are necessary to carry out the object for which this corporation was created. You may call it by what name you please, but it is simply those powers which you have ever conferred upon corporations to carry out the ends for which they were designed. Sir, I trust that we will not be threatened or frightened into rejecting this section by the opposition of the gentlemen from Tippecanoe and Clark, who each say, "Pass this, and my voice shall be raised against the Constitution." No, sir; I hope we will not be frightened from our sense of propriety to undo that which has been sanctioned by the experience of thirty-four years, and which was a part of the old Constitution of the State.

Mr. WALLACE. One word on this subject. The gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole) has likened the counties to corporations; and I undertake to say that this does not conflict in the least with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit). A corporation is a creature of the law; and, as a matter of course, it derives its powers from the law, and it has no power to act without the limits of that law. Then what does the gentleman from Tippecanoe ask? Nothing, sir, but what is perfectly reasonable—that the laws that shall govern, and regulate, and control, and give power, if you please, to these counties, shall be uniform. The same power that is given to this or that county, give it to every other county in the State! Let them act under it; and under and within the range and limits of that power, surely they may act, and they can act. But, sir, the proposition of the gentleman from Putnam goes a step further. The attempt is to do what the people of the State have been denouncing for years. The people desire to take the power to enact local laws from your Legislature; but we, by this very act, are taking that power from the Legislature, and giving it to our counties. And, sir, what will be the result? Why you will have ninety different laws, perhaps, in ninety different counties in the State.

Sir, the gentleman from Jennings (Mr. Spann) has spoken of revenue. Does he suppose—and, sir, there is a meaning about it—and has he offered this amendment, and claims its paternity—when he says that we have taken from the Legislature the power to pass a revenue bill, that that power is to be conferred upon the county boards? He says that inasmuch as we have required a majority of the Legislature to pass a revenue bill, that therefore we shall have no revenue bill; and I suppose that his panacea is, that the power to raise revenue where the Legislature may not do it, is to be given to your counties. Is that it? I protest against it. The law, the reason, the argument, is with the gentleman from Tippecanoe. These are corporations, and within the range of their corporate powers they may act; but as a matter of course there is no legislative power there. We give them power to act, but it is under a general law, and it is the same power that enables this county to act, that enables every other county to act, and they all act alike. Sir, if the gentleman from Jennings supposes that an occasion should ever occur when your Legislature shall refuse a revenue bill, let them go back to the people. If it is wrong that they should pass it, the people will sustain them. That power is vested nowhere else; but it would seem that if the Legislature should not happen to do it, they may confer the Legislative power upon the counties to raise revenue! No, sir, I protest against it. My views in regard to this matter are entirely in accordance with those of the gentleman from Tippecanoe. Give them the local, the administrative power—the power of a corporation under the law—but let that law be uniform and general in its character. [A voice, "That's the talk."]

Mr. BIDDLE. When the proposition of the gentleman from Allen, (Mr. Borden,) was offered yesterday, I was at first inclined to favor it, but bestowing reflection upon it last evening, I have come to the conclusion that the gentleman from Tippecanoe is correct, and I hope that his proposition to re-commit will prevail. It is well known that the want of uniformity in our laws was one of the main causes of the calling of this Convention, and now we propose to introduce a section conferring the power to legislate, not on one small body, but on ninety small bodies; and where, then, will be your uniformity? If you give legislative power to a county, you ought to give, also, power to enforce the law, and this, sir, is just like reversing the case, and making it stand upon its apex. It will not do. I regard this as an extremely improper proposition, and I hope the section will be re-committed. I speak the more earnestly, because I favored the proposition yesterday.

Mr. DOBSON. But for the remarks that fell from the gentleman from Marion, I should not have said a single word more upon the subject—that is that the people have been denouncing local legislation all over the State for years gone by. I take a different position. Out of every seven hundred laws that have been passed, five hundred of them have been local. [A voice. "That is what the people have been denouncing them for."] I know that this local legislation has been denounced in different parts of the State, but I am far from thinking that it has been denounced by a majority of the people. Mr. President, I take the ground that government is instituted for the benefit of the people, and that every individual should be benefited by it as far as possible, without injuring his neighbor. But gentlemen say that this power is to be destroyed. I ask them if there is a single power in the government which the people desire to see destroyed? I think not. They do not wish it destroyed, but to change its location. I know that this doctrine of "uniformity" is very pretty in theory, but not so easy in practice; and it appears to me that gentlemen might, with just the same propriety, say "Here is the Congress of the United States, which ought to pass laws for all the States at once, and in every respect," and then your courts could alike get along with decisions much better. It would be easier just to look at the laws of Congress, and be governed by them, and not by your State laws, in any way. But the gentleman is frightened at the idea of having any power of this kind conferred upon the county boards. As the gentleman from Hancock has said a county is nothing but a corporation, and to your Railroad Companies, and your Bank and Insurance Companies, and your city corporations—you give the power to all of them to pass by-laws, limiting them only in this respect, that they shall not be inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or of the State of Indiana; and we do not ask, in this section, for the power to pass any law which is inconsistent with the Constitution, either of the United States, or this State, or even any general law of the State. All we ask is, that the county, as a corporation, shall have as much power as any other corporation. If I ride my horse on your side walk, your city law says I shall be fined. [A voice. "That's right."]

And if I appeal the case to the circuit court, and beat you there on general law, and you carry it up to the Supreme Court, then they look to the corporate law and not to the general law.

Now, if your little towns or cities, comprising five or six hundred people, are to have these corporate privileges, is it wrong that your counties, consisting of as many thousands, should have them? [Applause, and "Hear him."] Sir, when you strike out the power to legislate on local matters, what do you save by it? You want to save the time of the Legislature do you? Sir, it cannot be saving of time at all. I come here, and want a local law passed, and by way of evading the provision of the Constitution, and make its application general, and I tell you that you will have just as many local laws passed, as ever you have had before. But, then, that will not be the idea. Then what will it be? Sir, the moment we make it an organic law that no local law shall be passed, then oppression commences, and I want to meet it on the very threshold. Sir, heretofore, when a man came in and wanted a local law that affected nobody but himself, then he could have it passed; but let the gentleman from Vanderburg come in and present a law which the people do not want, and one which they do want, then we stretch every nerve, either to pass it or reject it, as the case may be. As the gentleman from Jennings has truly said, if you go to restricting the people in this way it is exceedingly doubtful if the time will not soon come when you cannot get a law passed at all. You are going to have everything general, are you? Nothing is to be left to your county boards? They are to have no discretion? [Confusion and uproar.] Oh, I can talk down all your noise, and I shall continue to talk till you quit it. Now, suppose you have a general law for raising county taxes, and the amount is fixed at so much on every hundred dollars of property. Well, suppose your county buildings are burned down, and in order to replace them you may require a tax of 75 cents on every hundred dollars, while the tax in all the other counties, by general law, is but five cents. How are you going to manage it? Sir, nothing can be clearer than that discretion must be left with the county boards in many matters appertaining to local interests.

Mr. GORDON moved the previous question, which was sustained.

The question then, being on the motion to re-commit the section, the yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered and taken, with the following result—yeas 86, nays 43:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Chenoweth, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Logan, Mathis, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Pettit, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimble, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—86.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Blythe, Borden, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Dobson, Farrow, Frisbie, Hardin, Hawkins, Hitt, Hovey, Johnson of Dearborn, Kelso, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McLean, Milligan, Moore, Murray, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Spann, Stevenson, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Work, and Wunderlich—43.

So the motion to re-commit was decided in the affirmative.

On motion of Mr. CARTER.

The Convention adjourned.

SPEECH OF JUDGE BORDEN.

Delivered in the Convention on Friday, January 17, and on Monday, January 20, on the Judiciary System.

Mr. BORDEN, having obtained the floor, said—

MR. PRESIDENT: I rise with the view of taking some part in this discussion. Fully impressed, sir, with the great importance of the subject, and still more sensible of my inability to do it justice; yet, as my pursuits in life have necessarily compelled me, in some measure, to reflect upon it, I will ask the indulgence of the Convention for a short time, while I attempt to give, as briefly as possible, the views which I entertain in regard to this question; and I shall be happy if they should prove to be as satisfactory to others as they appear reasonable to myself.

All, sir, will admit that there is no subject which can more properly command the attention of the intelligent mind than the formation and due administration of the laws of the country, in order that the people may have a pure and equal administration of civil and criminal justice. "In nothing," says a learned and eloquent advocate, "though at an immeasurable distance—in nothing do men on earth so nearly approach the attributes of God, as in the administration of justice." Can there, then, come before this body a subject of greater interest than the proper organization of the judiciary system of the State.

Allow me, sir, in the first place, to observe that I have ever entertained the opinion that that organization of the judiciary system in our State which separates the judges who pronounce the law in the last resort, from those who try the facts in the first instance on the circuit, is a most unfortunate one.

It is true, sir, that, in offering a resolution which I had the honor to submit to the Convention in the early part of the session, in which I proposed a judiciary system for the State, I did not then propose that the judges of the Supreme Court should ride the circuits, and perform what is termed by the lawyers visi prius duty. My reason for not then proposing it was, that it was a system with which the people of the State were not familiar, and I feared it would not receive much encouragement from the committee on courts of justice. But, sir, I believe that if we should now provide for dividing the State into judicial districts—say from five to seven—and leave it with the Legislature to direct the election of from three to five judges in each district, as the business of the people might require, and so arrange it that one of the judges in each district, after having performed circuit duty for several years, should then go on to the Supreme Bench, to form an appellate tribunal, it would be the best system that we could adopt. This, sir, is the plan; and it is something like the plan of the Supreme and Circuit Courts lately adopted in the State of New York, under their new Constitution; and I have been told by a member of the bar, lately from the State of Ohio, that their Constitutional Convention, now in session, will, beyond all doubt, adopt the same system, or one very similar in character to it.

I am aware, Mr. President, that there are objections which I have heard mentioned against that system. One of them is, that the Supreme Judges would necessarily be elected by the districts, and would thus be, in fact, local officers; and it is contended that they should be State officers, as their acts affect the whole people of the State. Sir, I admit that, if the Judges of our Supreme Court are to be elected specially for that purpose, there is much correctness in the position, and I should, in such case, be induced to vote with those who propose to elect them by the voters of the State at large. Yet, sir, so great do I consider would be the advantage of having the judges of our court of last resort to ride the circuits, that I would consent to endure one disadvantage to procure the greater good.

Sir, one of the greatest errors into which the public mind has fallen in requiring two sets of judges—one set for the Supreme Bench, and the other for the circuits—is, that the Judges of the Circuit Courts should be paid smaller salaries; and thereby have the people of our State, in many instances, been deprived of the services of men as Circuit Judges who stand at the head of their profession in the various parts of the State. Sir, the judge who tries a cause in the first instance, in your counties, should, in my opinion, be as able a jurist as any Judge of your Supreme Court, who finally pronounces the law here in your capital. We all know that the Judge on the circuit decides more causes than the Judge on the appellate tribunal. But, sir, this is not all. The Circuit Judge has to decide, in the first place, all the points that your Supreme Judge is ever called to act upon; and besides these, many more that are never raised in your court of last resort. Sir, he is frequently called upon, while out upon the circuit, to decide the most important and intricate questions of law off-hand, without knowing beforehand what points will be presented for his decision, generally upon very imperfect arguments of counsel, at a distance from his books; and even if he had them, neither the time nor the opportunity for full consultation and examination upon the subjects. How is it, on the other hand, with the Judges of the Supreme Court? They always have well stored libraries at hand to consult; they are not harrassed with questions of fact, and other incidental and perplexing matters connected with the trial at the circuit; but on all occasions have the points of law first argued before them by able men, and then an abundance of leisure to deliberate upon, and maturely to consider every point before they are compelled to decide a question. Now, sir, I contend that, if either should be required to be more able, in point of intellect and legal learning, than the other, it certainly should be the Circuit Judge; and if the people of our State would take this view of the subject, it would justify us in adopting a system that would secure the services, as far as possible, of the same men both to ride the circuits and to sit upon the Supreme Bench.

Again, sir, I have another reason why I would be pleased to see a system adopted which would compel the judges of our appellate court occasionally to take their turn at circuit duty, and that is, that it would compel them to mix with and become acquainted with the bar and the people in the different parts of the State. I do not mean by this that our judges should mingle with their fellow-citizens to obtain their opinions as to what should be their decision. I consider that nothing can be a greater curse to a country than to have popularity-hunting judges, unless, indeed, sir, as was once remarked by one of the ablest judges that ever lived, it should be "that popularity which follows, and not that which is sought after." What I desire to express is, that, by doing circuit duty, the court would not become, as it were, insulated from the profession and the people; but that, by holding the Circuit Courts and mixing with the people, they would have an opportunity of seeing practically applied the rules of law and evidence laid down by themselves in the Supreme Court. Sir, I cannot but think that this would have a good tendency; for we all know that it is natural to the human mind to theorize too much; and when you cloister your judges up here in a room in your Capitol, and, as it were, completely swathe them with paper records, can we be surprised that they should become altogether too philosophical and speculative in their inquiries? That is to say that there can be too much theory, and too little practical talent in these decisions; or, as some would express it, too little common sense. Sir, I know of no more effectual way to cure this admitted evil, than to require them to mingle with the bar and the people, in order that they may learn some "common sense," and incorporate it in their decisions.

I have often heard the question asked, how it was possible that twelve judges formerly, in England, and fifteen now—for it is only within a few years past that they added three additional judges to the Inferior Courts in Westminster Hall—could perform such a vast amount of labor on circuit, and then pronounce such able decisions, which are now, as they have been for centuries past, the wonder and admiration of the civilized world. Sir, it is the opinion of the greatest lawyers of that country, that it is entirely owing to their nisi prius system; and hence their most eminent statesmen have constantly resisted every effort for the separation of the judges of their highest courts from the performance of circuit duty, for the reason, as they contend, that the frequency of the labors of these judges in trying causes at the circuit with juries, is better calculated to produce that degree of ability and promptness, which are essentially necessary to insure the dispatch of business at the circuit, and at the same time to produce able decisions in their appellate courts. For my own part, Mr. President, I am perfectly satisfied that the performance of duty on the circuit, as I have already said, will do much to make the decisions of your Supreme Court more practical in their character; and I as fully believe that the knowledge which they would acquire upon the Supreme bench, would enable them to decide more promptly and correctly at the circuit. Sir, when the judges are required to come together as an appellate tribunal, they would necessarily be compelled to hear important questions argued before them by the most distinguished members of the bar in our State. After hearing the arguments, they would, of course, take time for full consideration and careful examination, previous to giving their decision; and, sir, not only would the knowledge which they would thus necessarily acquire, but the position which they would occupy give weight in the estimation as well of the profession as of the public, to their determinations at the circuit; and, in my opinion, this would tend materially to lessen the number of appeals and writs of error—one of the greatest evils which the present system is calculated to foster and encourage.

I have just alluded, Mr. President, to the immense amount of business transacted by these fifteen judges in our mother country. I have heard it said that they really do more business than some fifty judges of the United States Courts, including the judges of all the courts of last resort in the different States of the Union; and I cannot but think that the example of that country where this system has prevailed for many centuries, and the experience of the State of Massachusetts, where the judges of their highest courts have always held the circuits—and allow me to say whose decisions are respected as most excellent authority wherever the common law is the basis of their system—should be satisfactory to the mind of any one that this method of organizing the judiciary system is the best possible plan that has ever been adopted in any government. It will also be recollected that this system prevailed in the State of New York for many years previous to 1821; and, sir, it was during this time that her juridical reputation became known far and wide. Their practice under that system, was, when important points of law were on the circuits, to reserve them for argument before a full bench, and the case proceeded, the facts were ascertained by a jury, and when the question of law was argued, and mature deliberation given to it, the whole case was then finally disposed of. But, sir, in an evil hour that State consented to separate the judges of the appellate court from the circuit. They were relieved from circuit duty, and separate judges were provided to hold the circuit courts. And what was the result? Sir, after a quarter of a century's experience—after their decisions had fallen in the estimation of the profession throughout the Union, it was found necessary to retrace their steps; to call another Convention, and, in a great measure, to restore the same system, as it existed previous to the Convention of 1821.

However, sir, I do not presume that either the prejudices of the profession in this State, or the habits of the people, would authorize us in the establishment of such a system; nor would it probably be suffered to remain long enough, if thus organized, to test its practical utility. I take it for granted, therefore, that we shall continue the present system, which provides a separate appellate tribunal, having original jurisdiction, and create separate judges to hold the Circuit Courts. I will, therefore, at once proceed to give my views on the system reported by "the committee on Courts of Justice." And, sir, the first objection which I have to that system is, that it leaves the power in the General Assembly, to create and abolish Courts of Justice, at their pleasure. The first section of the report provides, that "the judicial power of this State shall be vested in one Supreme Court, in Circuit Courts, and in such other inferior Courts as the General Assembly may establish." It is to this latter clause that I object. Sir, I came here instructed, to propose and advocate that all Courts that are to exist in our State shall be named in the Constitution, thereby giving them a more permanent character. The object of this was to make the judiciary an independent department of this government. I am well aware, sir, that the theory is, that it is now such, under our present Constitution; but allow me to inquire, whether that which is held out so well in theory, is in fact actually carried out in practice?

Sir, not only has the Legislature the power, but they have in fact exercised it, of creating and abolishing, at their will, the Courts of this State. And not only so, but it is to them that the Judges must look to raise the necessary ways and means to pay them; and they can if they please, and actually have, reduced the salaries of these officers. Now, sir, I must say, if the theory of our government is correct—if we believe that it is a sound principle in the organization of our political institutions, that there should be three great departments of the government, I hope that this Convention will endeavor, as far as it possibly can, to make each department independent of the other two. I can see no reason why we should not make the judicial department as completely independent of the executive and legislative, as these two are of it. Now, sir, in order to secure this, several things are necessary. In the first place, the Constitution which we are about to frame should, as I have intimated, prescribe and clearly enumerate all the Courts, both of general and local jurisdiction; and no new Court should ever be created, or old one abolished, by the legislative department of the government; and in the next place, sir, the judiciary should not owe its existence to either of the other two departments of the government. That is to say, that I would not have the Judges appointed, either by the Governor or the Senate, much less would I have them elected by the General Assembly. On the contrary, I hold that they should be elected, like the other two departments of the government, directly by the people themselves.

We say in our old Constitution, and have provided in our new one, that the executive power shall be vested in one officer, who shall be styled "the Governor of the State." We do not vest the legislative department with power to divest this officer of any of his appropriate duties, and vest them elsewhere. We confer the power of making laws on the General Assembly; and no part of these powers can, with any propriety, be transferred to either of the others. The powers of each are fixed, and we particularly enumerate, in the Constitution, the officers which are to constitute each. And now, sir, let me make the inquiry, what reason is there that the same principle should not prevail in the Constitution, in regard to the judiciary? Sir, I presume that no one will contend here for a moment, that the judiciary department of the government is not quite as important to the people of this State, as either of the other two. If the report of the committee on the organization of Courts of Justice is adopted, the General Assembly will be empowered to create and abolish at their pleasure, such inferior Courts as they may deem proper. Under this power they may, and I have no doubt will, continue the present probate system. Sir, it occurs to me that experience has rendered it necessary that we should be hereafter more explicit. Why, sir, what have we seen the General Assembly of this State do, under this power vested in them by the Constitution? They have, as I have already said, inflicted the present probate court system upon the people of this State, which is now generally admitted to be the worst possible system that could have been devised by the wit of man. If I recollect aright, I have heard it said, and I think upon this floor, that if a committee of men had been elected to devise means by which the estates of decedents could be most effectually swindled and defrauded; they would have adopted our present probate system, in preference to any other. But, sir, this is not all. In some of the counties of this State, they have created "Courts of Common Pleas," and have vested them with concurrent jurisdiction with the Circuit Courts. In one county they make the clerk of the Circuit Court act as the clerk of the new Court. In another county, a Court of the same name has been established, and the incongruous duties of clerk and judge are vested in the same officer. Now, with great deference to the opinions of others, I view this whole proceeding as entirely wrong.

It is, however, perfectly in keeping with, and may be considered part and parcel of, the same system that has rendered our laws so uncertain, and made them a by-word and a reproach to us as a State. We pass one set of laws for one county, and another and a different set for another county. Sir, I have never been able to discover a good reason why the same kind of courts that administer the laws of the State on the Ohio should not do it north of the Wabash. I cannot but think that it is our duty to deprive the Legislature of the power to create so many different courts with a variety of names, a diversity of jurisdiction, and diverse forms of procedure; and I would deem it a useless waste of time to detain this Convention for even a short time in pointing out the many objections that exist to such a system. There should be but one harmonious system, known by the same name, in every county in the State, from Posey to Steuben, with the same forms of proceeding and practice, whose jurisdiction could be understood by all.

But, sir, the greatest objection to investing the legislative department with the power to create courts is, that if they can create them, they must necessarily have the power to abolish them; and thus the power is placed in two of the departments of the government to legislate the third out of office. Sir, we may talk as much as we please about three distinct departments of the government, each independent of the other. Practically, I think no such independence can be said to exist, while the Legislature can exercise the power of creating and destroying courts at their pleasure. Can we, sir, if the judges are in fact rendered practically dependent upon the Legislature, can we expect that our ablest men at the bar will relinquish their practice and take seats upon the bench, when, as it were, at a breath, the courts may be abolished, and they turned out of office? In my opinion in order to secure the requisite independence of the judges, it is necessary that their salaries should be permanently fixed in the Constitution; or at least that such a sum should be there named, below which the Legislature should not have power to reduce them. Now, sir, I respectfully suggest whether it is not wrong; perhaps I might go further and use a still stronger expression, and say, dishonest, to induce men to take the office of a judge of your supreme or circuit courts, to separate himself from his clients, and when he has thus relinquished his practice and deprived himself of his means of support, to compel him, by reducing his salary, to resign and leave the bench; and I ask whether any system which permits such things to be done is not calculated to make him entirely too dependent?

Again, sir: I submit whether it is right and proper to submit any man to the test of deciding that a law passed by the legislative and executive departments of the government is unconstitutional, when the effect perhaps will bring them into collision, and thus to deprive him and his family of their means of subsistence. Now, sir, I do not doubt that many judges could be found in our State of sufficient virtue and independence who would not hesitate for a moment to do their whole duty, and that, too, at all hazards. But should we thus place them within the power of the legislative and executive authority? Sir, it has been often said, and with great truth, that the judicial department of our government is the balance wheel that must regulate, as it were, the whole machinery of the Constitution, and hence it would seem to me that we should all desire to make it independent of the legislative and executive departments, at least in regard to the salaries of its officers.

Now, sir, you may erect as many parchment barriers here as you please, to protect the rights of the people, and to preserve a proper equilibrium between the different departments of the government, but unless you establish an independent and provide for an able judiciary, to stand by and uphold your Constitution, I am convinced, however wisely it may be constructed in other respects, it will prove in the end only a rope of sand. Hence, sir, I am induced to believe that if the report of the committee is adopted, it will be incorrect to say that your judiciary is independent; for not only the terms of their office but the price of their labors will be at the mercy of the Legislature, and the judiciary department will never, in fact, become what it purports to be, an independent department of the government.

I come now, sir, to another proposition which I deem necessary to the independence of the judiciary, and that is, "that the judges of the State, from the highest to the lowest, should be elected by a direct vote of the people. Sir, I am fully convinced that every motive of sound policy as well as of expediency, requires us to provide for their election by the people themselves. This, sir, is the only safe course, if we desire to elevate and place that department above and beyond the control of the other branches of the government. But, sir, argument is unnecessary to sustain the propriety of this measure, as I have no doubt, from what I have heard generally expressed, this Convention will, by nearly a unanimous vote, decide in favor of the report of the committee upon this point.

There is, however, sir, one more provision which I deem necessary to secure the independence of the judiciary, and that is, that they should be elected for a reasonable term. While I am favorable to the judges being elected by the people, and although I have by my votes sustained the principle of short terms, both in respect to the legislative, executive, and administrative offices, yet I am inclined to think that there is not the same necessity for a frequent recurrence to the people in the election of judicial officers, as there is in the case of those which might be considered more strictly of a political character.

Judges, sir, were elected for a different purpose; and so far as it is consistent with the principles of our government, I am inclined to think that the temptation should not be held out to them to take too active a part in political matters. Sir, I find, from conversing with various members of this body, that there is considerable disagreement among us in respect to the term for which our judges should be elected. Some have proposed as short a term as four years, and others have gone farther and suggested that they should not be elected for more than two years. On the contrary, others have expressed the opinion that the judges of the Supreme Court, at least, should be elected for eight years. The first, I certainly think too short a term, and, perhaps, the last would be considered by many as being entirely too long. It is true, that the State of New York, which has lately adopted a system of judiciary, elected by the people, has provided that both the judges of the court of appeals, and the circuit judges should be elected for eight years.

This term of service has been agreed upon there after a most thorough and able investigation of the whole matter by the gentlemen who composed the Convention; and for my part, I am inclined to think that six years is as short a term as this Convention should think of inserting in the new Constitution as the period of service of the Judge of the Supreme Court, especially as we seem all to agree that they shall be elected by the people. If the judges are elected for too short a period, they will be constantly tempted to keep an eye upon their re-election. It is natural that they should do so, and I think that sound policy should dictate that they should be kept as free as they can be reasonably kept from temptations of this kind by extending the term of their service. There is however a just and proper medium in this matter; and while I would not consent to adopt a term of office as long as that adopted in the State of New York—eight years—I am not inclined to reduce it to three or four years. If, sir, we desire to secure the ablest jurists in this State upon the supreme bench, is it not obvious that men who have a large practice which they have secured by their great ability and long experience in the profession, will not easily be induced to abandon it and accept of the office, when proposed to them, if their term of service is made too short. Let me ask whether a short term of office and low salaries will induce my friend from Jefferson, (Mr. Bright,) and the distinguished gentlemen from Wayne and Laporte, (Messrs. Newman and Niles,) to relinquish the lucrative practice which they are each known to enjoy and take the office when there are so many forbidding circumstances connected with the acceptance of the trust? Sir, do we not all know that the mere going through a severely contested election would of itself be sufficient to deter many of the worthiest men in the State from ever consenting even to become candidates for such a situation, even when they knew they could be elected? And when there was about an equal chance or even a possibility of defeat, how many more would be deterred from entering upon a canvass? Sir, there are but few men who are willing to have the reputation of being rejected by their fellow citizens for any situation; and for my part I can see no way to induce such men to take the office except by giving them a sufficient salary and extending their term of service to a reasonable length. Sir, if we add to the impediments which must exist in any system, a very short term of service, my word for it, the men who will most likely become candidates will be, of all others, the last that should be elected; and I have my serious fears that with all these obstacles staring them in the face, our best men—those on whom this great, may I not add, this sacred trust should alone be conferred, will retire from the contest, and none but the most unworthy be selected to preside in the highest judicial tribunals of the State.

I desire now, sir, very briefly to allude to the proposition which has been so strenuously contended for here, that the judges of the Supreme Court should be elected by districts. I have already intimated my great desire to have a system adopted by which the judges of our court of appeals should be compelled to do circuit court duty for a time at least, before they enter upon the supreme bench, and that for one, I was willing to forego the principle of electing them by the State at large, provided this object could be effected. But as I have very little, perhaps I may say no hope of seeing this system adopted, owing to the causes which I have already intimated, I will ask the attention of the Convention to that part of the report of the committee on courts of justice. I much prefer that the Judges of the Supreme Court should be elected by the voters of the whole State, as has been reported by the minority of the committee, and as it was proposed to amend it by the Chairman of the judiciary committee (Mr. Pettit). The judges of the Supreme Court as at present organized, as has been well remarked by that gentleman, are now State officers, being nominated by the Governor who is elected by the whole State. I have therefore thought that sound policy as well as true principle required that they should continue State officers, and not become mere local or district officers as they would be if they were elected by districts. I think that as these officers were to serve the people of the whole State, so the electors of the whole State should have a voice in choosing them. I cannot, sir, but think that in the court of last resort, the majesty—if I may be permitted so to call it—of the whole people of Indiana should be represented; in other words that the entire State should be represented and not mere districts and localities, as proposed by the majority of the committee. I think if they were elected by districts there would be too much reason to fear that the judges of this court would be influenced by mere local feelings and prejudices and that they will not consider themselves as they should always do, as acting for the whole State.

Sir, if the Judges of our Supreme Court had the making of the laws of the State, then there would be some reason for electing them by districts. I perhaps would be bound to support it; for in providing for the organization of the Legislature, it is well known that I went for the single district system, and expressed a desire to bring the representative as directly home to the voters as possible. But, sir, the Judges of our Courts are not called upon to make, but to expound the laws; and while I can see great propriety in the principle of representation in making a rule of action to govern society, I can see no possible necessity of the principle in declaring what the rule is. I am, and expect I shall ever continue to be, opposed to what is termed judicial legislation; and although it has been boastingly said, by one of England's greatest judges, that he as a judge in his day, had made more law than "King, Lords, and Commons," yet I hope, that if not immediately, the time will come, when we shall have a code that will entirely dispense with the necessity of judicial legislation. Sir, I believe further, that the election of the Judges by districts will not give them that respect in the public mind, which they would have if elected by the whole State.

Sir, I fear that the election as is proposed in the majority report will have a tendency to sink them in public estimation; but on the contrary, if they are elected by the whole State it is probable that none but those whose reputation is as wide as the limits of the State itself will ever be put in nomination, and the consequence will be that their decision will receive that profound respect which it is necessary they should receive.

Sir, there is another amendment which I desire to see introduced in case the Convention should determine that the judges of the Supreme Court should be elected by the whole State, and I have accordingly prepared an amendment which I intend to offer at the proper time, which will require the Legislature so to class the judges of the Supreme Court that not more than one of them shall go out of office in the same year. Sir, the Legislature could so regulate this matter that not more than one should be elected at the same general election, in case we adopt the system of annual elections; or, on the contrary, should we adopt biennial elections, then not more than two should be elected at the same election, and it could be so regulated that not more than one of those elected should take his seat in the same year. Now, sir, this regulation, in my opinion, will tend much to prevent those sudden revolutions in the bench of our highest judicial tribunal, and which it seems to me it will readily be admitted, ought not to occur. It will be recollected that some thirty or more years since, in the State of Ohio, the General Assembly of that State passed a law which their Supreme Court felt bound to decide was unconstitutional. That decision created a most tremendous excitement. The Legislature was elected the next year in the midst of that excitement, and an impeachment was gotten up against the bench, and had their terms of office all expired at the same time, it is well known that not one of those judges could have been elected by the General Assembly, in whom the authority was then vested to elect. Now, sir, what was the final result? In the course of another year the public mind became more calm; reason resumed its sway; and one of them, the ancestor of my friend from Huntington, (Mr. Murray,) was elected governor of the State, showing most conclusively that "on sober second thought, the people are always right."

Sir, I do trust that never in Indiana shall we witness the whole supreme bench thrown out of office by a momentary excitement of this kind, and to avoid this I trust we shall so regulate this matter that they may go out by rotation.

Again, sir, I trust a clause will be inserted in the Constitution that the judges of the Supreme and Circuit Courts shall not during the time for which they were elected, be eligible to any other than a judicial office; and in my opinion, sir, it should go further, and declare, as in the new Constitution of New York, that all votes cast for either of them for any other than an office of that kind shall be void. Unless we go thus far, it will do no good whatever, as the judge may resign before the election comes on. Sir, it should also extend to officers of the United States as well as to State officers; and unless this is done, your Circuit Judges will be eligible to a seat in Congress.

I would be pleased, sir, also, to see a provision requiring the Judges of the Supreme Court to hold a term of that Court once in every year in each Circuit. There are now thirteen circuits, and this could be easily done. Some point might be designated by the Legislature where it would be convenient for the members of the bar to convene in the circuit, and the court should be compelled to hear all causes arising in that circuit.

But, sir, if this is thought to be too laborious, then, sir, let us require them to hold at least one term of the court in each judicial district. Then, sir, if we have five judges of the Supreme Court, as seems to be contemplated by the report of the committee, there will be five districts, and, of course, five terms of the court in each year; and if there should be only three judges, then three terms of the court. The judges of the Supreme Court now only hold two terms in each year; and I am satisfied that this is not a sufficient number of terms to insure the prompt dispatch of the business which may come before it. In the State of Ohio the Supreme Court holds one term each year, in every county in the State; and, I believe that in that State there are some seventy counties. And, sir, I would prefer this plan, if it could be done; but the number of counties is so great in this State that it would be utterly impossible for them to perform the labor; but, sir, they can hold at least one term in each judicial circuit, and they should be required to do so. Sir, in my opinion, there never was a wiser provision than that which requires that all the judicial business of a people, as far as it is possible to do so, should be transacted in their midst. Let, then, the cases be annually decided where they arise in the districts; and I believe that such an arrangement would not only be profitable to the court, but advantageous to the bar, and would tend much to command respect from the people.

A few words now, sir, with regard to the probate business, then I am done with this subject. I think I see a disposition on the part of some of the members of this Convention, to avoid the responsibility of abolishing the present probate system, and of devolving the duty upon the Legislature of either continuing it or of establishing some other system in its place. Now, sir, I regret to see this. I think we should not, under a clause empowering the Legislature, to create inferior courts, shirk this question. No, sir, let us face it, and either throw the mere ministerial duties of the probate office into the clerk's hands, and vest the most important business, such as orders for the sale of infants' property, &c., &c., in the circuit judge, or else let us create, as has been proposed by the gentleman from Floyd, (Mr. Thornton,) a county judge, and devolve the probate duties upon him. Sir, we can do one of two things—either we can make the clerk do all the ministerial duties—such as are done by the register of the orphans' court in Pennsylvania, (in a manner which has been described to me, for I will readily admit that I am not particularly familiar with the probate business of that State,) or the surrogate in New York, and require the judge of the circuit to attend only to the most important matters; or we can create a county court, and vest the probate jurisdiction in that officer. In the State of New York, the county judge is elected for four years, who holds the county court and disposes of appeals, certioraries, from justices of the peace, tries all offenses, except where the punishment is either death or confinement in the State Prison, and disposes of much minor business that would otherwise occupy the attention of the circuit court. The clerk of the county is clerk of this court, but the judge also does the probate business, and in doing it he keeps his own record and receives the fees for it. Sir, if we were to adopt this system, we could require the probate judge to keep his office open every day for the transaction of probate business. He could hold a court on the first Monday in each month, to hear motions and grant injunctions, to prepare business for the terms of the court, and once in four months in the smaller, and as often as every second month in the larger, counties, he could hold a regular term of the county court for the dispatch of business. Sir, were we to adopt this system, it would relieve the circuit court of much small business, especially of petit criminal offenses, that now delay its action in more important matters, at the great cost of persons having business to transact in that court. If you create this court and throw all the unimportant business into it, then you can safely reduce the present number of circuits to ten. But, sir, I hope you will not establish a county court unless at the same time you make some ample provision calculated to secure the services of a judge of sufficient competency and integrity to do the duties of the office well. In New York, in addition to the fees paid for doing the probate business, the county boards are authorized to pay the county judge, by the year, a certain sum out of the county treasury, for holding the county court, and, sir, the effect has been to bring upon the bench of the county courts, some of the ablest judges in that State. And, sir, in a great number of the counties where the county boards have voted a fair salary, they have obtained by this means, men of ability; and the bar and the people are constantly disposed to throw all their business into the county court. All admit that the system has worked well there, and I see no reason why it should not work well here also.

Sir, I see by the report of the Auditor of State, lying upon our tables, that the amount paid out of our State treasury to the judges of the Supreme, circuit, and probate courts, amounts to about twenty thousand dollars per annum. If we add to this the amount paid out of the county treasuries to the associate judges, and in some of the counties the additional sum also paid to the probate judges, including what is paid in several of the circuits out of the county treasuries to the president judges, for holding adjourned and special terms of their courts, together with the pay of the judges of the "common pleas" in Tippecanoe and Marion counties, the whole amount of the present cost of our judiciary system, will be a little over thirty thousand dollars. Now, sir, if we provide for five judges of the Supreme Court, and fix the salaries of each at $1500, this will take $7,500, and will leave $22,500, which would employ twenty-two circuit judges at $1000 each, and would thus be a saving to the State of $500. Should we fix upon the number of twenty-two judges, the circuit of each judge would consist of from three to five counties, depending upon their size, and the amount of business in each. Then, sir, by devolving upon the clerks all the duties performed by the surrogate in N. Y., the circuit judge could easily perform his duties, and hold in each of the small counties in his circuit three, and in the larger counties four, terms in each year, if the business required it. But, sir, whatever system we may adopt, I sincerely trust that the court or officer which is to have charge of the probate business will be required by law to keep his court open daily for the transaction of this kind of business.

In conclusion, I must again, on behalf of those I represent here, enter my protest against the further continuance of the present probate system, and I hope the Convention has the courage to meet the question fairly, and decide what system shall in future take its place. And, sir, more than all do I trust that we shall organize a judicial system that will secure to the people of the State the prompt and certain administration of justice—one that will not be subject to sudden changeability, but such an one as will give permanency and stability to our laws, by keeping up a uniformity in the decisions of our highest judiciary tribunal. Sir, I have already alluded to several things which I deem essentially necessary to secure these results, and I trust that they may receive the approval of this Convention.

FRIDAY, JAN. 24th, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. ———.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. PEPPER of Crawford, from the select committee on the subject of aliens holding and transmitting property, reported certain sections on that subject.

The sections were read a first time, and passed to a second reading to-morrow.

Mr. OWEN. In pursuance of notice heretofore given, I offer the following resolution to amend the rules:

Resolved, That the rules be so altered that it shall be in order, immediately after an article shall have been disposed of, to introduce an additional section.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. I have but a single objection to make to this proposed amendment of the rules, and that is, that, after we get through with an article, there will be no end to amendments that will be offered. I prefer the rule as it is.

Mr. OWEN. In reply to the gentleman from Tippecanoe, I have this to say: that, if that be the objection, it is no objection at all. For, whenever there is an article that contains more than one section under consideration, there is no difficulty, at present, about offering as many amendments, in the shape of additional sections, as you please. The object of this amendment is, that, when there is an article which has but one section, the same opportunity to offer amendments shall be afforded. If any gentleman can tell me why there should not be, I will yield the point.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. I understand that, under the present rule, it is in order to offer a new section when the article is up for consideration. I can see no necessity for the amendment.

The question was taken on the adoption of the proposed amendment, and it was, upon a division—ayes 55, noes 32—decided in the affirmative.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The Convention then proceeded to the consideration of the orders of the day,

The first thing in order being the section which provides for the appointment of three commissioners to revise and amend the rules of practice of the courts, and to prepare a code of laws, &c., on its third reading.

Mr. HOVEY moved to re-commit the section with instructions to substitute the following:

"The General Assembly, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall revise and simplify the rules of practice and pleadings in the courts of this State, or shall appoint commissioners for that purpose."

Mr. H. said, I shall not detain the Convention with any remarks. I considered myself something of a reformer before I came here, but I find myself entirely distanced in regard to reforms. If gentlemen will give me the yeas and nays upon this proposition, I shall be satisfied.

I will merely say, that, by the section as it now stands, the report of the commissioners will be the law of the land, without any further action on the part of the General Assembly. There is no revising power; and further than this, you are proposing to abolish, by Constitutional provision, the distinction between law and equity. I am willing that the experiment shall be tried as a law, but not as a Constitutional experiment. And I am not willing to fasten upon the State three commissioners for all time to come.

I hope the yeas and nays will be ordered.

Mr. READ of Clark moved to amend the instructions, by striking out "three commissioners," and inserting, "a commissioner."

I recollect, said Mr. C., when our revised code was formed, we had three commissioners, and about half a dozen clerks employed. That code cost the State about twenty thousand dollars, when the whole work might have been done by one commissioner, with a sufficient number of clerks. I am in favor of the proposition that is contained in the section as reported by the committee; I am in favor of abolishing the distinction between law and equity practice; but I am fearful of the great expense of these three commissioners. I think, sir, that one commissioner, with a sufficient number of clerks, will be all that is requisite in order to effect the object.

Mr. ROBINSON demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

The question being on the amendment to the instructions, it was, upon a division—yeas 66, noes not counted—decided in the affirmative.

The question then being on the motion to re-commit with instructions,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 65, nays 63—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Barbour, Beard, Bidle, Blythe, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Chen-owith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Foster, Frisbie, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Harbolt, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Kelo, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Kinley, Lockhart, Mathis, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Moore, Morgan, Murray, Nave, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Robinson, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Todd, Watts, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—65.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Borden, Bourne, Bright, Bryant, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Coats, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Fisher, Foley, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Hitt, Hogin, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Logan, Maguire, March, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Owen, Pettit, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Snook, Smith of Scott, Thornton, Trimble, Wheeler, Wiley, and Work—63.

So the section was re-committed.

The section which provides that the Legislature shall not pass local laws, in several cases enumerated, such as regulating the duties of justices of the peace, regulating the practice of law, providing for granting divorces, in relation to juries, roads, &c., was read a third time.

Mr. BLYTHE moved to re-commit the section, with instructions to amend by inserting the following:

"The General Assembly shall, by special enactment, fix the route and termini of all railroads."

It seems to me, said Mr. B., that some provision of this kind ought to be made for a double purpose. In the first place, in the construction of railroads throughout the State, that injustice may be prevented; and next, that we may save ourselves from being placed under the absolute control of our neighbors. The General Assembly, it seems to me, although they may provide general laws conferring powers on corporations, should reserve to itself the right to fix the route and termini of railroads.

Mr. SHOUP. I move to amend the instructions by inserting the word "private."

Mr. NILES. It is with some reluctance, and after a good deal of reflection, that I have made up my mind to vote for an amendment similar to that just offered by the gentleman from Vanderburg. I think I may safely say that I am as decidedly as any gentleman on this floor, in favor of free competition, in every lawful pursuit, whenever it may be permitted without violence to public or private rights.

A railroad company possesses high privileges, in being authorized, at their own pleasure, even on making just pecuniary compensation, paid in advance or otherwise, to appropriate the private property of any individual. A man may be strongly attached to a particular spot of ground as his home. It may possess, to his mind, a peculiar value, which no jury would see or appreciate like himself. A railroad company must be authorized, for the public good, and whenever the public good imperatively requires it, to destroy the peculiar value of such a spot, by running a road through it in any direction—even if it be through the man's dwelling house. It is true that we have a general plank road law at present, under which a company may condemn and pass through any man's land at pleasure, and no great evils are experienced under it. But a plank road company, which is commonly a neighborhood affair, with a small amount of capital, could seldom have a sufficient motive to run through a valuable farm or dwelling-house, so as to destroy it; and a plank road is generally a benefit, rather than an injury to the land through which it passes. A railroad company, on the contrary, is often a powerful corporation, wielding a large capital, and to which the assessed cash value of the right of way in any direction, through any man's land, is a small matter. A railroad running through a farm, would destroy its value to many owners. Unlike a plank road, it can be used by no private individual. The company's steam horses alone can travel upon it. Now, sir, one strong reason, with me, for preferring to reserve to the General Assembly the power to fix the route and termini of railroads, is, that I am hardly willing to intrust, indiscriminately, to any and all associations, whether of our own citizens or of foreigners, such extraordinary powers. The power to take private property for public use, is one of the highest attributes of State sovereignty. Whenever the public good requires its exercise, whether by the State directly, or by an association such as a railroad company, organized under its laws, I would give the right on just and reasonable terms, and with no feelings of hostility to corporations. But, is it anything more than a reasonable safe-guard against the abuse of such a power by a railroad association, to require that they obtain the special assent of the Legislature before building their road? All roads would still be built under the same general law, and would have precisely equal rights and privileges. The Legislature would simply retain the power to say on what routes and between what points such roads were required for the public good. What can the most devoted friend of equal rights find to condemn in the reservation of such a power to the people's representatives? We shall do well to see to it, that in our heated zeal for the largest liberty, we do not needlessly permit the strong to trample upon the weak.

But again, sir: there is another strong reason for reserving this power to the Legislature, in the greater security which it will give to capital invested in public works. The value of a railroad as an investment may be destroyed by the building of another parallel road, and threats to build the second may effectually prevent the building of the first. Even after men have invested their capital in one road, another company may be induced, in a time of wild speculation, to destroy its value by building a second, which the necessities of the country do not require. The mere fact that such a power could be used at any time, would, I apprehend, make railroad investments less desirable, and, consequently, important works would be less likely to be built. There would be no power left with the government to control and regulate this great public interest. Why may not the State retain the power to exercise this one act of sovereignty? The General Assembly would hardly refuse the right to build a railroad whenever the public interest would be essentially promoted by it. I have finally concluded to vote for the restriction, with the belief that it will aid rather than prevent the building of important roads. The public faith would, in a manner, be pledged that investments made in railroads should not be sacrificed to mere caprice, and that the interests of railroad companies, no less than of the public, should receive reasonable protection. By throwing the door wide open, and leaving this whole matter to individuals, we go farther than any other State has gone, and make an experiment which I fear will prove injurious.

Mr. PETTIT. I am opposed to this amendment upon the broadest principles of propriety and of expediency, in regard to business of every kind. We have adopted a section that substantially secures the right of all parties through whose lands these roads may be constructed. It will be recollected that the Convention labored over that section long, and discussed it thoroughly. The section reads as follows:

"No man's property shall be taken by law without just compensation, nor, except in case of the State, without such compensation first assessed and tendered to the owner."

Sir, with this provision in our Constitution, there will be no danger of the occurrence of the difficulty which the gentleman from LaPorte anticipated of doing injury to the property of the citizen. Before any such thing can be done, those who undertake to do it must have the damages assessed and tendered to the injured party, and men will not be foolish enough to put their hands in their pockets and pay for supposed damages. There is no probability of their doing so. I have no fear that the competition permitted by this provision will operate injuriously. The reverse of the fear of competition is what I desire to promote. I ask the gentleman, on what principle can you say that you will grant to one set of men and not to another the right to construct a railroad or plank road? Upon what principle practically does it differ from allowing one man to set up a store or hat manufactory within ten feet of another! Just as soon, sir, would I say that men would not invest their money in merchandise for fear of competition, unless they had exclusive privileges granted to them by legislative or Constitutional authority, as to say that men will not construct railroads for fear of competition. Sir, no business ought to be carried on in any State which needs to be exclusive—which needs to have extraordinary privileges—which needs the fostering care of the government ["consent."] I go for making every kind of business open and available, and free to all. Is there any more danger of competition in the constructing of roads than there is in merchandise or farming, or any other thing? Sir, you need grant no exclusive privileges. You need no legislative enactment to say where the terminus of a road shall be, or where its commencement shall be. Make general laws and say that all those who desire, complying with the Constitution and laws, may construct roads, and that the people all over the State shall enjoy equal privileges in this respect.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. The provision under consideration may cut as a two edged sword, and will, in all probability, have a very different effect from that contemplated by its advocates. It is supposed that if all railroad companies are required to be organized under a general law upon that subject, there will be the largest liberty allowed for such enterprises. But gentlemen should remember that railroads are now in progress of construction in almost every part of the State. Those interested in these roads will watch with feeling every movement calculated to affect the trade of their respective roads. They will not be willing that liberty should be given for the construction of rival roads, and if there is no other way of avoiding this danger, they will endeavor to load down a general railroad law with such restrictions as may effectually prevent any persons from engaging in the construction of railroads under the general law. Their common danger will cause them to unite for their mutual protection; and, permit me to say, that the present railroad influence in this State is strong enough to control the Legislature on this subject. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Vanderburgh (Mr. Blythe) should prevail, it would prevent the companies now organized from combining to prevent further improvements of this kind.

But, if I am mistaken in supposing that the effect of the provision in the section under consideration will be to embarrass future railroad enterprises, there are still weighty reasons why the amendment should be adopted. Railroads are destined to be the great thoroughfares of transit and trade, almost superseding water transportation. They will make and unmake cities. Should we not retain control of the routes and termini of these roads so as to build up cities in our own State? By so doing we would greatly increase the wealth of the State, and to a corresponding degree reduce the burdens of taxation. A sovereign State, it appears to me, ought to retain control of these great lines of commerce. Shall we vote to foreign capitalists the freedom of the State, to construct railroads where they please, and thus divert from us our trade to the benefit of cities in other States? But, it is said, the great State of New York has a general railroad law. That is true, but she has a great commercial city that is not only the natural center of the trade of New York, but of nearly the whole Union. We have no such center of trade in this State, and from our geographical position never can have, but we have many cities that may grow into considerable commercial importance under judicious legislation. If we can control the routes of railroads so as to increase the growth and prosperity of our own cities, without doing injustice to any other interests, it seems to me it is our duty to do so, and that we ought not, recklessly or inconsiderately to deprive ourselves of the power of exercising such a control.

Mr. EDMONSTON demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded by the Convention, and the main question ordered to be now put.

The question being first on the instructions moved by the gentleman from Vanderburgh,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 115, nays 14—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Badger, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Bourne, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of O., Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Murray, Nave, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristie, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimby, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Work, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President.—115.

NAYS.—Messrs. Beach, Blythe, Borden, Bowers, Dunn of Jefferson, Hardin, Johnson of D., Kelso, Kilgore, Mather, Moore, Pepper of Ohio, Walpole, Watts, and Wolfe.—15.

So the section was re-committed.

NEGROES.

The section which provides that no negro or mulatto shall come into or settle in this State after the adoption of this Constitution, was read a third time.

The question being, Shall it pass?

Mr. GORDON. Having voted on yesterday for the engrossment of this section, I wish to state the reason why I shall vote against its passage to-day.

The idea of a separation of the races has ever been a favorite one with me; and we now have within our power the means of accomplishing this desirable object, so far as our own State is concerned. If we prohibit the further immigration and settlement of negroes in our State, and at the same time make provision for the gradual colonization of such negroes and their descendants as may be in our State at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, the time will come when there will not be a negro within the limits of our State. It was to aid in producing this result, and to remove from our midst a perpetual libel on that clause of our Constitution which says, "all men are created equal," that I voted for the engrossment of the section. I believe that, to avoid subjecting ourselves to the charge of inconsistency, we must either place the negroes on a political equality with our citizens, or remove them from our midst. As it is impossible, in the present state of public feeling, to adopt the first of these propositions, it only remains for us to adopt the latter. But there appears to be no disposition in the Convention to adopt the third section of this article, providing for an appropriation for the colonization of the blacks now in the State. If, then, the twenty thousand negroes now in the State, and their yearly increase, are to remain here, it will be utterly impossible to prevent the emigration of their brethren from the neighboring States into ours, and the passage of this section will be unavailable.

The delegates from the southern counties who have been most anxious for the adoption of a clause prohibiting the further immigration of negroes into the State, appear to be the least favorable to the colonization section. They say their constituents will vote against the adoption of this article if that section is passed, on account of the expense of colonizing. If the people who are most annoyed by this class of persons are too parsimonious to contribute their mite towards ridding the State entirely of them, I do not care how soon the negroes may flock among them as thick as the frogs in the habitations of the Egyptians. Exclusion and colonization are inseparable; and I will not vote for the one without a fair prospect that the other will also be adopted.

Mr. WALPOLE. I am in favor of the proposition as originally introduced; but, in the shape in which it has been engrossed, I cannot vote for its passage. When the question of public indebtedness was proposed to be separately submitted to the people for their approval or rejection, a large majority of the Convention voted against it. When the question of banking and currency was proposed to be submitted to the people of the State, a large majority of the Convention voted against it. But when we come to the question of the admission of negroes into this State from abroad, it is made a separate and distinct question to be submitted to the people of the State. I am unwilling that this question should be made a question for discussion at our elections. I want no question separately submitted to the people. I want the Constitution that we make to be either adopted as a whole, or rejected as a whole.

I want no two Constitutions. I do not want to say this shall be part of the Constitution, if accepted by the people, and this shall not be a part of the Constitution, if not accepted. I shall, for this reason, vote against the adoption of the section as reported.

Mr. OWEN. The gentleman from Howard has said that, although he was in favor of the section yesterday, he could not vote for it to-day, because many of the southern members, who were deeply interested in prohibiting negroes from coming into the State, are nevertheless unwilling to vote an appropriation for purposes of colonization. For one, I feel that that does not touch me. There is no man on this floor who is willing to go further to promote colonization than I am. Nor do I consider that we have had a fair and direct vote on the subject of colonization at all.

It will be remembered that my friend from Putnam yesterday moved the substitution of one section for another. His section was good enough, as far as it went. It provided that fines and forfeitures for the violation of any of the sections of this article should go into the colonization fund. So they should. But when he made it a substitute for the original section, he deprived us of the opportunity of having a direct vote. I hope we shall have that vote to-day. When the section which was introduced by the gentleman from Putnam comes up on its final passage, I shall propose to commit with instructions, which I read now in advance, because this may possibly have influence in deciding the votes of gentlemen—perhaps the vote of the gentleman from Howard—in regard to this section. My proposition is to amend by adding the following:

"And that the net proceeds, after provision for draining of the swamp lands belonging to the State of Indiana, or so much of the same as may be necessary, shall constitute a fund to be applied to the colonization of such negroes, now in this State, as are desirous of leaving it."

I shall detain the Convention but a very few moments in relation to these swamp lands. The Governor informed me to-day that he had received, from thirty counties of the State, returns of the number of acres of swamp lands in those counties. They are counties containing more than an average quantity of that description of lands. The number of acres of swamp lands, in these thirty counties alone, is upwards of six hundred and forty thousand. It is not possible accurately to state the total throughout the State; but, from information received by the Governor, he believes that the whole number of acres returned as swamp lands will not fall short of a million and a quarter. The Governor estimates the probable value of these lands, after providing for draining, at from forty to fifty cents an acre, making a fund of something like half a million of dollars. Now, half a million of dollars will colonize all the negroes in the State, estimating the cost at thirty dollars a head. They may thus be colonized, therefore, (if the Governor do not over estimate,) without imposing a cent of tax upon the people of the State for that purpose. It seems to me peculiarly appropriate that they should be devoted to that purpose. They may be called a God-send; they came to us unexpectedly. No man a year ago expected any such thing. I hope, then, that this fund, or as much thereof as may be necessary, will be set apart as a fund for the purpose of colonization. I hope that, when the section comes up, it will be committed with instructions such as I have read, and I trust the gentleman from Howard and others will give their votes accordingly.

Mr. MILLER of Fulton. I had intended to vote for the section as it now stands, but if this be the game you are going to play, I shall be compelled to vote against the entire section.

Mr. WALPOLE moved to re-commit the section with instructions to strike out that part which proposes to submit the question as a separate proposition to the people.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that the section is not now before the Convention.

Mr. MOORE demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

The yeas and nays were taken in accordance with the rule, and resulted thus—yeas 93, nays 40—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Badger, Barbour, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warlick, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—93.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Foley, Garvin, Gordon, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hugin, Howe, Kilgore, Kinley, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Murray, Newman, Niles, Smith of Ripley, Todd, Trimble, and Work—40.

So the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

The second section of the same article which provides that all contracts made with negroes coming into the State shall be void, and that all those who encourage negroes to come into the State shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than a hundred, &c., was read a third time.

The question being, Shall it pass?

Mr. MILLIGAN moved to re-commit the section, with instructions to add the following:

"This provision shall not apply to citizens of other States coming into this State, &c."

Mr. MILROY demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on re-committing the section, with instructions,

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and, being taken, the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 43, nays 91:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crumbacker, Davis of

Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Foley, Garvin, Hamilton, Hawkins, Howe, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, Milligan, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Niles, Robinson, Smith of Ripley, Todd, Trimble, Walpole, and Work—43.

YAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Badger, Barbour, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson, of O., Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—91.

So the section was not re-committed.

The question then being, Shall the section pass?

The yeas and nays were taken in accordance with the rule, and resulted thus—yeas 78, nays 39—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Badger, Barbour, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Gibson, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Hardin, Helmer, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mathis, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Shannon, Sherrod, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—78.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gordon, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Howe, Johnson of D., Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Niles, Rariden, Ritchey, Robinson, Shoup, Sims, Smith of Ripley, Thomas, Todd, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, and Work—59.

So the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

The third section of the same article, which provides that all fines collected for the violation of any section of this article, or of any law hereafter passed by the Legislature for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this article, shall be set apart for the colonization of the negroes now in the State, &c., was read a third time.

Mr. OWEN moved to re-commit the section, with instructions to add the following:

“And that the net proceeds, after provision be made for the drainage of the swamp lands belonging to the State of Indiana, or so much of them as may be necessary, shall constitute a fund to be applied to the colonization of such negroes as desire to leave the State, and the remainder, if any, of such proceeds, shall be added to the common school fund of the State.”

Mr. GARVIN moved to amend the instructions so as to provide that there shall be an annual appropriation made by law for the colonization of such negroes and their descendants as may be in the State at the time of the adoption of this Constitution.

Mr. WOLFE. I shall be under the necessity of opposing the proposition of the gentleman from Posey. It seems to me that it would be very improper to take these swamp lands and appropriate them to the purpose of colonization by a permanent constitutional provision, because we do not know whether these negroes will be willing to leave the State or not. To tie up the fund derivable from these lands for a purpose which may not require its application, is, in my judgment, entirely wrong. It may be that there may be no necessity for making any appropriation for such purpose. I think that we ought to apply the proceeds of these lands to a very different purpose, and one equally important. I think the best thing we can do with them, is to apply them to the purpose of education. I would have them applied to the support of common schools. If there has to be an appropriation made for the purposes of colonization, let us make it directly out of the treasury. There may be a larger sum required in some years than in others. We should make the appropriation to suit the emergency of the case. I am for leaving it to the Legislature to make the necessary appropriations, as they may be needed.

Mr. ROBINSON demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was, upon a division, yeas 66, noes 27, seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

The question being first on the amendment to the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Kosciusko,

Mr OWEN demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 61, nays 70—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Beach, Beard, Bidle, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Chenowith, Coats, Cole, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Hamilton, Hardin, Hitt, Holman, Johnson of D., Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, Logan, May, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clerk, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Thomas, Wheeler, and Wolfe—61.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Barbour, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Blythe, Borden, Bright, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Fisher, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of O., Kelso, Lockhart, March, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Nave, Niles, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Robinson, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Todd, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Work, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—70.

So the amendment was not adopted.

The question recurred upon the motion to re-commit with instructions.

Mr. OWEN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon this question:

Mr. KELSO. I should like to have the instructions read again.

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order for the gentleman to ask that the instructions be read again. They have been read once, already.

Mr. KELSO. Then I move that they be read again.

The question being upon the motion of the gentleman from Switzerland,

It was decided in the affirmative.

The instructions were then read at the Secretary's desk.

The yeas and nays being ordered upon the question of re-committing with instructions, they were taken, and resulted—yeas 41, nays 93 :

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Barbour, Berry, Bourne, Bowers, Clements, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Duzan, Farrow, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Hardin, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Johnson of D., Jones, Kent, Logan, Maguire, McLean, Milroy, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Newman, Owen, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Robinson, Smiley, Spann, and Thomas—41.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allen, Anthony, Badger, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Borden, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of O., Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, Lockhart, March, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Todd, Trimby, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Work, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—93.

So the section was not re-committed with instructions.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the section pass?

The yeas and nays being taken upon the passage of the section, resulted—yeas 106, nays 33 :

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Badger, Barbour, Bascom, Berry, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Butler, Chenowith, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mather, Mathis, May, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—106.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Cole, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dick, Duzan, Garvin, Gordon, Hawkins, Hogin, Howe, Kendall of White, Kilgore, March, McClelland, McLean, Milroy, Newman, Niles, Robinson, Smith of Ripley, Todd, Wallace, and Work—33.

So the section was passed, and, under the rule, referred to the committee on revision, &c., &c.

On motion of Mr. PETTIT,
The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The PRESIDENT. The Convention will now resume the consideration of the

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

Mr. BORDEN. I desire to make a report from the committee on the practice of law and law reform, if the Convention will suspend for a moment the order of business to permit me to do so.

The question being taken the order of business was suspended.

Mr. BORDEN. The committee to whom was referred the subject which was under discussion this morning have directed me to report the following section:

"At their first session after the adoption of this Constitution, the General Assembly shall revise and simplify the practice and proceedings, both civil and criminal, and appoint one commissioner to effect that object."

In reporting back the section as required by the committee, I desire to say that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Posey, (Mr. Hovey,) which was adopted by the Convention in lieu of the original section, completely defeats the object which the friends of legal reform had in view in reporting it, and I cannot but think that some of those who voted in favor of the instructions to the committee did so under a misapprehension of the real effect of the proposition. The proposition offered by the gentleman from Posey was, I think, drawn by my friend from Lagrange, who, as I understand the matter, has always been a steady opponent of legal reform, and I give him full credit for the ingenuity with which he has effected his object.

Mr. WALPOLE. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. WALPOLE. The gentleman from Allen (Mr. Borden) promised the Convention the other day that if we would only listen to his speech on law reform, he would not again trouble the Convention with another speech. I ask now whether after such a pledge it is in order for the gentleman to inflict upon us another speech on the same subject. I think not; and if the Chair should unfortunately decide against me, I shall be under the necessity of appealing to the decision of the House. [Laughter.] I think when gentlemen give such solemn pledges they ought to keep them. [Renewed laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will be under the necessity of overruling the point of order raised by the gentleman from Hancock. This is not exactly a violation of the rules of order, although it may be a violation of the gentleman's pledge. [Laughter.]

Mr. BORDEN. In reply to the gentleman from Hancock, (Mr. Walpole,) I have only to say that he is under a mistake as to what I said on the occasion to which he alludes. I said that I should not probably again throw myself on the indulgence of the Convention for the purpose of making a speech, and if he understood me otherwise he is mistaken. Of course I did not say that I should not submit such propositions as I pleased to the Convention and take an opportunity of explaining their import to the body. That is a right which I shall exercise until the close of the deliberations of the Convention. But, sir, I desire to allude to some objections that have been made to the original section itself.

An objection has been taken to that portion of the section which makes it mandatory on the Legislature to abolish the distinct forms of action, and which requires that hereafter justice shall be administered in a uniform mode of pleadings without reference to any distinction between law and equity. So far as I am concerned, I am willing that this part of it should be so amended that it should be optional with the Legislature to require the commissioners to abolish the distinction between law and equity, and I would insert the words that they should do it as far as the same could be found practicable and expedient.

And now, sir, in regard to that part of it which requires a revision of the statutes, by turning to it, it will be seen that the General Assembly may make it the duty of the commissioners to reduce to a systematic code the statute law. Here it is entirely optional with the Legislature, and if they do not see proper to require the commissioners to do it, it will not be done.

Now, sir, there is another objection raised, that these officers may be life officers. It will be recollected, however, that we have lately adopted a provision of the Constitution that no office can be created beyond four years. But, sir, by looking at the section, it will be seen that it says directly, that provision shall be made by law for filling the vacancies, regulating the tenure of office, and the compensation of said commissioners. Now, sir, it seems to me that this power of fixing the term of service of these commissioners had better be left with the Legislature. It may take one year or it may take two years to complete the work; but whatever term it may take should unquestionably be left with the Legislature to fix. The friends of reform, however, cannot yield so much of it as requires the commissioners absolutely to revise, reform, simplify, and abridge, the rules, practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings in both civil and criminal cases, and of so much of it as provides for the abolition of the distinct forms of action at law. That, we insist, should be positive. The balance we are willing to leave entirely discretionary with the Legislature. If therefore gentlemen will meet us in a spirit of compromise, we will so amend the section and adopt it.

Mr. DOBSON said he must confess that he admired the manner in which gentlemen had caught him with a pin-hook in the morning. Now what was the state of the case? A reform was asked for in the practice of the law and in the forms of action and pleadings, and the proposition of the gentleman from Posey came in, and by way of getting rid of the commissioners, the proposition just dropped all that the friends of reform wanted to obtain. The proposition was to have a commissioner to draw up forms and to regulate practice. As he understood it, each judge could do this for himself. The great object the Convention had in view was to abolish the difference in forms of action and the distinction between law and equity, together with a modification of the rules of practice. That was what the original section provided for; but the amendment of the gentleman from Posey did no such thing. It dropped the whole of it. Now if the friends of reform desired a reform, they ought to reconsider that vote on commitment with instructions, and take the section as it is.

But the gentleman from Sullivan appeared to think that the commissioners were to be here forever. This would be the case as to those which the amendment provided for, but the Legislature could regulate everything in relation to the tenure of office. The amendment he regarded as being worth nothing, and he must say that he had been most completely misled as to its meaning.

Mr. TAGUE. Will it be in order again to move to refer the section with instructions?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAGUE. Then I move to re-commit it with the following instructions:

[The substance of the amendment was that the General Assembly, at its first session, after the adoption of the Constitution, should appoint three commissioners, whose duty it should be to revise, reform, and simplify the rules of practice, to abolish the distinction in forms of action, and between law and equity—that they should report their proceedings to the Legislature, and that their commission should expire at the time of the adjournment of the Legislature.]

Mr. HOVEY. I wish to say a few words in reference to this section now reported from the Convention: There is a charge made against the friends of the section, that we have attempted to impose upon this Convention in regard to this reform. I throw back that charge in the teeth of the gentleman who made it, and I tell him that he is decidedly mistaken.

Mr. DOBSON (interposing). I will just say that I heard some gentlemen laughing about it, and bragging that they had cheated us. It was very smartly done, no doubt. I give the gentleman full credit for it. He fairly pin-hooked me.

Mr. HOVEY (continuing). I understand the manœuvring of the gentleman from Owen, very well. He is an old parliamentarian, and very likely voted for the section with the majority, in order that he might move a re-consideration of the vote. Sir, he cannot fool me in this manner.

Now, what is the meaning of the section, as reported back from the Convention? It means all that every man desires who wishes to abolish the distinction between the different forms of action, and to simplify the principles of practice and pleading. The words used in the section, are as emphatic and broad as can be desired by any safe reformer.

Mr. GIBSON. In whose hand writing did the amendment come?

Mr. HOVEY. The hand writing makes no difference—I know where it came from and I know also the movements of its enemies well enough. There are not a few men in this Convention, who are very anxious for a provision for three commissioners.

Now, what does the section reported amount to? Simply that at the first session of the Legislature, after the adoption of this Constitution, the General Assembly shall revise and simplify the rules of practice and pleading, both civil and criminal, or appoint one commissioner to effect that object. Sir, if you simplify the rules and forms of pleading in our courts of justice, what more do the people want? I wish to see pleadings and practice so simplified that a man of ordinary common sense, may sit down and write a declaration, in ordinary cases, without the technical forms of law. I ask gentlemen to say whether the section will not accomplish that object?

Mr. ROBINSON (in his seat). Yes, if you could give the people at the same time the sense to do it.

Mr. HOVEY. Better say give the Convention sense enough to do it. I consider there is wisdom enough outside of these walls to appreciate such charges. I am in favor of wholesome and necessary reforms; but I will not go the mad length which is proposed by the enemies of this section, and when they insinuate that I am an enemy to reform, I will tell them in reply, that I can put my finger on three men in this Convention, who wish to be appointed the commissioners under the section originally reported. [Loud cries of "name them, name them;" and various names were mentioned by members, among which were "Borden," "Pettit," "Gibson," "Wolfe," and "Kent."]

Mr. KENT (interposing). Did the gentleman name me?

[Here there was considerable confusion in the Hall. After it had somewhat subsided.]

Mr. HOVEY (continuing). Now, look at the section as reported back by the committee, and then look at the original section which some gentlemen have wished to palm upon the country, and which amounts to the creating of two distinct law making powers.

Mr. BORDEN (interposing). Will the gentleman from Posey give way for a word of explanation? I do not suppose the gentlemen designs to say anything calculated to do me an injury. It is time, sir, that in some remarks I submitted a few days since, in favor of legal reform, and in replying to some remarks that had been made, that there were not men competent to this task, I did say that without going out of this body, men could be found with whom I would be willing to entrust the revision of our laws, contemplated by the proposition under consideration. But, sir, as I find that these remarks were misunderstood, I will here say that it was furtherest from my intention to allude to myself, as has been intimated. Sir, there are somethings that I think I know, and somethings which I will readily admit I do not know. [Laughter and "consent."] And among those that I do know, is that I am not possessed of the peculiar qualifications requisite for one of these commissioners. And, sir, I can truly say that I never dreamed of such a thing, nor did I suppose that any one else had.

Sir, if it would not be deemed indelicate for me to do so, let me say here that when I then made the observation, that there were men in this Hall qualified for the situation, I intended to say that if I had the selection, and they were to be taken from this Convention, I would, for my own part, put the intellectual powers of a Pettit, the philosophical Niles, and the industrious and astute Newman to the work. But, sir, they are not the only men either in this Hall or in the State, that are competent to the task. For my own part I can say that I neither desire nor expect it, and when any gentleman rises in his seat, and imputes to me such unworthy motives, I must say that it is altogether gratuitous. In the efforts which I have put forth in favor of law reform, I have been governed only by what I believed to be for the best interests of my constituents, and the people of the State generally, and I can assure gentlemen that they are mistaken in the person, if they suppose any abuse will deter me from the performance of what I deem my duty.

Mr. HOVEY (resuming). I ask from whence the insinuations first came? I moved to recommit the original section this morning with instructions, and the Convention sustained the motion. And now, sir, since that time a counter current has been put in motion, and I am accused of circumventing and deceiving the Convention. The aim of such charges can be easily seen through. They are made for the purpose of arousing prejudice against the members of the legal profession in this Convention, who, it has been insinuated, work alone for their own interest.

And, now, let me say one word to those gentlemen who are not lawyers. A feeling seems to exist here that everything ought to be crushed which may happen to come from a member of the bar. They say "down with the lawyers," and "down with their schemes," and let the farming, and mercantile, and other portions of the Convention form the Constitution. I say, sir, that it is wrong to impugn the motives of any profession or calling. Do you suppose, sir, that the members of the bar are willing to sacrifice the best interests of the State for their own benefit? Have they not property—have they not families—have they not children, whose interests are to be guarded by this Constitution, as well as the interests of those who do not belong to the profession? [Applause and uproar.] Are not their lives and their liberties to be protected as well as the lives and the liberties of others? [Applause.]

Sir, I say that the lawyer who would thus recklessly sacrifice principle for his own temporary benefit, is a man who is base beyond description.

Now, sir, I hope the vote will not be reconsidered, for it seems to me that the section, as it is, provides for all that is necessary.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, It is a matter of no little interest, sir, to us clodhoppers, to see gentlemen of the legal profession thus engage in pulling each other's wool. [Laughter.] Now, sir, the gentleman from Posey, (Mr. Hovey), who has just taken his seat, remarked that the instructions with which this section was referred, proposed to simplify certain distinctions in the practice of law, and that was all the legal reformers asked for. The original section proposes to abolish those distinctions. And is there no difference in simplifying and abolishing a thing? I look upon simplifying a matter as one thing, and the abolition of it quite another. And like my friend from Owen, (Mr. Dobson,) who sits near me, I voted for these instructions, under the impression that they contained all we wanted, but upon a more careful examination I see my error.

In relation to the charges just made by the gentleman from Posey, "That certain gentlemen on this floor were desirous of filling an office in this commission," I have only to remark that, in my opinion, they need not give themselves any uneasiness on this score; for, as has been remarked on another occasion, by the honorable delegate from Jefferson, (Mr. Gregg.) I think from all I can learn from an honest and an unsuspecting community, touching their views of the conduct of this body as a whole, we may well regard this as no less than a "political slaughterhouse;" an ordeal through which but few of us will be able to pass unharmed.

Mr. President, as I have on a former occasion said, I am no lawyer, but I have been taught to regard law as being a rule of action, founded in common sense, upon common honesty, for the purpose of dispensing common justice. If this be a correct view, then why not give us a simplified system of the principles of justice by which to secure the greatest good to the greatest amount, or to the greatest number.

Surely no one will deny that the necessity of the case requires it—no one will say the spirit of the age does not demand it.

Then, sir, avault with your absurdities and technicalities; give us English ideas, in English words; simplify the practice and abolish the distinctions so that, in place of a declaration as long as the Constitution, containing more repetitions than ideas, a simple statement of the matters of fact in the case, will be all sufficient; for, sir, after all your special pleadings, and lengthy declarations, it is to the facts in the case your jury looks, and by them they are governed in making up their decision. But, a question to the lawyers: A. sells B. a lot of hogs, of certain number, and specified weights, to be delivered on a certain day, at a given place; B., in consideration of which, agrees to pay A., on delivery, a given amount of money, all of which is stated in a written contract, together with the amount paid in advance, as a bonds, but B. refuses to take the hogs according to the written article. I wish to know if A., in bringing suit for damages, could not sustain his action on a declaration, in which was set forth the above named facts? I ask if it is not a good declaration?

Mr. KELSO. No, sir.

Mr. HOVEY. It ought to be.

Mr. BADGER. Thank you, sir. The gentleman from Posey says it ought to be, and, sir, so think I, and I arrive at this conclusion simply because I am forced to it, as the result of a common sense view of the subject. But I have, perhaps, said enough; and having no desire to detain this honorable body unnecessarily, I will close with one other remark. Gentlemen of the bar seem to think that hard things are said here of those of them that oppose this salutary reform. But let me say to those honorable gentlemen that this is a reform for which the people call—a reform that the people's INTEREST demands, and those gentlemen will hear a voice from that people, ere long, which will tell them in tones of muttering thunder, that "the day of their powers that be, are numbered."

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not intend to trouble the Convention with any lengthened remarks, but lest it should be thought from the remarks made by the gentleman from Putnam (Mr. Badger) that the lawyers of this Convention are opposed to legal reform—and they are certainly not to blame for this want of capacity to understand the meaning of a declaration—I wish to say one word on the subject; and I desire to address myself to the thinking portion of this body.

I will say now, sir—and when I say it I believe that I speak the sentiments, generally, of the legal profession in this Hall—that were I disposed to advocate any measure calculated favorably to affect my own interest, it would be this very reform which is now asked for in the practice of the law. It is a mistaken idea that has got abroad in the land that we can so modify, and simplify, and fix the rules of practice, and special pleading, as to do away with the necessity of lawyers. Sir, if it is never tested until it is tested by experience, I tell you that the day you appoint commissioners to undertake to simplify, and remodel the rules of practice, and law, from that day you will increase litigation, and, consequently, the number of men who will engage in the profession. Sir, it will throw dollars into their pockets, where cents only go now. No man, except him who could not understand a plain declaration, will ever be found to advocate a doctrine to the contrary. I believe that if there is any safeguard to the rights of the individual in coming into court, it is with the points of the case narrowed down to the narrowest point you can get—it is by bringing the matters in dispute to as few points as possible; this, sir, can only be done by special pleading, by which the parties present to the court and jury the matters proper for trial. Sir, we are told that the rules of practice are to be so simplified that any individual can go into court and obtain justice without delay. Sir, the individual who advocates that doctrine, is so far behind the times as not to be conscious of the real manner in which such a change would operate upon the country.

I intend, sir, to vote against the whole section; and that, not because I am a lawyer, but because I believe it to be one of the most stupendous pieces of nonsense that was ever presented to the country, and which will be productive of a thousand mischiefs which have not yet entered the conception of any member of this body.

Now, what can be simplified? There are the various actions of debt and assumpsit, and replevin, and trover, and others; and if you abolish them, and say that these names shall not exist in practice, how far have you succeeded in attaining any reform? Is an individual to come into a Court of Justice, and stalk up to the judge upon the bench, and say that he has a right to a writ of replevin, and he wants justice without delay? I care nothing myself about the name of an action. You may call it debt, assumpsit, covenant, replevin, trover, trespass, or any other name. Names in themselves amount to but little, and cannot change the nature of things. Sir, there is but one safe and sensible way for parties litigant to come before a court and jury that is to pass upon and settle their rights. The plaintiff or complainant must spread their case on paper. They must make out a state of things—a set of facts containing his cause of action or complaint. This gives the opposite party notice of the facts with which he stands charged, and he comes prepared to contest them, and defend against them. The defendant thus charged, examines the charge or cause of complaint, and if the defendant thinks that the facts charged do not amount to a cause of action, he files his demur to the pleading of the opposite party, and at once refers the legal question to the court, which may be the means of saving much cost and trouble. If the facts charged by the party are deemed sufficient, then he files his plea, replication, or other necessary answer to the charges of his adversary, thereby presenting to the court and jury the points and facts on which they rely; thus enabling the parties to direct the testimony to the proper points, and the court and jury to make a proper application of the law and the facts; and thereby rendering litigation certain, and avoiding that confusion which must render the rights of the parties litigant unsafe and insecure.

Sir, gentlemen may talk about the rules of special pleading in courts of justice—they may ridicule the science, and humbug the people with the vain and foolish notion that every man can be his own lawyer. This, sir, may to some sound well; but when you attempt to reduce it to practice, it will be a clear failure. It will teach the fact, that when parties litigant call on a court or jury to settle their disputes by a trial at law or in equity, they must present something tangible, something certain, on which they can act. This, sir, can only be done by the correct rules of special pleading.

Mr. ROBINSON moved that the Convention adjourn.

The Convention refused to adjourn.

Mr. ROBINSON (continuing). Then, by the kind permission of the Convention, I will say a few words more in regard to this subject. I am quite aware of one thing; that when the question goes to the country, in such a manner, about simplifying the laws so that every man can be his own lawyer, and those in the profession go to some other business—which perhaps they ought to do—I know that it takes like wild-fire, and that the demagogue upon the stump could have no better theme for excitement. This, sir, sounds very well in theory; but when we come to reduce it to practice—when we come to examine it, and strip it naked, and talk about it as it really is, and as sensible men ought to talk about it, and think about it, it brings itself to my mind as one of the most contemptible notions that ever was presented to the consideration of any deliberative body, or sensible man.

Now, what is the avowed object? It is, so to simplify the law and special pleading, as to make it understood by all men. Let us examine it for a moment. Take, for instance, an action of trespass, which consists of a certain set of facts. For instance, I go upon the lands of my friend from Putnam, and trespass upon his rights, and he wants the practice of the law so simplified that he can obtain his rights. How will he get them? How else can he get them, but by going into court and spreading upon paper the facts, so that the man who is charged may know what he has to meet, and what to answer? Now, will those gentlemen who wish to simplify the practice of the law tell me that we can get rid of the necessity of doing this—of putting on paper the charges that we complain of? True, sir, this is very easily done. I do not suppose that, at this day, there is any member of the profession who would draw a declaration in an action of trespass that would fill more than half a sheet of paper. It is due, however, to the party who is to meet the action, that he should know what he has to meet and defend; and, sir, as I have before stated, the defendant comes into court, sees the causes of action, examines them, and thinks them not sufficient, and, to shorten litigation, he files a demurrer. He then raises before that court, the whole question of the sufficiency of the matters alleged in that paper, for a cause of action. The court, then, without the intervention of a jury, decides at once on an issue of law raised, which often settles the whole case, without a lengthy trial. And yet this course is denounced as oppressive.

Then, again, if an individual wishes to sue another, in an action of slander, or an action of "assumpsit," how is he going to get before the court? Will any man suppose that he is to come into court, and state before the judge on the bench, that he has a cause of action against a given individual? Tell the judge or jury that you have been wronged—state in court, in an oral manner, your complaint—your adversary does the same. The cause is, perhaps, for some good reason, continued from court to court, and when it is at last brought to trial, where is the case forgot by the court and all concerned.

Sir, this is all nonsense, in the extreme. It will never do. The ends of justice, the rights of the parties, and the convenience of courts, all require that causes should be put on paper. The questions and points which are to be tried should be put directly in issue by the allegations of the parties, that courts and juries may know what they have to try—that the parties may know what they have to prove or disprove—that the court or jury may be informed, in and through the channel of legal evidence, of the truth or falsity of the matters on which they have to pass. This, sir, is what is meant by special pleading. It is nothing more nor less than a plain and simple statement of the plaintiff's cause of action, and of the defendant's defense. Farther than this, special pleading need not go; short of it, it should not stop.

Sir, you may appoint commissioners to simplify the practice of the law, and to abolish special pleading, as you please; but there will be, at last, but one way of getting before a court in a safe and proper way, and that is, by spreading your case upon paper, and giving your adversary an opportunity of coming up to meet it. Let them introduce special pleading until they have narrowed down their case; and then the jury and the parties will know what they have to try. And, sir, without it you would have to introduce a practice which could not fail to be highly prejudicial to the parties litigant—a practice which would render everything on both sides very uncertain. Sir, if there be any one thing which renders a man's rights secure, it is by having the facts put down upon paper, and there narrowing the points down to a single issue. But suppose a party comes into court, when there is no certain issue pending—there is no certain issue of law or fact made up. He then comes, not knowing what he is to meet; he is taken by surprise, and justice is not meted out to him. And thus, sir, we would soon have our courts of justice shorn of their dignity, and those tribunals scenes of confusion and nonsense, of which the whole community would have just cause of complaint.

I should not have said one word upon this subject, but I have heard it here—and I regret to hear it, and hope it will never be reiterated in this Hall—I say I have heard it insinuated, that the legal profession are not morally honest. Sir, that may be the case with some; but certainly this is not the place for any such remark.

Mr. President, I have only to say, that I shall vote against the reference, and the section, and the whole subject. And I say to gentlemen now, that if they want to raise the cry of "Lawyer," if they want to impute to me any motives of profit or interest, in the remarks I have made, they will not only do me a positive injustice, but will render themselves ridiculous. For, sir, my object is to preserve those principles of law which are well settled, so that parties can have their rights, and courts of justice do business without such confusion as we have witnessed here to-day, and which must and will ensue if we adopt the section.

In regard to who is to be commissioner, I care nothing about that. If it is to be my friend from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit,) I think he would be a very able one; if it is to be my friend from Allen, (Mr. Borden,)—although he says he has not sense enough—I think he might get along very well, if he had two others of good sense with him. But, sir, I cannot but repeat, that I regard this movement as an innovation of the rights of the people—a measure which would prove deleterious in the extreme.

Sir, I stand here, not as a lawyer, but as a delegate; and what I say I wish to be regarded as being spoken as a delegate, having in view the welfare of my constituents, and the State at large. All imputations of any contrary motives, fall harmless at my feet, as unworthy notice or refutation.

Sir, I think I may safely say, that I have had some experience in regard to this matter; and I will say again, that the very day you appoint these commissioners, with a salary of at least six thousand dollars, you will expend a sum of money which would be much better expended in the colonization of the free blacks of the country, or added to your common school fund. They may labor at it for three, five, or seven years; and when they have done, they will produce nothing but an abortion, and we shall have to go back to the old beaten path of common sense, tried by time, beautified by the judgment and approval of the ablest sages of the law, sanctified by the experience of ages; the only true and solid foundation on which the dignity of your courts can rest, and the rights of the people find a safe guarantee.

Mr. KELSO. I do not desire to make a speech on this matter, but simply to make a suggestion which I think may result in some good. I think, sir, much bad feeling has been engendered by the calling of the previous question on this subject, cutting off even the bare opportunity of offering a few amendments. Now so far as calling the previous question has an effect to prevent lengthy discussions, there is some use in calling it. But there are amendments, and important ones, which, by the operation of the previous question, we have been cut off from the privilege of offering.

For my own part, I am willing to see this section of reform take any course the majority see fit to make it take; but I do desire to have an opportunity of offering, for one, an amendment to it. I believe there is an amendment to an amendment pending, and I desire, after we have had a vote upon the pending amendment, that whether it is adopted or rejected, the section may be left open to amendment. I desire to offer an amendment, and if it is rejected, well and good; but the privilege of offering amendments, at any rate, I think, should be left to such members as desire to offer them. My proposition is, that whether the commissioners be many or few, they shall be elected by the people. That is the amendment which I desire to offer, if this section is only left open for amendment.

Mr. KENT. I move a re-consideration of the vote re-committing this section to the committee on law and law reform.

Mr. BORDEN. Is that motion in order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to say a word in regard to this subject.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable, as the subject is now under the operation of the previous question.

MR. BORDEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken with the following result—yeas 98, nays 33 :

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Badger, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bourne, Bryant, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Shannan, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Work, Yocum, and Mr. President—98.

NAYS.—Messrs. Barbour, Beard, Bowers, Brookbank, Clark of Tippecanoe, Colfax, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Gregg, Harbolt, Hendricks, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Mather, May, Morgan, Nave, Newman, Niles, Rariden, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Thomas, Todd, Walpole, Watts, and Wolfe—33.

So the vote was re-considered.

MR. MURRAY'S name being called, he refused to have it recorded.

THE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon re-committing the section with instructions.

MR. KELSO. I believe we are now under the operation of the previous question, Mr. President, but may not a motion be made to reconsider the vote ordering the main question?

THE PRESIDENT. It is not in order to reconsider the previous question while under the operation of the previous question.

MR. KELSO. I'll knock under; there is one question ahead of me.

THE PRESIDENT. The vote to re-consider having carried, it leaves the pending question—to re-commit with instructions.

This question was put and negatived.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the section pass?

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken resulted as follows—yeas 97, nays 34:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Bascom, Beeson, Borden, Bourne, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of

Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Hogin, Holman, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Shannan, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Tague, Thornton, Todd, Trimble, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Work, Yocum, and Mr. President—97.

NAYS.—Messrs. Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Clements, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Harbolt, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Kelso, Kilgore, Morgan, Murray, Nave, Newman, Niles, Rariden, Robinson, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Walpole, Watts, and Wolfe—34.

So the section passed.

MR. KELSO. Will it not be in order, Mr. President, under the new rule, to offer an additional section?

THE PRESIDENT. This cannot be done while an article is on its third reading. It may be done on its second reading.

MR. KELSO. I believe the previous question is exhausted, and, having voted in the affirmative on ordering the main question, I move to reconsider that vote, so that I may have a chance to offer my section.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman can offer his section as an amendment to some other article on its second reading, and the committee on revision can insert it, if passed, in its proper place.

MR. KELSO. I do not wish to consume the time of the Convention; I will, therefore, withdraw my motion.

THE PRESIDENT. That is much the better course to pursue. It is not the proper plan to offer an additional section as an amendment to an article on its third reading.

The fifth section of article 51, providing that the General Assembly should pass laws to carry out the sections of this article, if adopted by the people, was then passed; the rule requiring the yeas and nays on its passages, by consent, being suspended.

The sixth section of article 51, providing that the article should be submitted to a separate vote of the people in this form, "Exclusion and colonization of negroes and mulattoes—aye or no," then came up on its third reading.

Mr. WALPOLE. I move to indefinitely postpone this section.

Mr. COLFAX. I demand the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. Will the Convention second the demand for the previous question?

The demand was seconded.

The PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the main question be now put?

It was so ordered by consent.

The PRESIDENT. The main question is, Shall the section pass?

Mr. WATTS. Does that cut off the motion to indefinitely postpone?

The PRESIDENT. It does; the question is now upon the passage of the section.

On this question the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 82, nays 54:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bicknell, Borden, Bowers, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gordon, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Harbott, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Howe, Johnson of D., Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Morgan, Mowrer, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimble, Wallace, Wiley, Work, and Mr. President—82.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Barbour, Bourne, Bright, Butler, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Gibson, Gootee, Had-don, Helmer, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Lockhart, Logan, May, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Sherrod, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wolfe, and Yocum—54.

So the section passed.

Mr. WATTS gave notice that on to-morrow or some subsequent day, he should offer for adoption, an amendment to the standing rules, providing that no delegate should be allowed to change his vote or record it after the roll was called.

Mr. MOORE gave notice that on to-morrow or some subsequent day, he would move for adoption a standing rule providing that in all cases where members left their seats and roamed or swaggered about the Hall, or held conversations that annoyed others, the President should call upon them by name to keep silent until the Secretary should record their names on the journal.

Mr. PETTIT (in his seat). I move to amend by adding after the word "silent," the words, "until he has thrown his hammer at their heads." [Laughter.]

PUBLIC DEBT.

The first section of article 37 provides that the revenues derived from the sale of the public works of the State, and from their net annual income, and any surplus remaining in the treasury derived from taxation for State purposes, after the payment of the expenses of government and interest on the bonds of the State—other than bank bonds—should be annually applied under the direction of the General Assembly to the payment of the principal of the public debt—came up on its second reading.

The PRESIDENT. The pending question is the motion of the gentleman from Scott to lay upon the table.

Upon a division—ayes 43, noes 48—the motion was not agreed to.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT. The question is now upon the demand of the gentleman from Wayne for the previous question. Will the Convention second the demand?

The demand was seconded, and the main question having been ordered to be put,

The section was engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. KELSO. I now offer the following additional section to that article:

The section was read by the Secretary, and provides that the commissioners who were to simplify the law and law proceedings should be elected by the qualified voters of the people.

Mr. KELSO. I would state to the Convention that this contains the doctrine which I have contended for in reference to the commissioners who are to simplify and change the mode of law practice—and that is, they shall be elected, whether many or few, by the people.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to lay the section on the table.

Mr. HENDRICKS offered an amendment providing that the term of office of these commissioners should continue no longer than two years, and that no act of theirs should take effect until submitted to and approved by the Legislature.

Mr. KELSO accepted the amendment.

Mr. GIBSON moved to amend by striking out and inserting that the terms of the commissioners should expire as soon as their labors were completed; and that their whole compensation should not exceed one thousand dollars apiece.

Mr. G. said that he wanted some restriction upon the amount to be paid these commissioners. A thousand dollars apiece was sufficient, and they would then take their own time about the execution of the duties assigned them without the danger of running the State into debt, which gentlemen had predicted.

Mr. KELSO remarked that the effect of this proposition would be, that the work assigned these commissioners would be botched up by them, for they would be in a hurry to make all the money they could, and get through with their labors. He would, therefore, move to lay it on the table.

Mr. GIBSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

On this, the yeas and nays were demanded, and being ordered and taken, the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 90, nays 40:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Badger, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Elliot, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Warwick, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Snook, Todd, Trimble, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Work, and Mr. President—90.

NAYS.—Messrs. Beard, Bright, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Gibson, Hardin, Hendricks, Holman, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Kilgore, Kinley, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Nave, Newman, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, and Yocum—40.

So the amendment was laid upon the table.

Mr. FARROW. I demand the previous question.

The demand was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the section be engrossed?

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken, resulted as follows—yeas 76, nays 54:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Graham of Warwick, Harbolt, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson, of D., Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Lockhart, Logan, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Milligan, Milroy, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Ristine, Ritchey, Robinson, Sims, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Todd, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, and Yocum,—76.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Bright, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Coats, Cole, Crawford, Dick, Edmonston, Farrow, Gibson, Goo-tee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Hogin, Johnson of O., Jones, Kendall of White, Kinley, March, May, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Newman, Pettit, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Shar-ron, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wheeler, Wiley, Work, and Mr. President—54.

So the section was engrossed for a third reading.

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

SATURDAY, JAN. 25, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. MILLS.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

The PRESIDENT announced the appointment of a select committee of one from each Congressional District, to prepare an address to the people, under the resolution of Mr. Owen: Messrs. Owen, Carr of J., Berry, Smiley, Maguire, Helmer, Davis of V., Bryant, Colfax, and Bascom.

BANKING.

Mr. STEVENSON offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Revision, Arrangement, and Phraseology, be instructed to strike out all after the word 'Constitution,' in the four hundred and seventy-fourth line of the article on banking."

Mr. S. said: It has been provided, in good faith, I trust, by both parties, the free bank and the State Bank party, to establish free banks, and, also, a State Bank, with branches. We have provided a section declaring that free banking shall be adopted, with ample security, and that the State Bank shall be established with branches, on the principle of mutual liability. But, by this section it is declared that the "General Assembly shall not have power to establish or incorporate, in this State, any bank or banking company, or monied institution, for the purpose of issuing bills of credit, or bills payable to order, or bearer, except under the conditions prescribed in this Constitution, and that all banking in this State shall be on a specie basis, actually paid in." I think that this provision prohibits the establishment of free banking, and should, therefore, be stricken out. I think it is a matter of justice to the free bank party, that this provision should be stricken out, so as to enable the free banking system to go into speculation. I move to strike it out.

Mr. WALPOLE. As a friend to the system of State Banking, I protest against the imputation applying to me, of belonging to the party that compromised this measure of currency. I understand there was a compromise consummated in this Convention through the action of about a dozen men who favored State Banking, and who went over to the free bank party, and when the party said they would agree to a compromise. But that the men who were utterly opposed to free banking, went over to the party sustaining that system, I deny, and the recorded votes of members on the subject will carry me out in my assertion.

I rise, Mr. President, at this time, simply to a question of order. The Convention has refused to re-consider the vote adopting the section the gentleman now proposes to strike out, and therefore we have not the power under our present organization to do that which he proposes. He can only effect his object by moving a change in the rule which applies to the question.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. The committee of revision has not yet taken this article under consideration, and I think it would be better to wait until that committee acts upon it, and then if they detect any incongruity in it they can present a proposition to that effect, for our action. If gentlemen are suffered to bring in propositions to strike out, before a week has elapsed we will have propositions to strike out nearly one-half of the articles we have passed. While up I would say in looking at a report of our proceedings in this morning's paper, I am stated to have compromised this bank question. Now, sir, upon that subject, I simply declare I have no compromise to make. If the committee on revision, when they come to overlook this matter, find any inconsistency — when they report that fact back to the Convention for action in regard to it, we will be able to act understandingly.

Mr. KELSO. I do not pretend to deny, on my part, that I did accept cheerfully, the proposition of the gentleman from St. Joseph, (Mr. Colfax) offering what I thought a fair compromise upon the question. I have represented, as I have said before, the State Bank interest from necessity, because the people I represent are partial to that system of banking. I was satisfied from the vote that was taken, that the State Bank system could not be carried as a separate measure, and when the compromise was offered I freely accepted it, as I would do again.

I was willing to accept the proposition of the gentleman from St. Joseph, and have also been inclined freely to accept the sections which, since the adoption of that proposition, have been presented to us on the basis of the principle contained in the main section already adopted. I do not believe that by the power we have granted, we have agreed to guarantee a dollar of specie for every dollar issued of paper, but we have agreed that there shall be an additional security over and above the specie. With regard to the State Bank, we have hitherto had the system of mutual liability, which, of course, has been the best security.

On the part of the free banks, the gentleman from Posey (Mr. Owen) voluntarily tendered to us additional security. I would like to inquire of him why he came forward voluntarily with this additional security? Was it with the intention of destroying the section we have already passed—I mean the section requiring the specie basis. I cannot think he had any such intention, and above all, to have a proposition of this kind to destroy that section, coming from a State Bank man is what puzzles me. For a State Bank man to come forward and ask to destroy the very foundation of the State Bank system and of all other good and safe banks, appears to me somewhat singular.

In regard to the point raised by the gentleman from Hancock, with reference to the motion to re-consider the vote on the passage of the section, the Convention, I think, has already refused to reconcile that vote, thus placing it out of the power of the Convention during the session, to alter its former course of procedure. I think it is somewhat inconsistent to ask to confer upon a committee power to do what we have not the power to do ourselves.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would state in regard to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Hancock, that it is correct. Upon referring to the journal, the Chair found that a motion to re-consider the vote on the passage of the section failed, so that it is out of the power of this Convention, during the remainder of its session, to act further upon it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would inquire of the Chair, if there is no way in which we can alter this manifest contradiction in the Constitution.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot help any contradiction in the Constitution. A motion to re-consider the vote by which this section was passed has failed, and that vote remains as the fixed judgment of this body. The gentleman's resolution is not in order.

TOWNSHIP BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON offered a resolution that the system of transacting township business in the counties of Dearborn, Ohio, Switzerland, Adams, and Wells, be not interfered with, except by legislative enactment, after the adoption of this Constitution.

Mr. EDMONSTON. I trust this resolution will be adopted. This is a matter in which these counties feel a great deal of interest, and as the adoption of the resolution cannot affect the interests of any other county in the State, I trust it will pass.

Mr. WOLFE. I trust this resolution will not pass. If it does, and these counties are excepted from the operation of certain provisions of the Constitution, I see no reason why other counties may not also be excepted from the operation of certain provisions which affect them in a particular manner. If this is to be the rule, I desire to have my county excepted from the provision in the new Constitution, which provides for the office of Auditor in our county, which will put the county to the expense of six or seven hundred dollars more than they are under at present. Here we have professed to do away with all local legislation, and yet we are going right on to exempt certain counties from the operation of certain laws. If we are going to have general laws, let us show our hands; but if exemptions are to be made in favor of certain counties, I shall certainly ask to have the rule applied to the county I represent.

Mr. WATTS. A permanent exemption is not asked for in this resolution. We only ask that our township system of business may not be interfered with until the Legislature is prepared to repeal the law under the present Constitution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I trust this resolution, sir, will pass, as it is merely in regard to a local matter in which these counties feel a great deal of interest, and having no influence, injuriously or otherwise, upon other counties. One of the delegates from Dearborn county, I know, designed saying something in regard to it, and if he had not been compelled to be absent on account of his family, I should not have said a word. I think the members of the Convention can, with great propriety, extend this favor to these counties and permit them to retain their present township organization, as they have become accustomed to it, and it can in nowise affect other counties. The rest of the counties do not wish to establish this system. Shelby county, for instance, does not desire to have the system there that has been so long in operation in Dearborn county. I hope the resolution will pass.

Mr. PEPPER of Ohio. I rise merely to call the attention of the gentleman from Sullivan to the truth of this matter. He seems to regard this resolution as one that, if adopted, will confer upon these counties a privilege which the county he represents may not enjoy. Now, sir, we desire no such thing. If any gentleman here has a similar proposition in regard to township organization in the county he represents—that he desires adopted—I will cheerfully go for it, if in the position he takes, he truly represents the will of his constituents.

Mr. BORDEN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the county of Allen. I am perfectly willing, for one, to put a clause in the Constitution requiring a uniform mode of doing township business; nevertheless, if there is to be any exception, we want our county excepted. Let us not make flesh of one and fish of the other, but let our action be consistent.

Mr. KELSO. What harm, sir, can possibly result to the people of Indiana, if each county has a particular mode of transacting its township business. In the county of Ripley, adjacent to the counties of Switzerland, Ohio, and Dearborn, on the western boundary, the people have to go from the extreme portion of the county to the county seat to have every little change made in a county road, a matter of the most trivial character. It is there, also, their supervisors make their returns to the county commissioners. If the people desire change in the location or construction of a certain road, they have to go from either end of the county to the county seat to have it done, and they can only have a regular meeting four times a year. That is their mode, and they seem satisfied with it. In the other counties adjacent, which I in part represent, if the people desire to construct a road other than one created by legislative enactment, or a road that leads from one county seat to the other, they have three trustees to each township, who decide upon the creation, vacation, altering, or changing of all roads, and the transaction of the necessary business in those townships. It thus saves a great deal of time and expense to the farmer and the people generally; and everything is done just as well as if the commissioners had done it. This has been the mode of transacting township business in some of those counties for twenty-five years, and in others, twenty-one years. They are satisfied with it, and will not be easily satisfied with anything else; and many other counties of the State have adopted the same provision, as I now learn from the gentleman from Allen, (Mr. Borden,) a fact I did not before know. I regard it myself as a great saving of time and expense to the people, and they so regard it. I consider, sir, this mode of transacting the business of townships will be in many counties entirely new, and that its adoption by the Convention will, when ingrafted in the new Constitution and presented to the people, create great dissension among the people, and cause much opposition to the Constitution, which would not exist, if each county were to be allowed to continue its old system of transacting its township business in its own way. It is a mere local arrangement—an arrangement, sir, which only affects individual counties in which it exists, and cannot by possibility affect the interest of any other counties. Every county should have the power reserved to it of transacting its township business upon its old system; and if it desires to change that system, that is a change that may be left to the county board who will readily accomplish it. Sir, let us have such a section as will satisfy the people, providing that each county that wishes may transact its township business upon its old and long established system.

I certainly hope that, in this matter, the expressed wishes of the people will be consulted. Leave the matter to them. We have literally destroyed the Legislature. Can we trust nothing to the people? I ask, in all sincerity, what reason have we to doubt the ability and competency of the people to arrange their own internal matters, so far as the transaction of township business is concerned. If they had known in time the gentlemen on this floor who are now refusing to trust them with such little matters of home concern, they never would have trusted them to come here.

Mr. WALPOLE. I do not think it necessary to adopt this resolution. The committee on miscellaneous provisions are about reporting an article, by which it will be provided that all laws and parts of laws now in force, and not inconsistent with the Constitution, shall remain as the law of the land. That provision will still keep in force the law gentlemen ask for in this resolution. There is certainly nothing in the provision to be reported by the committee that will affect the object of the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. KELSO. But a portion of a section that has been passed provides that there shall be a uniform law as to county and township business; and I would ask if it does not cover the arrangement proposed by this resolution.

Mr. WALPOLE. I would state that, in regard to the section the gentleman refers to, its character was not generally understood at the time of its passage, otherwise it would have been objected to. I did not know that such a provision had been adopted, until I learned the fact from the gentleman from Clark; and I intended to have said, when up before, that that difficulty could be obviated by moving a re-consideration of the vote on the passage of the section, for the purpose of striking out the objectionable part referred to, and leaving the question of township organization to the Legislature. It is impossible for the poorer counties to sustain three township trustees; and I feel well assured that, with reference to many other counties, the people as yet are not ready for the proposed change.

Mr. WATTS. At the time the section was up, providing for the passage of uniform laws upon township organization, an effort was made to strike out the word "township," so as not to interfere with the township business. But it failed, and we were therefore deprived of one remedy at that point. I cannot see any harm that will result from the adoption of this resolution. We only ask by it to be allowed to go on with our present organization, until the general system is adopted, and then, if our present system is not adopted, we must yield to the general system.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Allen (Mr. Borden).

The amendment was not concurred in.

The PRESIDENT. The question is now upon the amendment of the gentleman from De Kalb.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

"The counties of Washington and Sullivan shall be excepted from the provision of the new Constitution requiring an election of auditor in each county."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MURRAY moved to amend the amendment by inserting the counties of Kosciusko, Whitley, and Huntington.

Mr. RITCHEY. I see in this action, sir, just precisely the same kind of movement here that has characterized the proceedings of the Legislature of Indiana for the last thirty years, in regard to special legislation. If it is the intention of the Convention to sanction local legislation of this character, then let us adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Hancock, and strike out the section already passed providing for uniformity of township organization. Let us leave the question open.

I would not unnecessarily disoblige any gentleman, but I must insist that if it is designed to make exceptions in any respect, the matter should be left open for the accommodation of all the counties; otherwise, a uniformity of law should be insisted upon. I think, to settle this matter, we should re-consider the section that has been already passed requiring a uniformity of law, and adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Hancock.

I move to lay the resolution and pending amendments on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

RE-CONSIDERATION.

Mr. OWEN offered the following resolution.

"Resolved, That the failure of a motion to re-consider any vote, of a section heretofore passed, shall not prevent a motion to instruct the committee on revision in regard to the same section."

Mr. OWEN. The gentleman from Ripley, in his remarks a short time since, expressed his opinion that if the committee on revision found matters in the Constitution which were of a contradictory nature, they might strike out a part so as to make the whole consistent. It strikes me, that is conferring upon the committee on revision great power, which, if I judge the sentiments of the Convention aright, they do not intend to confer on them.

There are not more than two or three sections upon which motions have been made to re-consider, where those motions have been defeated. This resolution of mine will not in anywise open a gate to a flood of resolutions proposing to make changes in articles already passed; hence it can operate but in these three cases.

One of the sections in question is that requiring that banks should be organized on a specie basis.

Since I have alluded to that subject, I will state in reply to the gentleman from Switzerland, that in objecting to the term "specie basis," as applied to any system of banking, I had not the slightest idea of going against the principle that all notes should, at all times, be redeemable in specie, and in nothing else. At the same time I am not at all sure what the future judicial decision may be, as to the meaning of the section which the gentleman from Putnam (Mr. Stevenson) attempted to amend; declaring that all banking shall be upon a specie basis, actually paid in.

I am not sure that the supreme court might not decide, under that section, that no bills shall be issued unless there be a specie basis of dollar for dollar. That, of course, would destroy all banking whatever. If it does not mean that—if it means only that some proportion of specie, be it only a tenth, perhaps, of the amount of bills issued, is to be paid in as a fund to redeem such bills, it affords no security, and has little force or effect of any kind.

The difficulty which will occur if this subject be left for the action of the committee of revision is evident. To avoid it, I am desirous that the whole matter should be so left open for instruction by the Convention as that the committee of revision may have an expression of their wishes and intentions in the premises.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I look upon this resolution as a dangerous one. I look upon it as a resolution that will create more turmoil and excitement in this Convention than any other proposition that has yet been introduced. If, after having your various articles acted upon under three different readings, at three different times, with the privilege of offering amendments and motions to re-consider on these different times, we are, during the last few days of our sitting, to direct a committee on revision to strike these articles out and insert them in another and different kind of phraseology, I can only say that the members of this Convention have been laboring, in regard to them, during the last three and a half months, by giving them a full and fair consideration in committee and in debate, in vain. In a few days we will undo that which it has taken us months to accomplish; and that, too, when perhaps not even one-half of our members will be present; for I have heard several gentlemen state that they are going to leave next week, and doubtless there are many others whom I have not heard so express themselves, who will pursue the same course. As for myself, I shall stay here until the last hour of our session; until your hammer comes down and announces an adjournment sine die; and I wish I had the power to detain every other member of this Convention until that time.

But to come back to this resolution: I say, if you adopt it, that at the very latest moment of our session, in the midst of excitement and turmoil, you will undo everything you have already done.

Mr. OWEN. I would remind the gentleman from Tippecanoe, that this resolution only refers to those particular cases where a motion has been made to re-consider and has failed; and not more than three such cases have occurred.

Mr. PETTIT. I do not care if there was but one. If there was but one, that one might be referred to the committee, with instructions to frame it anew, after we had expended two or three week's time in its consideration.

One word with reference to this mooted point of a specie basis. I say that, whether the bar or legal gentlemen agree with me or not, the Supreme Court never has and never will hold that a specie basis means a dollar in specie for a dollar of issue. I apprehend that there is more danger that a specie basis will be construed to mean one *fi*p in specie for every million of issue, and that there would be no trouble about such a system of currency. It does not follow, however, that there could be no banking upon a basis of one dollar of specie for a dollar of issue. Missouri has based her banking system on that plan, and her banks have been expressly prohibited from issuing more than dollar for dollar; and it has proved to be the most reliable system of banking that was ever instituted in the United States. This fact proves, then, that banking can be carried on in that way. I would not care, for my part, if the Supreme Court did decide that the issue of banks should be dollar for dollar. But there is no danger on that point. This matter of a specie basis will be settled according to the common and general sense understanding of the term. What is generally understood to be a specie basis, is three dollars of issue to one of specie; this I believe to be about the average. The Supreme Court will be guided in their decision by the general understanding and views of those who follow banking business. Commercial terms are construed commercially. I trust the resolution will not be adopted, and that we will not consent to revolutionize that which we have already done.

The PRESIDENT. Inasmuch as this resolution proposes to establish a new rule, whereby the action of the Convention must be hereafter guided under our standing regulations, it must lie over for one day. So the resolution lies over.

Mr. BADGER offered a resolution providing that the Convention commence its afternoon sessions on and after Monday next, at half-past one o'clock, P. M.; which, on motion, was rejected.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WATTS. I ask for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Convention adjourn sine die, on the 1st of February.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's resolution is out of order.

Mr. WATTS said, he would take an appeal from the decision of the Chair; but subsequently he withdrew it.

Mr. BASCOM. I move a re-consideration of the vote indefinitely postponing the question of the adjournment of this Convention, sine die, on the 15th of January.

Upon this motion the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and, being taken, the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 113, nays 11:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Anthony, Badger, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbott, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kendall of Washash, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Thomas, Trimble, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wolfe, Work, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—113.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Biddle, Bryant, Chapman, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Pettit, Prather, Robinson, Thornton, and Wiley—11.

So the vote was re-considered.

The PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the resolution be indefinitely postponed?

Mr. MOWRER. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "fifteenth of January," and inserting the words "tenth of February."

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the word "tenth," and inserting the word "seventeenth."

Mr. KELSO. I am willing to vote for the amendment fixing the time of our adjournment at the tenth of February, though I do not believe we shall get through our labors by that period. However, we can fix upon that day, and endeavor to work up to it; and if we cannot get through by that time, we can re-consider the vote fixing it, and extend the time.

Mr. FISHER. I move to lay the amendment of the gentleman from Monroe (Mr. Foster) on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word "first."

Mr. BORDEN. When this question was up before, I thought that by fixing upon early day for adjournment, we would thereby be induced to work up to it and get through with our business by the time fixed upon. Since that time, and at the present hour, I think it extremely doubtful whether this body can get through with its necessary business by Monday, two weeks. There is a large file of bills yet on our table, for consideration, and I hardly think we can get through in two weeks time.

In preparing this Constitution, we should endeavor to embrace everything in it necessary—everything that is contained in the old Constitution; but I find upon looking over the old Constitution, that there are many provisions contained in it which hitherto we have not acted upon, and the consideration of which by a committee or by the Convention, has been omitted. After sitting here as long as we have, we should not mar the work which we have performed by hasty and hurried action.

We should endeavor to perfect our work, and not for the sake of gaining a few days' time, mar that which we have already done. I am willing, however, to vote for the amendment proposing the tenth day of February as the day of adjournment, and then if we do not conclude our labors by that period, the vote fixing that day can be re-considered, and we can extend the time as long as is necessary.

Mr. KELSO. I move to lay the amendment of the gentleman from Shelby on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERROD. I move to amend the pending amendment by adding the words:

"Provided, we get through with the business our constituents sent us here to do."

Mr. GIBSON. I rise for the purpose of giving the reasons why I shall vote against this or any other proposition which provides for a final adjournment until we get through with our labors. Sir, we are unlike a Legislative body that may fix upon a day to adjourn without any great injury resulting to the community therefrom. If bills fall to be passed or to be acted upon in the Legislature by the day fixed upon for adjournment, they can receive the attention they demand, at subsequent sessions. But the case of this Convention is different. If we are governed by any operation of this kind—if we fix upon a day, and important provisions in the Constitution are not ready by the time fixed for adjournment, our entire labor for the last three or four months will be lost—for we present a defective Constitution to the people.

And again, if we fix upon a day for adjournment we place it within the power of ten members of this body a few days previous to final adjournment, to stave off important subjects, and render nugatory our whole action by calling the yeas and nays, and making motions to adjourn, until the time appointed for our final separation. I do not say that this will be done; but simply that it can be done. I am unwilling to place it in the power of a small minority to defeat the action of this House.

Mr. PETTIT. I move to lay the resolution and pending amendments on the table.

Upon a division—ayes 62, noes 51,

The motion was agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. KILGORE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee on revision and phraseology be instructed to add to the last section of article 51 the following words: "and if a majority of the legal voters shall vote aye, then this article shall be taken as a part of the Constitution." "

Mr. PETTIT. This is part and parcel of the same thing I was contending against this morning; we shall be flooded with resolutions of this character. I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. KILGORE. I trust the gentleman will allow me the privilege of—

Mr. PETTIT. Oh, if the gentleman desires to debate the resolution, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. KILGORE. I simply desire to remark that the last section of this article provides for a vote to be taken on the subject of the exclusion of negroes, without declaring what the effect of the vote shall be. The object of my resolution is to express at the close of the section clearly and satisfactorily what will be the effect of the vote.

Mr. PETTIT. I renew my motion to lay upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKBANK asked leave to withdraw from the files of the Convention a petition which he had offered a few days since referring to the rights of negroes.

Leave was granted.

ORDERS OF THE DAY,

Mr. READ of Clark. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That we now proceed to the consideration of the orders of the day.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WALPOLE. Before proceeding with the orders of the day, I would simply state that on the third of December an article was passed by a vote—yeas 116, nays none—authorizing the Legislature to provide for a uniform mode of doing county and township business; I move a re-consideration of the vote by which that section was passed. It is the eleventh section of article seventh.

Upon this motion the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and, being taken, the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 27, nays 98:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bascom, Beach, Blythe, Butler, Clark of Tippecanoe, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Gibson, Harbolt, Hendricks, Hitt, Huff, Johnson of D., Kelso, Logan, McLean, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Smith of Ripley, Walpole, Watts, and Wolfe—27.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Badger, Barbour, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cole, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Edmonston Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Goozee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Had-don, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hovey, Howe, Johnson of O., Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimble, Wheeler, Wiley, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—98

So the vote on the passage of the section was not re-considered.

STATE DEBT.

The Convention then proceeded to the consideration of article thirty-seven, which is as follows:

"SEC. —. All the revenue derived from the sale of any of the public works belonging to the State, and from the net annual income thereof, and any surplus that may at any time remain in the Treasury derived from taxation for general State purposes, after the payment of the ordinary expenses of the Government, and the interest on bonds of the State, (other than Bank bonds,) shall be annally applied, under the direction of the General Assembly, to the payment of the principal of the State debt."

The section being upon its third reading,

Mr. HOWE moved to re-commit, with instructions to add—

"That a specific tax of fifty thousand dollars, with an annual increase of five per cent., be levied for twenty-five years, and expended each year in the purchase of our State bonds, unless the State debt is sooner paid off."

Mr. H. said, by the calculation I have made, assuming the State debt to amount to six million of dollars, with an interest of five per cent., amounting to three hundred thousand dollars per year, we can pay, by raising three hundred thousand dollars every year, together with a specific tax of fifty thousand dollars per annum, with a progressive increase of five per cent. every year, on the amount raised the previous year, two and a half millions of dollars in twenty-five years, being nearly one-half of the entire debt. I do not think, sir, that we can perform any act that will be more grateful to the people, than to set them an example in this matter, and show them some method of paying this debt. It is perfectly useless to leave a matter of this kind to the Legislature, subject, as it will be, to be delayed from time to time. The benefit to result from a sinking fund system depends very much on its early adoption.

Take the whole of our capital invested in the different departments of industry, and it will be found to yield nothing like five per cent.; therefore, we can save money by getting out of debt; and the only way to do this is to establish a permanent sinking fund. Another method of doing it has been pointed out by the honorable chairman of the committee having charge of this subject; but the proposition he presented was subsequently withdrawn. If that proposition had carried, I would not have offered the present one. I now take the course which I pledged myself to do, if his proposition failed. Every gentleman can see for himself, if he chooses, to make the calculation, that what I have stated is correct; and I do not believe we can do anything that will be more acceptable to the people than to make provision for the payment of this debt. The amount will be scarcely felt by the people generally; and an increase of five per cent. per year for twenty-five years will not be a greater ratio of increase than that of the increase of the wealth of the State during that period. It is very probable that the present rate and method of taxation guarantied in what is commonly the Butler Bill will be observed; but even if that taxation affords a fund for the payment of the debt, this will enable us to pay it off sooner. Besides, our public debt was contracted chiefly for the benefit of property, and property should pay it. My amendment contemplates this method. By the Butler Bill, a poll tax of seventy-five cents is established. Again: a sinking fund is the simplest and most effectual method of paying off any public debt. Our public debt is a severe and lasting grievance, and I believe it to be of the utmost importance to establish in this Constitution some method by which it may be, with absolute certainty, at some time paid off.

Such a plan, instead of depressing the value of property in the State, will raise it, I believe, by an amount more than an equivalent to the burden of the tax.

Mr. BORDEN. I desire to make an inquiry of my friend from Gibson, (Mr. Hall,) whether the section now under consideration provides that any overplus of the taxes arising from the imposition of twenty-five cents tax on the hundred dollars valuation, shall be applied to the definite object of liquidating the principle of our outstanding State debt, after the payment of the interest on the debt?

Mr. HALL. The arrangement, and only arrangement with our bond-holders was under the acts of '46 and '47, by which twenty-five cents on every hundred dollars worth of taxable property, and seventy-five cents poll tax were pledged for the payment of principal and interest of the public debt, until it shall be entirely paid. According to a calculation made, if this system of taxation shall be continued, in eighteen years, the entire public debt will be paid off. The committee of which I am chairman, having charge of the subject, believing that there was a propriety in placing it beyond the power of the Legislature to violate the pledged faith of the State, instructed me to introduce a section providing that the twenty-five cents on each one hundred dollars of taxable property, and seventy-five cents poll tax, should be annually assessed until the debt was paid. This section was laid upon the table, and, I think, inconsiderately. I think the matter should be placed beyond the power of change by the Legislature.

Mr. BORDEN. Sir, on a previous occasion, I desired that this should be done; because I know that this is the wish of the people I have been sent here to represent. They do not want the subject to be left with the Legislature. They are willing to carry out in good faith the arrangement made with the bond-holders of the State, and to pay twenty-five cents tax upon every one hundred dollars valuation, until the State debt is extinguished; and they desire that a clause should be inserted in the Constitution, which shall secure the application of this overplus to the extinguishment of the principal of the State debt.

For my own part, I cannot conceive why, if there be an overplus any one year, the officers of State may not be authorized to go into market and buy up our State bonds at whatever price they can, and destroy them, and thus relieve us from that much of the debt. I have conversed with gentlemen who are familiar with this subject, who have stated that there would be nothing improper in the State's pursuing such a course.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am entirely opposed, sir, to levying taxes upon the people; but am in favor of leaving the whole subject open to the action of the Legislature. I look upon a law imposing taxes, as a departure from the spirit of our institutions. See how tenacious the people have been hitherto, in regard to this subject; they would not even permit the Senate of your State to levy taxes, when that is a body elected only once in three years. The people have required, heretofore, that all bills providing for taxation, should originate in the House of Representatives. And, sir, shall we so far depart from the original spirit of our government, as to take upon ourselves, in Convention, to levy taxes upon the people, without regard to the monetary condition of the country from time to time. Taxes must be levied equally in all cases.

Sir, this attempt to levy an additional tax upon the people by us, is all wrong. I believe there is virtue enough in the people, to settle this matter through their representatives in the Legislature; and I much prefer to leave it with that body.

Mr. WALPOLE. I do not think that this section should be adopted. If there is a section to be incorporated in the Constitution on this subject, it should provide for the fulfillment of the contracts on the part of the State, on the condition that the bondholders carry out their part of them in good faith; but the State should not be compelled to fulfil these contracts without regard to a want of faith on the part of her bondholders. The bondholders, distrustful of Indiana, would not take the legislative enactment on the subject as a sufficient guarantee, but insisted upon having the intervention of trustees, that they might enforce the bonds against the State. I object to the section, because there is not a corresponding pledge required on the part of the bond-holders to carry out their obligations.

Another ground of objection which I have to the section, is, that the Legislature, in order to carry out its provisions, may sell the interest of the State in the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad—which, after the year '52, will bring eighty thousand dollars, and apply the money to the discharge of the interest on the public indebtedness. This is a matter which should be left with the Legislature. Gentlemen who represented the Wabash canal interests the year before last, obtained from the General Assembly, an act authorizing them to sue these trustees, I have referred to, and they have been involved in legislation ever since. They allege that the trustees refused to perform the contract imposed upon them. Now it becomes these gentlemen interested in the Wabash canal to see that the interests of their portion of the State are not compromised in the section under consideration. But what provision could be adopted that would more certainly guarantee that their debts would be safe, let their acts be what they may—when they know, too, that the representatives they send to the Legislature would most certainly stand for their interests.

I prefer to leave the matter entirely with the Legislature. I hold, in addition, that nothing should go into the Constitution, that shall not be as lasting as the Constitution itself. This Constitution may last a hundred years, and long before that period has arrived, the public indebtedness of the State will probably be discharged, so that the Constitutional provision would then be of no effect.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The section reported by the committee on the State debt and public works, has no relation to taxation, and therefore I suppose the remarks of my friend from Putnam (Mr. Stevenson) have no application to that section. The provisions of the section are simply that the proceeds of any of the public works belonging to the State, if sold, and the net income of any that may continue the property of the State, together with any surplus that may at any time remain in the treasury, derived from taxation for general State purposes, after the payment of ordinary expenditures and the interests on the State debt, shall be applied to the payment of the principal of said public debt, under the direction of the General Assembly. I am wholly at a loss to see any reasonable objection to the section. Unquestionably the proceeds of the State's interest in any of the public works, should be held sacred to the extinguishment of the indebtedness created for their construction, and I think there can be no objection to the provision that any surplus remaining in the treasury, shall be applied to the same great object. The chairman of the committee, at an early period of the session of this Convention, made an elaborate calculation in regard to the public debt, and an effort was made to have it spread before the Convention, but, for some reason, which I never could understand, a majority of the Convention refused him the opportunity, until the subject came up for consideration a day or two ago. I have examined that calculation with care, and I think it opens up a pleasing prospect of the extinguishment of the debt at a period not very remote. It appears to be more accurate than any other calculation recently presented to the public. By it, if the present rate of taxation is continued, the entire debt will be paid in fifteen or sixteen years after 1853—the period between this time and 1853, being allowed for the extinction of our domestic indebtedness. The calculation goes upon the principle of an immediate application of the surplus means to the purchase of the State stocks at their market value. The par value of the five per cent. stocks, is about eighty-three to the hundred dollars, and at that rate, $100,000 would purchase stocks to the amount of $120,000. The par value of the two and a half per cent stocks, is about half as much as the par value of the five per cent stocks, and of course will cost only about half as much in the market. Other calculations are based upon the principle that dollar for dollar is to be paid both for the five per cent. and the two and a half per cent. stocks, and that is one of the reasons the calculation of the gentleman from Gibson pays the debt at an earlier period than the others.

The gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole) seems to think that it would be wrong to insert such a provision in the Constitution, for the reason that the bond-holders may violate their part of the contract. Now, Mr. President, by the arrangement with the bond-holders, we gave them the Wabash and Erie Canal, and the lands donated for the completion of it, as an absolute payment of one-half of our indebtedness. The other half must be paid out of the State treasury, and this section has reference, of course, only to that part of the debt which rests upon the treasury. If the bond-holders fail to comply with their part of the contract, there is a remedy in the law.

Mr. President, I would like to say something more upon this subject, but I perceive there is some impatience manifested by a portion of the members, and I will, therefore, abstain from further remark, and let the question be taken.

Mr. RITCHEY. I move to re-commit the section with instructions to strike out and insert that "the present rate of taxation, twenty-five cents on taxable property and seventy-five cents on each poll, shall be continued until the indebtedness of the State is fully liquidated." I would remark that this is a transcript of the report of the committee on the subject; and I have no doubt if this course is adopted, that in some fifteen or eighteen years the public indebtedness of the State will cease to exist. Under the action of the General Assembly we made this agreement with our bondholders, in reference to the payment of the bonds they held, which constituted the public debt. The adoption of a proposition of this kind will not only increase the credit of this State, but do away with any suspicion that we have any disposition to repudiate the contracts we have made. We owe it to our constituents that we should endeavor to erase the unjust aspersions cast upon them in relation to this matter. And it is due also to our bondholders that we should repeat here, in this Convention, the action of the Legislature in the arrangement made by which, in some fifteen years, we will rid our States of its public debt.

Let me say that the State of Illinois, and many other States, have adopted a provision of the same kind, with reference to their funded debts, in their several Constitutions.

[Here there was much stamping of feet and confusion in the Hall.]

If gentlemen insist upon it, I will not continue my remarks further. I was just about closing them without the stimulus of rude interruption. I have never, since I have been a member of this Convention, assisted in "knocking down" any gentleman on this floor. As other gentlemen have met with the same treatment, perhaps I should not complain. I give way to "noise and confusion."

Mr. SHOUP. I call for the previous question.

Upon a division—ayes 42, noes 40—the call was seconded.

The previous question having been ordered to be put—

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first taken upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Johnson (Mr. Ritchey) to the pending instructions.

The question was put and decided in the negative.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Lagrange (Mr. Howe) to re-commit with instructions.

On this motion the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and taken with the following result—yeas 8, nays 112:

YEAS.—Messrs. Beach, Colfax, Hitt, Howe, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, and Newman—8.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Badger, Barbour, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Bidle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimby, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Work, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—112.

So the motion to re-commit did not prevail.

The section then passed—the rule being suspended requiring the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALPOLE here entered his protest upon the journal against the action of the Convention in suspending the rules requiring the yeas and nays in the passage of article No. 37, just under consideration, and also against the adoption of said article.

LAW REFORM.

The section providing for the election by the people of three commissioners to simplify the law and law proceedings, was then taken up and read a third time.

The PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the section pass?

Mr. EDMONSTON. I trust gentlemen will reflect upon this matter before they pass this section, especially the friends of law reform. My honest opinion is, that this section will have the effect of defeating the object desired by this Convention, and thereby the country, by procrastinating the work for years. Let us see how the matter stands: These commissioners will not be elected until the necessary concurrent authority is given by the Legislature which will meet in 1852; and that election will not take place until the month of October succeeding that session, which will be in the year 1853. Then these reports cannot be acted upon until the succeeding meeting of the Legislature in 1854. Thus four years will elapse before the object so much desired by the majority of this Convention, and the people of the State, will be effected.

With this view of the subject I leave it to the good sense of this Convention whether they had not better leave the election of these commissioners to the Legislature, rather than procrastinate it by leaving it with the people. I believe that an election thus made would meet with the hearty concurrence of the people.

Mr. McFARLAND. I do not see that it makes any particular difference whether these commissioners are appointed by the Legislature or elected by the people, so far as the expediting of the business they are to be appointed to perform is concerned. Suppose, however, that they be appointed by the Legislature. That cannot take place until the session preceding the time at which their election would necessarily take place. If elected by the people they would have eighteen months in which to perform their labors, before the meeting of the Legislature.

Mr. MAGUIRE. It seems to me that there is no necessity for this clause providing for the election of these commissioners by the people, for the reason that, if I am not mistaken, the Convention has already adopted a general provision requiring that all officers whose election is not provided for in this Constitution, shall be elected by the people.

Mr. GIBSON. As a sincere and honest friend of the reform contemplated by the section as it now stands, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. It is one of a series of amendments upon which I made a few remarks the other day. The attempt to reform the rules of pleading and practice met, from the start, fair and open opposition; and it had also been met in a more covert way, by proposing amendments calculated to defeat the object of the measure. This is one of the class of covert and trickstering amendments; it does not totally defeat the object designed, but it procrastinates it.

Sir, let the Legislature, when it next meets, appoint these commissioners, and let them go to work side by side with the Legislature, and let them, from time to time, report their labors to the Legislature; and if these commissioners are the right kind of men, they will have concluded their labors before the Legislature adjourns, as its session will necessarily be protracted to mature provisions rendered necessary under the new Constitution.

The change contemplated to be effected by these commissioners, consists mainly in the abolition of the distinction between law and equity, and general reform in the proceedings of courts; so that it need not take them long to finish their labors. Besides, they have the light of other commissions to guide them; they are not marking out a new and untrodden path. They have the action of the New York and other commissioners, which they may consult. If they cannot accomplish the duty imposed upon them in three months, all I have to say is, they will not be fit for their place.

If you put a man in this office for eighteen months or two years, you must give him some kind of salary proportioned to that time; and yet, when I proposed on yesterday an amendment, fixing the pay of these commissioners at not exceeding, for the whole labor, one thousand dollars, it was voted down, not by the friends of reform, but by its enemies.

I ask the true friends of reform, to come up and assist in voting this proposition down, and then let us pass a provision restricting the amount of salary of these officers. I am willing to vote for, and I believe it would be ample compensation to any commissioner, for the labor of simplifying our law proceedings, to fix it at five hundred dollars, believing it is sufficient, and that we can obtain the best talent in the State for it.

I say now, as I said the other day, this amendment comes from the wrong quarter. Vote it down, if you wish to carry out the reform for which we have been struggling. There is safety in no other course.

Mr. KELSO. Sir, I offered this section in good faith, and if there is any trick in it, I am as badly shaved as any of the rest. If there is anything about it wrong, I don't know it. I would say to the gentleman from Clark, (Mr. Gibson,) that my objection to his proposition offered yesterday, to limit the salary of these commissioners, is this: that it is tantamount to saying that the commissioners shall make one thousand dollars in as short a time as possible, and without specifying what labors they shall perform. He says that his measure of retrenchment was voted down by a majority of the Convention, who were the enemies of reform. Sir, there are no enemies of reform here; we are differing only about the best mode of doing the same thing. Now I undertake to say, that two to one of the members of this Convention are in favor of reform on the subject of law practice; but when you attempt to talk about reforming the law, you might as well talk about reforming the science of mathematics, or of orthodox Christianity. You may simplify the law and its practice; but law is itself a regular science, without which society would become disorganized and anarchical. We cannot reform the law; but we may simplify it, so that it shall retain all the essential elements of the science, and yet be more easily comprehended.

But, sir, what difficulty, I ask, will arise from the election of this commission by the people, and the limitation of the term which these individuals shall continue in office under that commission to two years?

Suppose the Legislature, at its next meeting, should elect these commissioners, and they remain in session for three months; can any man in his right mind suppose that these commissioners would be ready to report a new and revised code of practice, before the Legislature should terminate its session, and yet that body have time to decide and act upon their labors? Certainly not. Sir, these men will have to pass measures affecting my life, my liberty, my property, and my reputation, and the life, liberty, property, and reputation of every other citizen. They are to prescribe the rules of practice in our courts of justice, by which every great principle affecting human rights shall be put in practice. And the people earnestly desire that they should have the privilege of electing these important arbiters, as well as all other officers of equal importance.

The term of these officers should be fixed; otherwise we do not know how long their labors may be protracted. In New York, where a similar commission was appointed, it has continued its sessions for three years—the only result of their protracted labors so far being, that they have made the laws of the State more uncertain and more complicated than they were before, and have materially increased litigation; and how long they will continue their work, no one can tell, nor what is to be the result of their labors.

Sir, the amount of compensation for the services of these commissioners, should be left with the people and their representatives. They should be paid in proportion to the labor they perform, and if they are industrious in the prosecution of their labors, they will soon bring them to a close.

All that is desired, sir, is, that the people shall have the privilege of electing these important officers, and that their salaries shall be fixed by the Legislature, and in addition, the term of office shall be determined. We do not seek by this section, to limit those commissioners in their labors; we do not seek to cripple their powers, or in any way to trammel them; we leave them free to act, to the fullest extent, without throwing so much as one straw in the way of their progress.

But, sir, this is a stupendous power to be exercised upon one of the most important departments of your State government—the judiciary of your State. I ask if that department of your State Government—the legislative—which creates your laws, is any more important to the safety and well being of the people than is the judicial department, which decides what really is the law, and its full bearing, force, and effect, upon the community? Certainly not. And who among us would insist, for one moment, that the members of the next General Assembly should have power to elect members of the Legislature next after themselves? Would the people, think you, quietly submit to such a high-handed usurpation of power? Certainly they would not. I ask, then, have they any less interest in the present question? No less. Their interest, involved in this great scheme of legal reform, is as deep and as all-absorbing as is the continuance of any one of the great departments of State Government; and all that the friends of this section ask, is, that the officers who are to make those great legal reforms may be chosen by the people, for whom they are to act. Shall this be denied? Sir, when this vote is taken, we shall see who is for the largest liberty—who it is that can trust the same people that have trusted him—who it is that comes here, sir, to create a host of new officers, unheard of and unthought of by the people, and at the same time deny them the privilege of choosing those officers. Sir, let him who distrusts the honesty, purity, and competency of the people, so cast his vote—against this section. For my own part, I choose to submit this whole affair to the people, to act upon it for themselves as may best accord with their own judgments; for that reason I have offered this section, for that reason I will vote for it to the last.

Messrs. WALPOLE and WOLFE expressed themselves in favor of the section as it stood, and trusted it would be adopted.

Mr. HAMILTON moved the previous question; pending which,

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention resumed the consideration of the

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Allen, (Mr. Hamilton,) for the call of the previous question.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. President, I am asked to withdraw my motion for the previous question. It is the first time I ever made that motion. My object was to save time, believing, as I did that debates now, on almost any question, are useless, and tend to prolong our session. Last month, my colleague (Judge Borden) made a motion that the Convention should adjourn early in this month. I then thought it was premature, as we seemed to have made little progress in our labors. A highly respectable paper, in its editorial, complimented him for his exertion to cause an early adjournment. Voting as I did against that motion, it is due to myself now to say that we again differ; I think we can adjourn before the tenth of next month, if we cut off useless debate; my colleague thinks not. To carry out my wishes, I have moved the previous question, cutting off further discussion, if sustained. At the request of the gentleman from Vanderburgh, (Mr. Lockhart,) I will withdraw it, he having agreed to renew it.

The question being upon the passage of the section, providing for the election of the commissioners, &c., &c., by the people,

Mr. LOCKHART. I am opposed to the passage of this section, for the reason that we have already passed one that provides for the election of the commissioners by the Legislature. Prompt and speedy action will be desired in reforming, revising, simplifying, and abridging, the rules and practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings, both civil and criminal.

The more expeditious mode, therefore, of choosing the commissioners, ought to be preferred. I think that the gentleman from Dubois, (Mr. Edmonston,) has clearly shown that one year at least will be saved by electing the commissioners by the General Assembly. There can, therefore, I repeat it, be no necessity for passing the section now under consideration.

I now desire to say a few words about the section passed on yesterday. There is a provision in that section, which, in my judgment, ought not to be there; I refer to the provision in relation to a revision of our statute laws. That provision, it is true, is not restrictive, but permissive. It permits the Legislature to do precisely what it has a right to do without permission, and therefore ought not to be in the Constitution.

I was anxious to have offered an amendment by which this provision could have been stricken out, but the call of the previous question prevented it. This morning, I would have offered a resolution instructing the committee on revision to strike out all that part of the section, but from the action of the Convention I discovered a disinclination to instruct that committee on any subject. Upon the subject of legal reform, I desire to say that I will go as far as he who will go farthest. I am for breaking down all distinctions between the several forms of action, and for having the law administered in an uniform mode, without reference to the distinctions between law and equity. It is high time, sir, that the artificial distinctions which have so long clogged the wheels of justice should be dispensed with. We have already passed a section which provides "that all courts shall be open, and every person, for injury done to him, in his person, property, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and in the beautiful language of Lord Coke, that section declares that "justice shall be administered freely and without purchase, completely and without denial, speedily and without delay." The provisions of this section can never be realized until the reforms alluded to are carried out in practise.

I must here, sir, be permitted to say that the denunciatory language used on last evening by the gentleman from Clark, (Mr. Gibson,) and by the Rev. gentleman from Putnam, (Mr. Badger,) was ill-timed. There are TRUE FRIENDS of legal reform upon this floor, who understand the subject upon which they speak—who are prepared to act understandingly; men, sir, who will not swallow the dogmas of either of those gentlemen. I am now done with this subject, but hope that before our labors close, some friend of legal reform will move to re-consider the vote taken upon the passage of the section, so that its objectionable features may be stricken out.

Mr. KELSO. I understand the gentleman as not finding fault with the section. I agree with him that this clause was passed under the operation of the previous question. Now the simple question is "shall the people or the Legislature appoint these commissioners?" I maintain that if the people are competent to elect the men to decide what the law is, they are equally competent to elect men to simplify the practice under the law. If they have the privilege in the one case, why not in the other. I contend that they should elect them, and select them from such portions of the State as they may think proper. But I shall not further detain the Convention.

Mr. THORNTON. I do not wish to trouble the Convention at this late stage of this matter, by making a speech. I desire however to have this question understood before we take a vote upon it; and I hope this will be the last action we will have upon the subject.

I have oftentimes listened with pleasure to the remarks of the gentleman from Switzerland, (Mr. Kelso,) whose strong good sense has made him a very useful member of the Convention. But he had either dismissed that monitor, on the present occasion, or he underrated the judgment of this Convention very much, when he undertook to declaim so loudly about his rights as one of the freeman of this State, jeopardized by delegating to the Commissioners as proposed in the section, the mere simple duty of preparing a code of practice for the final action of the General Assembly. He affected to believe, and seemed to press the matter as if he was really in earnest, that by the section, the power of the Legislature, would be conferred on said commissioners. He certainly could not have read it with sufficient care, for I venture to assert that no man possessed of the most ordinary degree of discrimination, upon reading it, would come to such a preposterous conclusion. These commissioners would be vested with similar powers with that of an ordinary committee appointed by a Legislature during its session, to take into consideration any matter referred to it and to draft and report a bill accordingly for the final action of such Legislature. He insists that if the power of making laws is to be conferred on these commissioners the people ought to have the right to elect them as being in accordance with the principles of true democracy. This suggestion of the gentleman is so glaringly fallacious as to be liable to detection at the first blush—why he might as well contend for electing the committees attached to the Legislature. The language of the section clearly imports, that the commissioners to be appointed are to prepare a code of practice and report the same to the General Assembly, for its final approval or disapproval. No one of the friends of the measure, ever dreamed of any such a ridiculous notion, as that any act of such commissioners would become binding or acquire the force of law without the final action of the Legislature. It is also a matter of special wonder too, to see one like the gentleman from Switzerland, who has had so much legislative experience, and who arrogates to himself such a profound acquaintance with the law and its history, pretending to treat the matter, as if he had never read or heard of a similar course having been pursued. If he has not he is much more ignorant than I have taken him to be, but if he has, and disguises his knowledge, he is guilty of a most reprehensible degree of incincerity, for which he deserves a pointed rebuke at the hands of this Convention.

I should very much regret to see this section which is advocated by the gentleman attached to the one we have heretofore passed, as it would virtually destroy it, and render it absolutely unmeaning and wholly inoperative. This is no doubt, what the gentleman and those who are co-operating with him, wish. He and they, though assuming the guise of friends, are covert deadly enemies, for when thus pretending a wish to amend one section, it is only an insidious plan to destroy it. For my part I cannot but view with suspicion any thing tendered under the color of favor, coming from an enemy—"Timco Danaoset dona ferentes," as was well said by the wary Trojan when seeing the hostile Greeks presenting the wooden horse to the tutelar deity of the city of Troy. I think we had best profit by his wise suggestion, and decline the acceptance of the proffered aid from an avowed enemy, and especially from one who has so recently denounced our measure as wholly at war with common sense and its advocates as little better than fools and pettifoggers. If the gentleman has in fact become favorable to it, he has certainly undergone a very rapid conversion.

But even if it were proper to elect these commissioners by the people, the wording of our original section is broad enough to meet that object. The language is, "the General Assembly shall provide for the appointment of three commissioners." &c. Under this the Legislature might provide that they should be elected by the people if it should deem it advisable. The whole power is vested in it to prescribe the course of appointment, and that is sufficient to meet all which could be reasonably desired by the most ultra advocate for popular elections. I repeat it however, that no same Legislature will ever come to such a preposterous conclusion.

I agree with the gentleman from Vanderburgh (Mr. Lockhart) in wishing to see our plan, for the present, restricted to a mere code of practice or law procedure. I would have preferred leaving out the part which contemplates a general codification of of the whole body of the law; but as it is only permissive on the part of the Legislature to adopt such a course, it may as well remain as it is.

The argument used in favor of the adoption of the pending amendment is that among other things it goes to limit the tenure of the commissioners term of appointment. Well it does seem plain to me, that the language of the original section is sufficiently broad, to cover even that. It provides that the General Assembly shall regulate the tenure of office of the said commissioners, and under it the term of their appointment may be made as long or as short as the Legislature may deem proper. It will possess a complete control over, not only the term of appointment, but the course of proceeding, compensation, &c. It thus appears that the proposed section is wholly unnecessary, as every thing it is intended to embrace, is fully provided for in the original section, which we have passed heretofore. To adopt it then would only uselessly incumber the article.

Let me here before closing my remarks say a word to the friends of the original section. It has been tauntingly said, that our militia troops, are in a bad state of drill, though sufficiently strong to carry our point, if we could act in concert. I must confess, I regretted to see unfortunate divisions made in our ranks, caused by the artful, insidious maneuvering of a wiley enemy. Some of our friends were decoyed off by the plausible show of economy by substituting one commissioner instead of three, as proposed in the original section, and now again, they are amused with the false pretense that the proposed section is necessary to limit the tenure of the office of said commissioners. I sincerely hope that the real friends of the measure, will not suffer themselves to be any longer gulled with the false pretenses of the opposition, but come up manfully, and firmly, at once, and promptly vote down this, and every thing else conflicting with our favorite measure. Our opponents certainly hold out in their opposition with unexampled pertinacity. Although they have encountered defeat after defeat, they do not seem to be humbled or discouraged. after seeing the result of ninety-three votes against their thirty, I had supposed they would be inclined to abandon the field, but not so. They certainly die very hard. This is, in my humble opinion, evincing very little respect for the will of the majority, and that so strongly and repeatedly indicated, as has been on this question. Let it be remembered that they threw every obstacle in the way of the passage of our measure during its progress through the Convention until its final passage, and now after it has been passed and received the sanction of an overwhelming majority, they come in at a late hour and seek to destroy and nullify it by clogging it with a senseless and unmeaning amendment.

I cannot dismiss this subject, however, without taking a passing notice of some assertions made by the gentleman from Switzerland, (Mr. Kelso,) whilst he was engaged in the discussion of this question. He undertook to assert in a manner which indicated the greatest confidence, that this system had been a complete failure in New York, where it has been introduced some two or three years ago, and then again, he involved himself in a contradiction and palpable inconsistency, by roundly alleging that the committee then appointed to prepare a code of procedure, had been engaged at it several years, but had not yet completed it. This was held up as a scare-crow to frighten our timid lay friends, but to those who are informed correctly on the subject, it only conduced to show to them he was either wholly ignorant of the facts of the case or was disposed recklessly to hazard assertions without much regard to their truth. In reply to this, I undertake to state that the commissioners of New York appointed for that purpose, have completed their code, of both criminal and civil procedure, that it has gone into full operation and has been found to work well and to exceed even the expectations of its most sanguine advocates. When speaking of the completion of this code, I do not imitate the course of the gentleman from Switzerland, in venturing random assertions, without having any actual knowledge of the truth of what I say. But I speak knowingly. I have some months ago, received from the Hon. D. D. Field, one of the commissioners, a copy of the code, and it is now at my room at the Capital House, in this city, to be seen and inspected by any gentleman choosing to call and examine it. The gentlemen from Switzerland is at liberty to infer what was the estimate placed by me on his round and unqualified assertions in regard to this matter.

Whilst noticing this subject, I must be indulged in calling the attention of the Convention to a brief article I have extracted from the Madison Courier, copied by the editor, from the London Nwes, a leading English Journal of high reputation. The terms of commendation in which this article speaks of the New York code of procedure, will, I hope, serve as a complete set-off against the weight of the opinions expressed by the learned gentleman from Switzerland against it. Here it is:

LAW REFORM.

The London News, referring to what has been done in this regard by New York, says:

"We consider this subject so important, and we find in that code so admirable a model for our own guidance, that we intend to lay the principal portions of it before our readers; we mean those portions by which the distinction between Law and Equity is abolished, which give a single form of action, which abolish special pleading, and which provide for the the trials of issues, in fact and of issues of law. There are also very valuable provisions respecting costs, and the right of examining the hostile parties in the case, which we shall also extract in extenso.

We earnestly beg the attention of our readers to this code, because it shows us exactly what we want. There we have it, not in vague suggestions or crude fancies, but in definite black and white, and in full and careful detail. It comes also to us recommended by the test of actual experience. It has now worked for nearly two years in New York, and has worked to the thorough satisfaction of all parties there, except some of the bench and bar, who there, as everywhere else, dislike all change, are incapable of all philosophical comprehension, and cling like rust to the old fashioned institutions in which they were born and bred."

In addition to this, as I have heretofore stated in the course of some remarks which I have made on this subject, the opinions and arguments of both the Attorney General and Solicitor General of Great Britain, in favor of Law Reform, and especially in reference to this much abused New York code, must put to silence all the objections of the gentleman, and those who are acting in opposition with him. It would be a waste of time and breath to use further argument in refutation of their positions. It is truly a matter of astonishment to me, to see gentlemen so well informed and intelligent as some of those are who have opposed this salutary measure indicating such a want of correct information as regards the progress of reform in the science of jurisprudence throughout the Union generally. They certainly are less read in the history of the times than I had supposed, or they are attempting, in no very creditable way, to impose upon the judgment of this Convention. I therefore hope that the section under consideration will be voted down.

Mr. SPANN. I will give my reasons why I shall vote against the final passage of the section. My vote has been cast in every instance against the measure, and I regard it as being consistent if I vote against it now. The venerable gentleman on my right, made an allusion to the Trojan horse. I would carry out the idea and say—"When Greek meets Greek, then comes the tug of war." The gentlemen of the bar try to plume themselves over us—the lay members of this Convention. I claim to be one of the lay members of this body. I am not familiar with the law, I never studied it, nor did I study common sense much; but, however, I trust I am endowed with sufficient of perception to distinguish between one thing and another—at all events between my right hand and my left hand. When the Convention is divided on this very question—when it is stated to us as it was by the gentleman from Clark, that the measure is intended especially for the bar—for the professional men and the students who cannot enter the sanctuary of the law on account of the rubbish that blocks up the portal, I am admonished that it is our duty to consult the interests of the litigants in our courts, rather than those of the members of the bar. I am willing to go for a simplification of the mode of practice.

This question of codification has not been discussed before the people—it never has been adopted by the people and bar of this State. I think the matter is out of place coming up at this late day. I know one thing in relation to it, and that is that I shall record my vote against any attempt to foist upon the people of this State, any dozen or half a dozen superannuated lawyers to be made commissioners of for life. I will vote against any proposition that will go to foist judges, farmers, or any others, no matter what, upon the State as life officers.

The proposition yesterday, was to limit the tenure of this office to two years. That I was willing should be adopted, but now, however, we have the old original section up, which is to place these commissioners in office for life. As I said before, I am opposed to any such measure as that. Indeed, sir, I think a few plain, common sense farmers could do as much in this matter in a few hours, as these commissioners could do in two years.

[A VOICE. That is the idea.]

I will not vote for any proposition, I care not how much it may be termed law reform, that will go to fasten upon the people life incumbents. I will here—

Mr. KELSO. That matter has been passed over long ago.

Mr. SPANN. I understood when I made my remarks, that it was under consideration. I am corrected, however.

Mr. WALPOLE (in his seat). But you are right in your remarks.

Mr. SPANN. I go against foisting on the State any man, or set of men, in perpetuity, to do a thing that can be done by the Legislature in about six hours.

Mr. NILES. As I have said before, so I repeat again, that I am in favor of all reasonable reforms in the practice of law. But I am greatly mistaken, or there are gentlemen on this floor, who think that reform and distinction are identical. Judging from these debates, one would suppose that we have men among us whose crude ideas of the principles and practice of the law could be made to supercede the learning and experience of a thousand years. The purpose has been expressed that the commissioners shall be appointed from among those who are called, par excellence, the friends of the reform. Now, sir, if their action were to affect only themselves, I would not have a word to say. They might experiment to their hearts' content. But when experiments are to disturb all the interests of society, I would call upon them to stay their hand, and to act with some little caution. I see, or think I see, the disposition clearly manifested, to enter upon a system of innovation and change, following the guidance of theory rather than the light of experience. I have no sympathy with anything of the kind. I should look upon it as an unmitigated evil to have three theorizing lawyers set to tinkering with such a subject. And, sir, I would rather, to-day, trust three plain, sensible farmers, who never looked inside of a law book, to reform the practice and codify the laws, than three such lawyers. It would be a task upon which really great and leanned men would enter with the utmost caution. They would move slowly—would do what was clearly shown to be safe at the moment, and while experiments were being tried elsewhere, would wait and observe the results. Your theorist would lay about him in the work of destruction as though he were building up instead of pulling down. He would be ready to rely upon some newspaper article, or a letter from a lawyer, or a judge, and destroy, by a stroke of his pen, the work of centuries. I fear, sir, that it was too much, in such a spirit, that this Convention adopted the section which, if fully carried into effect, may sweep away the whole system of equity jurisprudence. Have gentlemen considered what they are doing? That system of equity jurisprudence and practice is a more effectual protection to the innocent and undersigning, and more of a check upon fraud and villainy, and of a terror to evil doers, than all the fines, and jails, and penitentiaries in Christendom; and yet, it seems to be imagined that whoever can be the first to blot it out, will be entitled to lasting gratitude. And what is there so unreasonable in the practice in chancery? The best possible bill in chancery is the shortest, and plainest possible statement of the facts on which the party complaining relies for his right to recover, with scarcely any thing of technicality about it; and the best possible answer in chancery, is the shortest and plainest possible statement of the facts on which the opposite party relies for his defense. An unskillful lawyer may make, of either, a long, and formal, and awkward document. But if he does, it is entirely his own fault. A gentleman said the other day, that he once had a law suit to recover the value of some property, and that he could understand nothing of the pleadings. Now, sir, I have only this to say to that gentleman, that it was either his misfortune to have an incompetent lawyer, or that he could not understand plain common sense. We are perpetually referred to the forms in the action of ejectment. John Doe and Richard Roe have been denounced upon the stump all over the State; and one might almost be ready to believe that some men have found their way to this Convention upon such a hobby. But have those gentlemen told their constituents that there has been no necessity for using those forms in this State, for the last twenty years? We are authorized to use forms, in recovering the possession of land, as simple as any forms before a justice of the peace, and yet we have heard harrangues upon this floor, about the action of ejectment, as if the future prosperity of the State depended upon getting rid of John Doe and Richard Roe. We are perpetually referred to the example of New York, as evidence that law reform is of vital importance, and ought to be adopted here without a moments delay. Now, sir, I am glad that New York is making the experiment. I had rather that it be made at her expense than ours, and I would take a little time to see what her experience really is before doing the same thing. We are told that the cost of litigation to the people is reduced by their new practice code, but gentlemen forget to tell us that the costs in New York are now ten times what they are in this State. With a very little cautious legislation, we may have the simplest and cheapest system of judicial proceedings in the world.

But, sir, it is plain to see that a general codification of the whole body of the law is intended. Until it is done, I apprehend that it is to be one of the favorite subjects of popular declamation, and after it has been done, another clamor will be raised against lawyers for making confusion worse confounded. I did hope that we had had enough of codification to satisfy the most zealous reformers for a score of years, at least.

The school laws and road laws have been codified till there is not a lawyer in the State, who can pretend to understand them. And this unwieldy volume, (referring to the revised statutes of 1843,) is but another evidence of the futility of such schemes. The revisors were able and faithful men, but it is enough to make any man's head swim to try to trace out any thing in such a book. And when, after calling in the aid of others, he shall have found something upon a specific subject, he can never know but that a few pages before or behind it in the volume, there may be something qualifying or conflicting with it. Our laws are less perfectly understood by courts, and lawyers, and justices of the peace, and the people at large, than before this attempt at codification. It would be a relief to all of us could we get back to the simple code of thirty-one or thirty-eight, which embodied mere statutory regulations, leaving the common law as embodied in the adjudications of the courts. When we remember that a single short statute, enacted in the last century, and drawn by one of the ablest men who ever sat upon the English Bench, has led to cart loads of adjudications upon its meaning and effect, we should be careful how we pile up cart loads of such statutes. Judge Story has been produced as an authority in favor of codification. He was a man of exalted worth, but after assisting to swell out some thirty volumes of reports, he wrote a dozen volumes of text books. Set such a man to codifying and you will have octavo piled upon octavo. [A voice—"Folios.""] And after the work is accomplished, every section and clause will become the subject of litigation and judicial construction, till by-and-bye the people would be ready in despair to sweep away the whole system of the common law, and to leave all questions to the sense of justice or the mere caprice of courts and juries.

I do not oppose the proposition to simplify the practice of the law. What I do oppose is destructive legislation in a Constitution, and the visionary scheme of doing or attempting at once what it must require time and experience to accomplish. I would introduce the reforms which are clearly right and none others. I would rather stop short of than go beyond the proper point. I would not destroy by one section the whole system of equity jurisprudence, till the wisdom of such a step was made plain. By leaving the section as I proposed to modify it, we could secure all that is desirable. But if the scheme is to be carried out according to the ideas of some, I would prefer that the commissioners be plain common men, who will not, in their wisdom, discard common sense. I would give all credit to gentlemen for the benevolence of their motives, but I am compelled to fear that there is danger of acting rashly.

Mr. March next addressed the Convention; but his remarks are necessarily deferred.]

Mr. PETTIT. I have risen to call the attention of the Convention to a few remarks that fell from the lips of the gentleman from Laporte, (Mr. Niles,) and to call attention of my friend from Jennings, to the illustration he used in reference to the practice of law.

I have a sincere desire to see a radical change in the practice of the law. I want to say to the gentleman that, in my opinion, he has not made himself thoroughly familiar with the subject. Let us put a case: Let us suppose that I am indebted to the gentleman in the sum of five hundred dollars, upon a sealed note, given six months ago. (I am merely supposing a case, I am very glad it is not the fact.) [Laughter.] Suppose you hold my note under seal for five hundred dollars. You also have an open account against me for goods, wares, and merchandize, to the amount of three hundred dollars; and you have, also, a demand against me, for the malicious shooting of your horse, of the value of one hundred dollars. You have, then, three claims against me, all of them different in their character. And suppose that, on the other hand, you have killed some of my hogs, to the value of one hundred and fifty dollars, for which I have a claim against you. Now, shall we make four different suits at law out of these different claims, and four separate bills of cost—four trials, when they may all be merged in one? Under the present practice it would be necessary that you should bring three distinct suits upon the three different causes of action that I have supposed, and have three separate trials, and three bills of cost, whereas one would answer the purpose just as well. And I am compelled to bring one suit against you to recover for my hogs that you have killed, for I cannot set-off in this case. Indeed, it would be more consistent with reason and propriety that they all should be united in one suit.

Now, sir, a few words in reply to what was said by the gentleman from Laporte. The gentleman says that this beautiful system of law and equity—this system of practice—does more to ameliorate the condition of the State—that it does more to preserve order and good morals in the community than all the penitentiaries that were ever erected—that there is nothing but beauty and perfection about it. Now, I ask the laymen of this Convention, as the gentleman from Allen would say, to hear me a moment in regard to this. [Cries of "Hear him," "hear him."] Our courts have decided that, however clear you make out an equitable case, how ever perfect your bill in equity, so long as all the ceremonials of the practice are not observed, unless you set out in your bill that you have no remedy at law, although you know that you have no remedy—unless you set it forth in your bill the court will dismiss the bill.

Mr. WALPOLE. That is good Wabash law.

Mr. PETTIT. It is good Supreme Court law.

Now, one other matter.

"No system to ferret out fraud is equal to that of equity jurisprudence." Now, I say of all the absurdities, and ridiculousnesses, and weaknesses that was ever brought out, or exercised, by the judiciary to ferret out fraud, this system of equity jurisprudence is about the weakest. How is it? A files a bill in chancery charging B with fraud. The bill contains the specifications or charges. Now, here is the error and weakness of it. B is called on to answer, and he goes to the office of a lawyer, a keen and shrewd one; he sits down writes his answer, and swears to it and files it in court; whereas, if a man charged with fraud was compelled to come before the court, and stand up, and undergo a rigid cross examination with the eye of the court upon him, if he would falter or prevaricate, he must stand self-convicted. Take a man to your office at midnight, and you can very easily make out a statement which will make the worse appear the better, whereas, if he were brought into court, the falsehood might be detected at once. It is the most puerile and worthless system for the detection of fraud that was ever invented. Sir, it is utterly impotent to accomplish the object for which it was intended, Mr. President, so far as this matter is concerned, I do not care anything about it one way or the other. If gentlemen want it to stand where it is, I can get along with it as well as they can. But I believe the community demand a reform in this particular. It is a relic of a barbarous age, and unfit, and unworthy to be retained as a part of our system of jurisprudence.

The question being upon the passage of the section,

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken, and there were—yeas 39, nays 93:

YEAS.—Messrs. Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bidle, Bourne, Bowers, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Colfax, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Foster, Harbolt, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hovey, Howe, Johnson of D., Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Mather, May, Milligan, Morgan, Murray, Nave, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Rariden, Robinson, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Steele, Walpole, Watts, and Wolfe—39.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Badger, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Huff, Johnson of O., Jones, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ristine, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimby, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Work, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—93.

So the section did not pass.

WABASH AND ERIE CANAL, &C., &C.

The next thing in the orders of the day was article number thirty-eight, upon its second reading. The article provides for the election of a Trustee for the Wabash and Erie Canal, a State Printer, and Warden of the State Prison, to hold their offices two years each; but shall only be eligible four years in any term of six years.

The article was read a second time, and

The question being, "Shall the article be engrossed for a third reading?"

Mr. PETTIT. I would make an inquiry of the gentleman who reported this article; is this: whether the Butler Bill, as it is generally called, does not require that this Trustee should be appointed by the Legislature?

Mr. READ of Clark. It does; but the committee did not think that that could prevent the Convention from changing the mode of electing the Trustee. As well as I recollect, the committee was instructed to report the article in its present form. We came unanimously to the conclusion that we have the right to change the mode of appointment, and that, in doing so, we would be guilty of no impropriety, or interfere with the obligation of the contract.

Mr. PETTIT did not care much about the section, one way or the other. He only wanted the State to carry out its obligation in good faith. The bond-holders, in the first instance, might have been more willing to enter into the arrangement, provided that their Trustees were to be appointed by the Legislature, and not by the people. They might have thought the Legislature would be more likely to elect a competent man than the people. Then, if so, we should not alter one line or scintilla of our contract with them; but on the contrary should, in all its particulars and details, carry it out to its fullest extent. He therefore hoped the provision would be stricken out, so that the bondholders would have no cause of complaint against the State.

Mr. LOCKHART moved to amend by striking out of the section all that relates to the election of a Trustee of the Wabash and Erie Canal.

MESSRS. WALPOLE, KELSO, NAVE, and COOKERLY briefly expressed themselves as being in favor of the section as reported from the committee.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to lay the section, together with the amendment of the gentleman from Vanderburgh upon the table.

A division of the question being called for,

The question was first taken on laying Mr. LOCKHART'S amendment on the table, and

The yeas and nays, being ordered and taken, resulted—yeas 87, nays 42:

YEAS.—MESSRS. Alexander, Anthony, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Bourne, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, Maguire, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Murray, Newman, Niles, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Steele, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wheeler, Work, and Yocum—87.

NAYS.—MESSRS. Allen, Badger, Berry, Bowers, Bright, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Farrow, Foster, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Hall, Hovey, Jones, Lockhart, Logan, March, May, Miller of Gibson, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Ritchey, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Stevenson, Trimby, Wiley, Wolfe, Zenor, and Mr. President—42.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

The question then turned upon laying the section on the table, and was decided in the negative by yeas 49, nays 78:

YEAS.—MESSRS. Barbour, Berry, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Crawford, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Foster, Gordon, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Hall, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helmer, Hendricks, Hovey, Howe, Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Logan, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robinson, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Thomas, Todd, Trimble, Wolfe, Zenor, and Mr. President—49.

YAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Badger, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Hamilton, Helm, Hitt, Hogin, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Niles, Owen, Read of Clark, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Snook, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Work, and Yocum—78.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

Mr. ALLEN moved to re-commit the article with instructions to strike out all that part which relates to the election of the Warden of the State Prison by the people, and insert a provision to the effect that the Warden shall be elected by the convicts, on the joint stock principle. [Much laughter, and cries of "Consent!"]

Mr. SHOUP demanded the previous question.

The call was sustained, and the main question was, by consent, ordered to be now put.

The question was first taken upon the motion to re-commit, with instructions, and it was decided in the negative.

The question was then taken on ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading, and was decided in the affirmative.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. FOSTER offered the following as an additional section:

"All white male citizens of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, and of good moral character, shall be permitted to practice law in all the courts in this State."

The question being upon the adoption of the original section,

Mr. FOSTER remarked, that when he came into this State many years ago, no one was permitted to practice medicine, unless a graduate of the university, or who had obtained a license from the medical institutes of the State. That law had been repealed, so that now every one could practice in the medical profession, no matter of what grade, regulars, Homeopaths, Thompsonians, or Allopathists.

In divinity, it was formerly the custom for students not only to receive an education in divinity, but to reside for some years at a theological Seminary or university. It is different now days. Why should there be an exception made in favor of the law? These were the three liberal professions. In other States, the practice of the law had been thrown open to all persons of good moral character. The members of the bar would not fear competition with those who did not understand their business. Throw the profession open to all, like medicine and divinity; these were his sentiments.

Mr. STEVENSON moved that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WALPOLE moved to amend by adding the words "medicine and surgery."

The question being upon the amendment of the gentleman from Hancock,

Mr. KELSO. I hope the question will not be encumbered with amendments: but that we may have a direct vote on the section, so that all the quacks that cannot make a living by practising medicine may resort to the law, and thereby save themselves from becoming paupers and chargeable upon the county. [Loud laughter.]

On motion of Mr. SHOUP,

The section and amendment were laid upon the table.

POLL TAX.

The section prohibiting the levying of a poll or capitation tax was then read a second time.

The question being upon ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading,

Mr. FOLEY. I move that the section be laid upon the table.

Mr. MCCLELLAND. I want the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken on the motion to lay on the table, resulted—yeas 109, nays 18:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Badger, Barbour, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mather, Mathis, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimby, Wallace, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—107.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Borden, Colfax, Crumbacker, Garvin, Hawkins, Kilgore, March, May, McClelland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Murray, Smiley, Walpole, and Work—18.

So the section was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. MOWRER,

The Convention adjourned until Monday morning.

REMARKS OF MR. THORNTON,

In Convention, on Tuesday, January 21st, 1851.

MR. THORNTON. Having been the mover of the proposition under discussion, and as the same has been assailed with an unusual degree of hostility, by several gentlemen who have addressed the Convention on the subject, I must again invoke the indulgence of the Convention, whilst I attempt a reply to the remarks which have fallen from those gentlemen.

In the course of the observations heretofore made by me on this same subject, I intimated to the Convention, that we might expect opposition to the measure from members of the bar, or at least some of them. It will be remembered, too, that this intimation was made in a manner not intended or calculated to throw upon that honorable profession any imputation of a discreditable character. I gave to that profession due credit for all claims they may be entitled to, upon the public confidence; and I took the ground that their education, habits of life, &c., ever made them conservative, and opposed to innovations of any kind in the business of their profession. I certainly accompanied my remarks with a clear and explicit disclaimer of any intention to impute to my brethren of the bar anything farther, than that they as a body or class, from the very nature of their profession and pursuits, are more conservative than any other class, and more opposed to everything like innovation or change. I discover my friend from Owen, (Mr. Dobson,) seems to indicate something like opposition to the measure, but I was about to account for his course, for the reason that he was absent from the Hall on the other day, when the proposition was first submitted by me to the Convention, and that may, I hope, account for why he does not seem to understand the scope and purport of it.

I should have been quite willing to have dispensed with making provision in the Constitution, for the creation of a court of the description here suggested; but it appeared, however, to be so well understood that some tribunal should be created for the transaction of probate business, and upon which jurisdiction might be conferred to try the lesser class of criminal cases, together with civil matters of a minor character, that I was induced to submit the proposition to the Convention. I did it, also, because I know it is demanded by the wishes and the wants of those I have the honor to represent here: and in addition to that, my humble judgment was backed by a number of gentlemen on this floor, who professed to coincide with me in opinion.

I am not ignorant of the fact, however, that this proposition is to be met with serious opposition from certain quarters. I am aware that a crusade has been got up against it. From the indications I have witnessed, I do not wonder at it, though I must confess, it seems to be waged with more earnestness and effort than I had anticipated. The gentlemen who oppose it so bitterly, have shown a zeal and effort, worthy of a better cause; and although I must insist that they are wrong, and in the prosecution of a wrong cause, yet I am free to accord to them full credit for sincerity of motive in their efforts to oppose its adoption.

I can assure you, Mr. President, the manoeuvrings of a certain clique over the way, have not escaped my notice. It was easily perceivable, and the gentlemen may find that notes have been taken of them, and may yet appear in print against them. And I am afraid, too, that my esteemed friend from Putnam (Mr. Badger) has been tainted by coming in contact with that same clique, from the motion he has just been induced to make, indicating hostility to the measure. I regret to witness it, as I was in hopes to have had his aid on the occasion.

I cannot but be surprised at the bitterness with which this proposition is assailed by the gentleman from Switzerland (Mr. Kelso). Not satisfied with denouncing the measure as one which should not be entertained by the Convention, he chooses to throw out some illiberal and unmerited imputations against me, as the originator of it. He has gone out of the usual road to arraign my motives for introducing it, as intended for something like Buncombe; and has very modestly assumed the part and tone of a very learned member of the legal profession, indeed, whilst he placed me amongst the class of humble pettifoggers. He also rants about "party," and affects to deprecate the consequences growing out of it. I do not think considerations of this kind should weigh very seriously with that gentleman, or cause him any uneasiness; for if I have read his political history correctly, "party" considerations would give him no trouble, as, if necessary, he could vault from one side to the other, with the most perfect facility, according to whichever he discovered to preponderate in strength.

Whilst I say this, however, I feel it due to that member to say, that I cheerfully accord to him talents and ability, by no means of a medium order, which has been fully indicated during the deliberations of this Convention; and though, according to my humble judgment, sometimes wrong, he has been often found as the able advocate of doctrines of a wholesome character, and such as I hope to see incorporated into the organic law of our State. Thus appreciating his abilities, I should have been glad to see him lend his support to the proposed measure. He has, as well as some others, for whom I feel great regard, thought proper to oppose it. This they have a right to do, in a becoming manner; but not doing so, they certainly have no right to arrogate to themselves, that they are the excellers in and special guardians of the law, and that every one who advocates the doctrines of reform, are ignorant pettifoggers or demagogues, and behind the times in point of intelligence. I cannot but think that when some of the learned gentlemen who here array themselves in opposition to all measures of reform, and undertake to denounce every friend of it, in the extraordinary and discourteous style they have done, it is difficult to determine, which feeling it is most calculated to excite, pity or contempt. When we reflect, that few of those gentlemen have enjoyed the opportunity of becoming deeply read, or acquiring a fundamental knowledge of law—that several of them are mere smatterers, who, if not watched, would mis-spell half the words in an ordinary decon or bill in chancery, it is matter of special wonder, that they could expect to escape rebuke at the hands of an intelligent community.

As to the gentleman from Jefferson, (Mr. Dunn,) I do not know exactly what his opinions may be, as to the policy and propriety of the measure under consideration, and although I have witnessed no overt act of hostility from him against it, I am fearful he will be found operating in the ranks of its enemies. I regret this, as I should have been very much gratified to have seen one of his ability and good sense, array himself on the side of reform.

Sir, I have been denounced, it seems, in terms by no means very complimentary, by certain gentlemen on this floor, on the account of my advocacy of this measure. It is stigmatized as Buncombe, and that every member of the legal profession who yields it his support, is either a pettifogger or a demagogue. This, to be sure, is not directly asserted, but it is broadly insinuated. The gentleman from Switzerland went so far as to intimate that I was trying to carve out a little petty county judgeship for myself, by favoring a county court system.

Now, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I hear this announcement with sincere regret. I would say to those gentlemen, that I certainly entertain for them, one and all, personally, the highest regard, and nothing would have afforded me more gratification, than to have received the award of their good opinion. But considerations of a paramount character have influenced and dictated my action in this matter, which to have disregarded, would have rendered me justly obnoxious to the charge of having proved recreant to my trust, towards an esteemed and confiding constituency. Little do those gentlemen know of me, when such an insinuation is made. If they did, they would learn the fact, that unlike many of them, I indulge in no aspirations for official promotion, now or hereafter. I aim at manufacturing no materials which will serve as stepping stones towards the accomplishment of ulterior purposes; and I only have to add, that if their constituents, upon duly scrutinizing their course here, shall find them occupying the same position, those gentlemen will have great cause for self-congratulation. I have not been a candidate for any office whatever, for the last thirteen years, and perhaps may never be again. Had the member making this illiberal and unfounded charge practised the same self-denial which I have, he might have escaped some of the imputations which have been made against his political integrity and fair fame. Such imputations, when thrown at me, "pass by me as the idle wind, which I heed not."

And now, a few words as to the learned gentleman from Laporte, (Mr. Niles,) who is one to whom I ever listen with great gratification and deference, whenever he undertakes to address the Convention on any subject of interest. He, it seems, has seen fit to throw his weight into the scale against this great beneficent measure. From the tone of this gentleman's arguments generally, they had justly acquired a most enviable influence over the opinions of the members of this Convention. I can assure you, Mr. President, I was truly disappointed when I found him raising his voice against it.

In reference to the manner in which the measure has been assailed by those who have thought proper to oppose it, I cannot but admire the address and tact exhibited by them in the conduct of it. When the attack was about to be made, we could see them putting forward, as a van-guard, the very respectable, good looking, and able gentleman from Vanderburg, (Mr. Blythe,) to commence. His fair, plausible, and imposing manner, was well calculated for affect, and to carry alarm into the ranks of its friends. Fortunately, however, for our cause, although in making his onslaught, there was a pretty loud roar of small arms, the shots fell short of the mark, and no injury was sustained by any one. Soon after this, however, you could see the beligerents industriously mustering and arraying their forces. You might see them rising, like so many genio, in every part of the Hall. Even the gentleman from Crawford, whom I had hoped to see in the ranks of our friends, took sides with the enemy, and was not the last forward in the fray—when I saw this, I must confess, it gave me sincere pain, and I felt almost disposed to cry out, in the language of Julius Cæsar, when receiving the paricidal stab from the hand of Brutus, et tu Brute.

I have said I expected to meet with opposition from gentlemen of the bar, and I regret to say that my apprehensions and predictions have been but too fully verified. I had no expectation, however, of encountering hostility from any other quarter, and more especially from the members of another learned profession, whose sympathies and countenance I hoped we should receive. You can imagine, then, what I felt at seeing my very sensible friend from Owen (Dr. Dobson), giving indications that he was also about poising his lance for an attack on us. Formidable as lawyers may be deemed in intellectual conflict, I feel more at home in a rencontre with them, as I am vain enough to believe, that I have some knowledge of their mode of warfare, and can be better enabled to parry their thrusts. But I must say, that I feel some secret dread coming over me when I discover that I must have a gentleman of the "pill and lance" pitted against me. They are so much better skilled in the art of killing, that I should feel almost disposed to come down ere awaiting a fire from one of them, especially from one possessed of the skill and experience of the gentleman from Owen. [Loud laughter.]

Mr. DOBSON observed that the only object he had in view in making inquiries of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, in relation to the section under consideration, was to obtain information, as he was not present at the time of its introduction. He fully concurred with the advocates of the measure, in the necessity of having some change in the present probate system.

Mr. THORNTON. I am sincerely gratified to hear this announcement of the gentleman, that I am to recognize him as an ally instead of an enemy. I am rejoiced to find so able an advocate on our side.

I am aware that when I voted against the plan of having 24 circuit judges, I was placed under the ban of the gentleman's interdict. This, as I have previously said, I could not conscientiously do. I believed it to be intrinsically wrong, and only calculated to provide places for a set of hungry, aspiring, half-fledged second or third rate lawyes, who could not live by their practice. I believed, too, whilst it would be productive of enormous expense, and a heavy draft on the public treasury, it would fail to furnish a convenient mode of administering justice by depriving us of convenient county tribunals. These considerations operated with me as conclusive reasons for rejecting it. I repeat it, we cannot dispense with some such domestic tribunal as proposed by me. In this I have been ably sustained by the unanswerable arguments of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit,) the gentleman from Allen, (Mr.

Borden,) as also of the gentleman from Marion. (Mr. Morrison,) who has just demonstrated in a very sensible and forcible manner the salutary working of such a system in this county, by reference to the court of common pleas, established by a special act of the General Assembly. I firmly believe that if a system of county courts or tribunals—call them by what name you please—could be created, vested with such jurisdiction as I have heretofore suggested, it would greatly promote a prompt, cheap, and efficient administration of justice, and soon become a most popular and favorite tribunal with the people. And I can tell gentlemen who affect to sneer at such a court and its advocates, with such assumed airs of legal learning, that they will ere long find the public voice demanding its establishment in tones that will not be disregarded. I rejoice that we adopted the provision submitted by the gentleman from Wayne, (Mr. Newman,) leaving the number of circuit judges to be settled by the Legislature. This will enable us, if we wish to have the system here proposed take effect, to require the General Assembly to limit the number of circuit judges so as to warrant the creation of a county court as suggested. Ten circuit judges would be sufficient, if the amount of business should be withdrawn from the circuit court and conferred on the county court, as recommended by the advocates of the county court system. In fact, the number might possibly be reduced and still answer. I cannot but think but that the ends of justice and the public convenience would be greatly promoted by withdrawing from the circuit court jurisdiction of all matters except those of the higher grade, such as those involving titles to land, &c. I have been very much gratified to perceive, that upon recently looking into the journal of debates of the Ohio Convention, now sitting, the same subject has been most ably and elaborately discussed. I find that the ablest and soundest lawyers in that very intelligent body, composed of the ablest men of the State, are proposing and advocating the same plan of a court here proposed. Among them I find the names of such distinguished lawyers as Holt, Case, Clark, Archbold, Ranney, and particularly Stansberry, one of the ablest and most talented lawyers, and the Attorney General of the State. To be sure, I will do the opponents here of our plan, the justice to state, that the plan there proposed has to encounter, from the old hunker class of lawyers, who cling with characteristic tenacity to their old, musty, antiquated notions, the usual opposition. I am happy to see, however, that here they seem to dwindle to a miserable, low, and beggarly minority, so that the advocates of the reform system must eventually be triumphant, as I sincerely pray we may.

One word more and I have done. It will be recollected that I voted, as regards a supreme court, against the general ticket system for the election of judges. I was induced to do this because I was and am most decidedly opposed to such a court, constituted on the plan proposed by the judiciary committee, and finally sustained by a majority of this Convention. I believed a court of dernier resort could be formed out of the body of the circuit judges; and, with all becoming respect for the opinions of the majority, I still confidently and firmly maintain that belief. As soon as the will of the majority was satisfactorily indicated, I felt myself bound to defer to it, and finally gave to the general ticket plan my unhesitating support. I was induced to do this under the conviction that it was more congenial with the theory of our republican system of government, than the district plan. I am aware that it was urged as a reason for adopting the district system, that it afforded the opportunity of having all the parties represented on the supreme bench, whereas, by the general ticket system, the dominant party could monopolize all the seats on the bench. I cannot believe that such considerations as these will operate to influence the election of our supreme judges. It amounts almost to a libel on the public judgment to moot such a question. The assertions of the advocates of the district system are not borne out by facts, for I find that in the State of Mississippi, where the democratic party are largely in the ascendant, Mr. Sharkey, who had been Chief Justice of the State, was re-elected over his democratic opponent by a most triumphant majority.

As to the pending motion of the gentleman from Putnam to re-commit with instructions to strike out "county court," if any of the friends of said plan have become convinced that it is best to leave it out of the Constitution, relying on the wisdom of the Legislature to provide for such a court, let them vote accordingly, and, for myself, I will be satisfied.

MONDAY, JAN. 27, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. FARROW.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOLEY. I ask the indulgence of the Convention to suspend the rules so as to enable me to offer a resolution.

SEVERAL VOICES. Read the resolution. What is it?

Mr. FOLEY. The resolution is that this Convention adjourn sine die, on the sixth of February next.

The question being upon the suspension of the rules,

Mr. SMITH of Ripley demanded the yeas and nays.

They were ordered and, being taken, were—yeas 79, nays 46—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Blythe, Borden, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Helm, Hendricks, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of D., Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Logan, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Murray, Newman, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Trimble, Watts, Wheeler, Work, Yocum, and Zenor—79.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Biddle, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Foster, Garvin, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Warlick, Hall, Helmer, Hitt, Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of White, Lockhart, Maguire, March, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Mower, Owen, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Sherrod, Shoup, Smith of Scott, Spann, Thornton, Wiley, Wolfe, and Mr. President—46.

So the rule was not suspended.

Mr. BARBOUR. I move to re-consider the vote that was taken on Saturday last, by which the resolution and pending amendments in relation to the final adjournment were laid on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMONSTON. I have only one word to say in reference to this matter, and that is, I hope the time of the Convention will not be taken up with propositions for settling the period of adjournment.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that debate is not in order.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result—yeas 88, nays 40—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Anthony, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Logan, Maguire, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Trimby, Watts, Wheeler, Wolfe, Work, Yocum, and Zenor—88.

YAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Biddle, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Garvin, Gibson, Graham of Warrick, Hall, Helmer, Hitt, Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of White, Lockhart, March, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Owen, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Thornton, Wiley, and Mr. President—40.

So the vote was re-considered.

The question being on laying the motion and pending amendments on the table,

It was decided in the negative.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Monroe, (Mr. Foster,) which proposes to amend the amendment by inserting the 17th of February, and being taken,

It was decided in the negative.

The question then being on amending the original section, by striking out the thirteenth of February and inserting the tenth day of February,

Mr. GREGG. I move to amend by striking out all after the resolving clause, and inserting the following:

"This Convention will adjourn sine die on Thursday, the sixth of February."

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark to the gentleman from Jefferson, that his amendment does not apply. There is no resolving clause in the amendment which he proposes to amend.

Mr. GREGG. My motion is to strike out "ten," and insert "six."

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman will send up his amendment in writing.

The amendment was accordingly sent up in writing.

Mr. MATHER demanded the previous question.

Mr. KELSO (at the same moment) moved to lay the amendment of the gentleman from Jefferson on the table.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 54, nays 73—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Biddle, Borden, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Cookerly, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hardin, Helmer, Hitt, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Maguire, May, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Mowrer, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Rariden, Robinson, Sherrod Shoup, Smith of Scott, Spann, Thornton, Wallace, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, and Mr. President—54.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allen, Anthony, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Farrow, Foley, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kinley, Logan, March, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, McLean, Morrison of Washington, Murray, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Trimby, Watts, Yocum, and Zenor—73.

So the amendment was not laid upon the table.

Mr. FOSTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT. The question is now on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. FOSTER. I was not aware that we were under the operation of the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. The previous question has been demanded by the gentleman from Elkhart.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Jefferson, it was, upon a division—yeas 50, noes 58—decided in the negative.

The question then being on the motion to strike out from the original resolution, "the 15th of January," and insert "the 10th of February,"

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 111, nays 15—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Barbour, Bascom Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of

Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Tague, Thomas, Trimby, Wallace, Watts, Wheeler, Wolfe, Yocum, and Zenor—111.

YAYS.—Messrs. Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Dick, Gibson, Graham of Warrick, Helmer, Kent, Mooney, Pettit, Robinson, Shoup, Thornton, Wiley, and Mr. President—15.

So the amendment was adopted.

The question being on the adoption of the motion, as amended,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 109, nays 12—as follows:

YAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Moorey, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Murray, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Thomas, Wallace, Watts, Wheeler, Wolfe, Yocum, and Zenor—109.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Dick, Helmer, Kent, Pettit, Robinson, Spann, Thornton, Wiley, and Mr. President—12.

So the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. GIBSON moved a re-consideration of the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

Mr. PETTIT. I am satisfied that we cannot get through in two weeks; and if we reconsider the vote now, and confirm it, it will be unalterable, and we shall be precluded from enlarging the time hereafter, if we find that we are unable to finish our work by the tenth. I hope the gentleman will consent to withdraw his motion.

Mr. GIBSON declined to withdraw the motion.

The question was taken on the motion to reconsider the vote, and it was, upon a division—yeas 50, noes 45—decided in the affirmative.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered.

Mr. BORDEN. Is a motion to lay on the table now in order?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir, the previous question is again in force.

Mr. BORDEN. I would inquire whether, in case the resolution be now adopted, a motion to re-consider may be made hereafter?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not. One motion to re-consider exhausts the parliamentary rule, and it is all that is permissible. A motion to re-consider cannot be entertained a second time without a violation of parliamentary law.

Mr. COLFAX. I would ask whether the rules are not within our own control, and whether they may not be rescinded at any time?

The PRESIDENT. The rule that is applicable to this subject is not one of the rules that have been specifically adopted by the Convention. It is a matter that is governed by parliamentary law.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result—yeas 96, nays 30:

YAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Chenowith, Clark of H., Clark of T., Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Kinley, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Thomas, Trimby, Watts, Wolfe, Work, Yocum, and Zenor—96.

NAYS.—Messrs. Borden, Bright, Bryant, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Foster, Garvin, Gibson, Graham of Warrick, Hardin, Helmer, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Pettit, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Shoup, Spann, Thornton, Wiley, and Mr. President—30.

So the resolution was again adopted.

PRACTICE OF LAW.

Mr. BORDEN, from the committee on law reform, reported a section providing that any person of good moral character, having the right of suffrage, shall be entitled to practice law within this State.

The section was read a first time and passed to a second reading.

COUNTY BOARDS.

Mr. NEWMAN, from the committee on special and local legislation, reported back the section, amended as directed by the Convention, which provides that the Legislature shall confer on county boards powers of a local legislative character.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

Mr. PETTIT moved that the rule which requires the yeas and nays on the passage of a section be suspended.

The rule was suspended, and

The section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. GRAHAM of Warrick, from the committee on the elective franchise, reported a section providing that county boards shall determine contested elections for members of the General Assembly, county officers, &c.

The section was read a first time and passed to a second reading.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The Convention then proceeded to the consideration of the general orders of the day,

The first thing in order being the section which provides for the election of a Trustee for the Wabash and Erie Canal, a Warden of the State Prison, a State Printer, &c.,

The section was taken up on its third reading.

Mr. EDMONSTON moved that the section be re-committed, with instructions to amend by striking out Warden of the State Prison and State Printer.

Mr. PETTIT. My opinion is, that the section ought to be stricken out. [Cries of "consent!"]

A MEMBER suggested that it be laid on the table.

Mr. PETTIT. Very well; but before we do that, I want to read a section of the Butler Bill. The seventh section reads as follows:

SEC. 7. As soon as said sum shall have been subscribed, it shall be lawful for said subscribers to elect two discreet persons, both of whom shall be citizens of the United States, and one of whom shall be a citizen and resident of this State, as Trustees; and a notice thereof, accompanied with a copy of the subscription aforesaid, given to the Governor; and he shall appoint, if in the recess of the Legislature, but if not, the two Houses shall elect, by joint ballot, a third discreet person; and these shall constitute a board to be known by the style and description of the Board of Trustees of the Wabash and Erie Canal, and who shall hold their offices for the term of three years from the time of their said election or appointment, and until others are elected and appointed in their places; Provided, however, that in the case of the Trustee on the part of the State, if he shall have been appointed in the recess of the Legislature, he shall only hold his office until his successor shall be elected, as aforesaid, by the two Houses of the next General Assembly."

Now, sir, it is well understood by the Convention that this was a matter of compromise between our creditors and the State, by which the matter was to go into the hands of three persons, two to be selected by the stockholders and one by the State. The two to be selected by the stockholders are to be citizens of the United States, and one is to be a citizen and resident of Indiana. Now, suppose they should appoint foreigners, and suppose we remonstrate against such action on their part, they may say they have a right to do so; that it does not interfere with the contract between them and the State. Suppose they elect foreigners, may we not say you are not faithfully complying with your contract, therefore we will abrogate it? It may make a material difference as to how these trustees shall be appointed, they might think that we would get much better men, if they should be appointed by the Legislature, than if elected by the people. They might say the people would make a bad choice. The bondholders might say we never consented to co-operate in regulating this trust fund with men thus elected. Sir, it may not be a violation of the contract; we may have power to do it; but I ask all gentlemen who are jealous and proud of the honor of their State, whether they would not only in substance, but to the letter, perform their contracts? There should not be even the appearance of the violation of the contract. There should not be reason given for even color of complaint in regard to the election of these officers. Is it not probable that the Legislature will carry out the trust as faithfully as the people would do.

Sir, another thing: This act especially provides that these officers shall be elected for three years. The section before us provides that the trustee on the part of the State, shall be elected once in two years. This, too, may be a matter of great importance with the bondholders. They elect their officers for three years, and we, when we entered into the contract, undertook to elect ours for the same period. Shall we, then, by making a change in this respect, violate in form and in substance our public faith.

Sir, the gentleman from Hancock, who is not now in his place, said to me on Saturday that I was claiming for this Convention the power to abrogate all vested rights; that I contended that we were about effecting a revolution as marked and decided as would be a revolution effected by force. Sir, I regard the action of this Convention as being revolutionary, so far as our government is concerned; but I cannot go so far as to repudiate our public faith to abandon all obligations. But let me say to the gentleman, if he be a statesman, if he have a regard for the honor and credit of the State, if he has well considered the difference between domestic obligations, between the right of the people themselves to upturn their own government, and the right of nations to forfeit their obligations with foreigners, there is a very marked difference between your right to control your domestic institutions, and your right to throw off your obligation to foreigners or to foreign States. No nation that is jealous of its honor will fail to take care to comply with all its contracts. Our ancestors, in rolling from under the old federal articles, took express care to put in the Constitution of the United States that all the debts and obligations under the old system of government should be binding and obligatory under the new, and we ought to do the same. Sir, in matters where no principle is involved, where no good can arise from an abrogation of established usage, we ought to be particularly careful not only that we do not violate our pledged faith but that our conduct may not have the appearance of a violation of our obligation.

Mr. MURRAY. I have a few words to say in relation to this subject. I was pleased with the remarks of the gentleman from Tippecanoe. They are just and appropriate, and deserve the careful attention of the members of this Convention. But I arise principally to say a few words in reply to the remarks made by the gentleman from Switzerland, the other day, who said that the trustees on the part of the bondholders had violated their faith, and therefore we might violate ours. Sir, there was no violation of faith on their part. The gentleman said that they had neglected to re-appraise the land. Sir, the law provides that the bondholders shall appoint one commissioner, and the State shall appoint another, and these commissioners shall select a third; and that they should, on the premises, personally view the lands, and appraise them, and report to the next Legislature. But they had not time. The law involved an utter impossibility. It was not possible for them to comply with the act in this respect. The trustees, at the very first meeting of the board, appointed their commissioners, and the State appointed another; these commissioners selected another commissioner, and they went forward in good faith to execute their work, commencing with the Blue Cliff land; and they employed their time faithfully, and got through with as much as any one could reasonably expect. But before they finished the appraisalment the law expired by its limitation. The trustees then had no authority to appoint a new commissioner, nor would an appointment have had any validity without the consent of all the bondholders. But more than this, it was not their interest to appoint one. They had fulfilled and finished their duty under the law, and were bound no farther. It is well known that the re-appointment diminished the fund placed in their hands for the completion of the canal, and all know that whatever lessened the fund delayed its completion.

It may be well doubted, whether the interest of the State or of the bondholders, or, indeed, justice to the purchaser of the land, was duly considered in the enactment of the law. In regard to the purchasers of the land, the State had thought it all fair to sell high when it was their "bull," but when it was the bondholders "bull," it was quite another affair. But who was to receive the benefit of the re-appraisalment? This was a question on which there was much division of opinion. The land, in many instances, had been sold half a dozen times, the first purchaser always making a speculation on his purchase. Who, then, was wronged, and who should justly receive the benefit of a reduced price? At all events, the trustees were absolved from all further duty on the subject. The gentleman also charged the trustees with a breach of contract, in regard to certain side cuts. Let us look at this a moment: Let us inquire whether it was not more important that the main line should be first finished. Whether among the vast responsibilities they assumed, (and which I aver has been carried out most indelibly and in good faith,) there were not other obligations to the State of far more importance than the side cuts, which should be first attended to. Both the question and the answer, I presume, present themselves to the minds of every member, without my asking it.

The side-cuts were as a drop to the bucket, in point of importance. To be sure, if there had been no lack of funds, or more water to fill the side-cuts, then the work might have progressed. But every body knows there was a lack of funds, and every body ought to know by this time that there was a lack of water.

Why, sir, the engineers have not been able to supply the line with water, from Lafayette to Terre Haute, for a considerable portion of the season, and it is evident that water cannot be spared for the side-cuts without great injury to the main line, until the canal banks become saturated, and more impervious against breakage. Sir, I had hoped that the war upon the Trustees had ceased. I had hoped that the energy and fidelity with which they had progressed in the discharge of their duties, would not only have been seen, but felt and acknowledged.

Sir, I have always viewed this contract as a happy and beneficent one to the State, in every point of view. It relieved her from bankruptcy; it carried forward her interests, of all classes, when her credit was prostrate, and her citizens almost mutinous; it has restored her to an enviable position, and given new life and vigor to her energies. Sir, I feel it to be not only ungrateful, but suicidal, in any manner to weaken the hands, or discourage the hearts, of the Trustees, in this vital improvement of the State.

Mr. LOCKHART. I rise for the purpose of renewing the motion that I made on Saturday, in another form. I moved, then, to strike out the whole of the section that related to the election of a Trustee of the Wabash and Erie Canal; but I had no opportunity to state to the Convention the reasons which prompted me to make that motion; I was prevented by the call of the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remind the gentleman that the motion pending now, is to re-commit the section with instructions.

Mr. LOCKHART. Yes, sir, I am aware of that, but desire to say a few words before I send up my amendments to the instructions. I concur fully with the gentleman from Tippecanoe in saying that the adoption of this section may be construed into a violation of our contract with the bondholders. I agree with him, further, in saying that we may possibly have a constitutional right, but not a moral right, to violate this contract; but, my word for it, if we do violate it, the State will have to pay the penalty for our dereliction of duty. I was astonished to hear the gentleman from Warren casting his vote on Saturday for this section, and against my amendment. If I have been correctly informed, that gentleman is now prosecuting a suit with great zeal and ability, against the Trustees of the Wabash and Erie Canal, for the purpose of enforcing the obligation of their part of the contract with the State, in the completion of a side-cut in the county of Warren. If he desires that the bondholders should comply on their part, ought he not to be equally anxious that the State should preserve inviolate her part of the contract, also.

Now I suggest to the gentleman, whether or no this is not a scheme gotten up by the connivance of the bondholders, so that they may obtain a pretext by which they may say that the State violated the contract on its part, and that they have a right to violate it on their part. I ask the gentleman from Warren whether this will not be the result?

Mr. BRYANT. I had not given the section much reflection, but I must confess that the idea, that to elect the Trustee by the people, instead of by the Legislature, would be a violation of the contract, had not entered my mind.

Mr. LOCKHART. I will now say to the gentleman from Warren that by the bill known as the "Buller bill," it is provided that the bondholders shall elect two Trustees, and the State one; the two that are to be elected by the bondholders are to be citizens of the U. S., and that one of them shall be a citizen of the State of Indiana; now I must ask him whether it would be a violation of the contract for the bondholders to elect a person one of these Trustees who resides in London, and the other in Paris.

Mr. BRYANT. I think it would.

Mr. LOCKHART. This, it is admitted, would be a violation of the contract, yet it is maintained that to reduce the term of the Trustee to be elected by the State, from three to two years, and elect him by the people instead of the Legislature, is no violation of the contract. I regard the one as much a violation of the contract as the other. I now offer the following amendment to the instructions.

Mr. CARR moved that the section, with the pending amendments, be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COOKERLY demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BORDEN. Before the question is put, I wish to assign, very briefly, the reason why I shall vote against the motion to postpone indefinitely. I am in favor of the election of the Warden of the Penitentiary by the people, because I think it will change the mode of doing business in relation to the Penitentiary. I am opposed to hiring out our prisoners to be kept by contract.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The reason given by the gentleman from Allen is the very one that will influence me in voting against the section. This system of selling out the unfortunate persons who are sent to the Penitentiary, is to my mind extremely objectionable.

Mr. SHOUP. Is it in order to move to lay the motion on the table?

The PRESIDENT. Such a motion will be in order.

Mr. OWEN. If the gentleman will give way a moment, I have a single remark to make.

Mr. SHOUP yielded the floor.

Mr. OWEN. There is one principle which I think an important one, and it is, that executive officers should always be responsible to those for whom they perform service. The Legislature is the body that has and should have control over the Warden of the State Prison.

Mr. SHOUP moved that the section be laid upon the table.

Mr. COOKERLY demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 113, nays 17—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Barbour, Bascom, Beard, Berry, Blythe, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mather, Mathis, May, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Watts, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—113.

NAYS.—Messrs. Beeson, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Cookerly, Edmonston, Howe, Kilgore, March, McClelland, McFarland, Moore, Prather, Read of Clark, Robinson, and Wallace—17.

So the section was laid upon the table.

CORPORATIONS.

The section which provides that corporations shall not be created by special acts, but may be formed under general laws, and that all laws conferring corporate powers, may be altered or repealed, was read a second time.

The question being upon its engrossment,

MR. READ of Monroe. It will be recollected by the Convention, that we have already adopted, in another place, the provision that is contained in the first part of this section. The second part reserves to the Legislature the power to repeal all laws conferring corporate powers; but it is to be recollected that we have also provided that corporate powers shall only be conferred by general laws, and they are at all times subject to be repealed by the Legislature, without a special reservation of power for that purpose. It will be well, perhaps, to adopt the section as it stands, and leave it to the committee on arrangement and revision to arrange the provisions contained in it in their proper places.

MR. HELMER moved that the section be laid upon the table.

The yeas and nays being demanded and ordered, were taken, and resulted—yeas 53, nays 71—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Barbour, Beard, Bidle, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Frisbie, Gibson, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Kilgore, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mather, Milligan, Mooney, Morgan, Nave, Newman, Niles, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Spann, Stevenson, Thomas, Wallace, Watts, and Zenor—53.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Hardin, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Thornton, Trimble, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, and Yocum—71.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

MR. COLFAX. It seems to me, sir, that the section ought to be made plain, in order that we may not undo what we have already done; the legal rule of construction being, I believe, that the latest provision repeals a former provision upon the same subject. I move to amend by adding, "except in such cases as are authorized in this Constitution."

The amendment was adopted.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

The section which provides for the individual liability of stockholders in proportion to the amount of their stock, &c., was read a second time.

MR. COLFAX moved to amend the section by striking out the words "in proportion to the amount of their stock," and inserting in lieu thereof, "to an amount over and above their stock, equal to the amount of their stock."

MR. BASCOM demanded the previous question.

MR. STEVENSON (rising at the same time) moved that the section and pending amendment be laid upon the table.

MR. PETTIT demanded a division of the question.

The question being, first on laying the amendment on the table,

It was decided in the affirmative.

The question then being on laying the section on the table,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 49, nays 81—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Barbour, Beard, Bidle, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Clark of Hamilton, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Foley, Frisbie, Gibson, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Kilgore, Lockhart, Maguire, Mather, Morgan, Murray, Newman, Niles, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Snook, Spann, Stevenson, Thomas, Trimble, Wallace, and Watts—49.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Fisher, Foster, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Harbolt, Hardin, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Logan, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Thornton, Walpole, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—81.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

MR. PETTIT. As the Convention seems to be very anxious to get along with business without debate, I move the previous question.

THE PRESIDENT. The previous question has been already demanded by the gentleman from Wells.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

The question being on ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading,

It was, upon a division—ayes 73, noes not counted—decided in the affirmative.

The article in relation to the trustees of the township of Clarksville, was taken up on its second reading.

MR. THORNTON. This is the article which I had the honor to report, as chairman of the committee.

MR. SHOUP. I move that the Convention adjourn.

The Convention refused to adjourn.

The question being on ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading,

It was, upon a division—ayes 53, noes 28—decided in the affirmative.

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The section in relation to lands sold for taxes was read a second time.

MR. BROOKBANK moved that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to, and the section was laid upon the table.

The sections which provide for an enumeration of white male inhabitants every six years, and the apportionment of Senators and Representatives in the several counties, were ordered to be engrossed.

MR. GIBSON offered an additional section, that it shall be the duty of the Supreme Court on the decision of every case, to give a brief statement in writing, of the questions arising therein, and their decision of each question respectively.

The first section of the article reported from the committee on education, was read a second time.

The section is as follows:

SEC. —. Knowledge and learning, generally diffused through a community, being essential to the preservation of a free government, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to encourage, by all suitable means, moral, intellectual, scientific, and agricultural improvement, and to provide by law for a general and uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition, as soon as circumstances will permit, shall be gratis, and equally open to all.

MR. BRYANT moved to amend by striking out the words "as soon as circumstances will permit."

MR. BRYANT. I will say that this clause was inserted inadvertently by the committee. It was not intended to retain anything more of the first section of the present Constitution, than those parts of it that were applicable to our system. We certainly did not intend to insert anything that would have the effect of preventing or postponing the establishment of free schools. I am satisfied that the chairman of the committee, as well as all other gentlemen, will concur in the propriety of striking out these words.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MR. MORRISON moved an additional section providing for the election of a State Superintendent, to hold his office for two years, his duties and compensation to be prescribed by law.

MR. READ of Monroe. The provision of this section, Mr. President, creating permanently the office of a superintendent of education for the State, meets my most hearty approbation; and, I trust it will be adopted as a part of the Constitution.

We are, sir, laying broader our political foundations. We are giving the election of all the officers of government—legislative, judicial, and administrative—not to a select portion of the people—but directly to the whole people themselves. The education of every child in the State has become simply a political necessity. It is a necessary measure of defense and self-preservation. We must—yes, sir, I repeat it, we must have a better devised and more efficient system of general education. On this subject, there can be but one opinion in this body, and indeed, among the people of the State at large.

Well, sir, in my deliberate judgment, the very first step, is provision for an officer to aid in forming such a system, and in supervising it when formed. Without this step, I pronounce every other step useless. Without such an officer, we may as well abandon at once the whole policy of popular education by a public provision. I would as soon think of doing without an Auditor of State, a Secretary, or a Treasurer, as without a superintendent of education. Why, sir, when we shall add the "proceeds" which will arise from the sale of our recently donated swamp lands to our other educational funds, we shall have an aggregate of three millions of dollars for the support of our schools. Shall the management of this vast fund, its preservation and disbursement, and the system which it will support, have no controlling head? No man would erect a factory or a foundery, costing but fifty thousand dollars, or even a far less sum, without a proper superintending agent. Not a single plank road company, or railroad company in the State, would, for a moment, think of doing without a President, for the sake of saving the salary of such an officer. Had a superintendent of education existed long since, he would have saved a vast amount which for the want of proper supervision, has been forever lost to the children of the State. We have in this matter, been penny wise and pound foolish. We have saved the salary and expense of the office, and we have lost twenty times over the cost in mere money, for the want of it. And not only that, the whole policy of the State has proved simply a failure so far as the public provision for schools is concerned. We have had no system, no uniformity of action, no well directed general effort on the great subject of education, nor can we have, until we shall have the officer proposed in this section.

But, sir, we are not left to conjecture to determine the beneficial results of having such an officer. We have the light of experience coming to us from numerous States. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon the public mind, that the mere providing of funds, by taxation or otherwise, for schools, will never perfect the work of popular education. Something beyond this is required. You must have plan and organization. It is well known that the State of Connecticut had funds for schools beyond those of any other State; yet it is equally well known how little good these funds accomplished, until there was an officer to superintend the system which they were designed to support. In Henry D. Barnard, was happily found a man whose zeal, energy, and perseverance made the funds of the State available to the great purpose for which they were set apart. In Rhode Island, the results were similar. The great and general educational impulse in that State, which has existed within the few past years, was given by the State superintendent. The whole world knows what Horace Mann has done for Massachusetts. By letters, by reports to the Legislature, by going abroad among the people, by recommendations which procured the passage of suitable laws, by popular lectures, and other modes of arousing the minds of the people, he infused new life and energy into the system, and raised the standard of common school education in every neighborhood throughout the State. There, sir, is our young sister, Michigan. How is it, that her educational system is such, that it has attracted the attention of the whole country; that in every neighborhood, there is the school library, as the accompaniment of the school; that her funds for education have been preserved and husbanded almost without loss? Why, sir, Michigan, almost from the first, has had a superintending agent for the great department of public education. Here, sir, is a book [Mr. Read holding up the book] on the subject of popular education, prepared in accordance with a joint resolution of the General Assembly of that State, by the Superintendent. It presents the most valuable instruction for all the families of the State, and presents to the young teacher information on the art of teaching, of the most useful character.

Here, sir, is another volume. It greets us from our still younger sister, Wisconsin. It is the educational document of that young State. She has her superintendent of education—an officer by the Constitution. So too has Iowa. Kentucky, also, has at last learned, that nothing valuable in this great work can be achieved without a proper superintending officer. By her lately revised Constitution, the office is made as permanent as the Constitution itself. It was first created some two years since, by the Legislature; and it is said that already the beneficial results are experienced in the improved condition of the schools, and the increased interest awakened on the subject, among the people of the State. No State has recently formed or revised its Constitution without providing this officer, by a constitutional enactment.

What, sir, will be the duty of the proposed officer? He will exercise a general superintendence over the school fund—recommend measures to prevent its loss—advise the Legislature of defects in the school laws—propose methods for the improvement of the schools—recommend to teachers the best modes of teaching—give advice as to the construction of school houses—receive reports and furnish statistical information in regard to the condition and progress of general education—in short, it will be his business, by his own effort, and by the co-operation of others, to give direction and energy to the whole scheme of public instruction.

Sir, if we create the office, I trust we shall have one of our ablest men to fill it—one who will do for Indiana the same work which Mann, Barnard, Mayhew, and others, have done for their respective States. A higher or nobler mission, or a better sphere for the exertion of talent, no man need desire.

If this office is created, I shall have hope for the schools of Indiana. If it is not, we may as well postpone the whole subject of education. The provision of funds will do little good. A hap-hazard system without a head, does not deserve the name of a system.

If we are truly in earnest in this cause, let us adopt the section. Let us provide for uniformity and concentration of effort. Let us bring about a new era in the educational interests of the State, with the introduction of the new Constitution.

Mr. FARROW moved that the section be laid upon the table.

Mr. PRATHER demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 44, nays 78—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Bright, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Farrow, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hamilton, Hardin, Hendricks, Hovey, Huff, Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Maguire, Mather, Mathis, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Milligan, Moore, Nave, Pepper of Crawford, Read of Clark, Sherrod, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Zenor—44.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Beach, Biddle, Blythe, Borden, Bowers, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helmer, Hitt, Higin, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, May, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Thornton, Watts, Wheeler, Work, and Mr. President—78.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. President, I have no disposition to consume the time of this Convention. I know there is no desire on the part of the members, at this late hour, to hear a protracted discussion on this, or any other subject; but I hope that I shall be indulged for a short time, standing, as I do, as chairman of the committee on education, and offering this proposition, while I invite your attention to its favorable consideration. I feel that it is due to the cause of education, as well as to the position I have the honor to occupy, to say a very few words on the present occasion.

It has been frequently asserted by gentlemen on this floor, while advocating a favorite measure, that it was the most important to which the attention of the Convention had been called. Now, without stopping to examine how far the facts, in any case, justified such a declaration, I think it may be asserted, with truth, that the section now under consideration, is second in importance to no other which has been submitted. It provides that the General Assembly shall provide by law for the election, by the people, of a State superintendent of public instruction, to hold his office for two years, and whose powers, duties, and compensation, shall be prescribed by law.

I have endeavored to persuade myself that a Superintendent is not necessary. I have looked over the whole ground, in order to comprehend, more fully, all our educational interests, and to find out, if possible, some plan by which we might dispense with his services, without any serious injury to the cause of education; but this examination has brought me to the conclusion, that the very salvation of our educational system in Indiana, depends upon the appointment of such an officer.

Mr. President, what are the interests that are involved in this question? We shall have a school fund ere long, of three millions of dollars. I ask this Convention to look at this, as a plain matter of fact—as a business transaction, and let each one answer this question for himself, whether if he had a fund amounting to three millions of dollars, he would allow it to be thrown broad-cast over the land, without any one to take care of it; or whether he would not provide for it a place of safety, and set a sentinel over it to guard and protect it. I regard such an officer as essential to watch over this money, and see that it be not diverted to other purposes, than those originally intended. In the present state of affairs, we have no means of ascertaining accurately, the true condition of this fund. The report of the Treasurer of State, ex-officio Superintendent of common schools, which was laid on our tables, a few days ago, in answer to a resolution offered at an early period of the session, furnishes abundant evidence of the danger to which the several educational funds are exposed. From this, and it embraces only seventy-three counties, $23,886 11 are reported doubtful; and if the remaining eighteen counties are estimated in the same proportion, the doubtful may be set down at $30,000, the greater part of which may be considered lost beyond recovery, under existing arrangements. How much of this sum might be saved through the vigilance of a Superintendent, I will not affirm; enough, doubtless, to pay for his services for fifteen or twenty years.

But we need such an officer for other and more important purposes. His services are indispensable to perfect our present school system, if indeed it deserve the name of system. Every man who has bestowed any attention upon the legislation of the State, for the last twenty years, knows that the laws regulating schools, have been as changeful as the seasons. This admits of an easy explanation. With a view to make the laws more acceptable to the people, almost every representative has some particular amendment to propose, which, if adopted, may conflict with pre-existing provisions; and that by incorporating one amendment after another, the body of the law becomes a mass of contradictions and inconsistencies, unintelligible by the people, and inexplicable by the lawyers. A competent Superintendent, whose whole attention would be devoted to the subject, and who would make himself acquainted with the defects of the law, and the objections alleged against it, would be able, in his reports to the Legislature, to present such views and make such suggestions as would enable that body to legislate intelligently, and enact such laws as would be plain, and consistent, and suited to the wants and circumstances of the people.

Mr. President, it must be confessed that Indiana is much behind many of her sister States, in educational statistics. The startling facts revealed by the late census, that we have upwards of seventy thousand persons in our midst, over twenty-one years of age, unable to read and write, shows that more efficient measures should be adopted, in order to save the youth of the State, thousands of whom are now growing up without any opportunities of instruction from swelling this list, at a succeeding census. Besides, the most approved methods of instruction have not yet been introduced into but few of the common schools of the State. The standard of education in these institutions, does not correspond with the spirit and improvements of the age. Now, is it reasonable to suppose that the future condition of things will be better than the present, unless more persevering efforts are put forth to arouse the public mind to the importance of the interests involved. Every gentleman must be aware, that our common school system has not answered the purpose for which it was devised. The truth is, we have no uniform system. In one county, a particular course of instruction is pursued; and in an adjoining county, the course is altogether different. If we wish to have a system that will be general, uniform, and efficient, we must have an officer, whose special business it will be to direct, control, and guide that system.

Mr. President, the importance of the subject recommends it to the Convention; and no consideration will induce me to occupy your attention in making a long speech in its favor. I am convinced that the good sense of the Convention—the second sober thought, will pass the section unanimously.

The question being on the adoption of the section,

Mr. WOLFE. I do not feel like voting for this section. Ever since we have been in session we have been contending against this thing of creating so many constitutional officers. Why not let the subject go to the Legislature! And if it be found that the system does not work well it can be changed. But if we make a permanent constitutional provision upon the subject it will be impossible to reverse it.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section, and, by ayes 62, noes 43, it was decided in the affirmative.

The question being Shall the question be engrossed for a third reading?

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and being taken, were—yeas 78, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Barbour, Bascom, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chenowith, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Garvin, Gibson, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Howe, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, May, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, Wheeler, Zenor, and Mr. President—78.

NAYS.—Messrs. Beard, Beeson, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Edmonston, Farrow, Frisbie, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Hendricks, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Maguire, Mathis, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Moore, Nave, Pepper of Crawford, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Zenor—50.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. EDMONSTON offered an additional section: That in each school district the qualified electors thereof may decide, by vote, whether they will have any other than the English language taught in the district.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section, and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. CLARK of Hamilton, moved the following additional section: "No school district shall be deprived of its share of the school fund from the want of a school house in such district, or from any cause, whatever."

The question was taken on the adoption of the section, and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. GIBSON offered the following additional section:

"It shall be the duty of the Supreme Court, in the decision of every cause submitted to them, to give a brief statement, in writing, of all the questions arising in said cause, and their decision of each question respectively."

Mr. GIBSON. In offering this section, the object I have in view, is to put an end to a species of dodging questions which has been practised in our Supreme Court from its first organization, and which has increased, from year to year, until it has become an intolerable evil. You try a cause before the circuit court involving large interests, or, perhaps, liberty, or life. The various questions of law arising on the trial, are placed upon the record, and the losing party brings his case to the Supreme Court for the purpose of having those questions passed upon by the highest judicial tribunal of the State.

The Supreme Court will, in some instances, affirm the judgment of the court below without giving any opinion in writing upon the questions involved; in other cases they will decide some one of the questions, reverse the case, and leave the other points untouched.

The case goes back to the circuit court to be tried over again, and again brought back to the Supreme Court, upon the very questions that they ought to have decided at first. Then the Supreme Court will tell the litigants, we will not decide those points, because they were before us once before, and so they ultimately avoid the responsibility of deciding them at all. This, I know, was done in at least one case, though the report of the decision carefully abstains from showing the fact. I allude to the case of Doe on demise of Sheets, et al., vs. Hobson.

I can, perhaps, best illustrate the evil by a very recent case: A man was tried in Clark county, on an indictment for murder, convicted, and sentenced to be hung. He appealed to the Supreme Court, and sought to get his case reversed upon two points.

The first was, that the circuit court had improperly refused to grant him a continuance. The second, that the evidence upon which he was convicted, had been improperly admitted.

The Supreme Court reversed the case upon the first point, but made no decision upon the second. The case went back to the circuit court; the venue was changed to Floyd county, and the man was again convicted and hung. It so happened that after his first trial he had made a full confession of his offense, which relieved the second trial from the question of the admissibility of testimony. If such had not been the case, the cause would have come back a second time to the Supreme Court, to have the very question decided, that ought to have been decided at first.

The section I offer does not require of the court a long argumentative opinion—about that the judges can consult their own taste. All that it requires is, that they shall, in all cases, state what they do decide, and I think that the universal experience of the bar will bear witness to the necessity of some provision of the kind.

Mr. PETTIT. I think that it is important that this section should be adopted. If not for the reason assigned by the gentleman from Clark, for another reason. The Supreme Court have been in the habit when they have found knotty questions arising in a case, of either affirming or reversing the decision of the court below, without writing out an opinion—without assigning reasons. I am for having their reasons spread out upon the record. I think the section ought to pass.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

NORMAL SCHOOL.

The section which provides for a normal school in the State University, was read a second time.

On motion by Mr. HAMILTON,

The section was laid upon the table.

The section in relation to the funds of the State University was read a second time.

The section is as follows: "The University fund shall consist of the proceeds from the sales of the lands granted by the United States for a seminary of learning, and of such of said lands as remain unsold, together with such other grants, gifts, and donations, as have been, or may hereafter be made thereto. The principal of said fund shall forever remain inviolate, and the interest and income thereof shall be applied to the maintenance of the State University, in such manner as the General Assembly may direct."

Mr. HAMILTON moved to amend the section by striking out the word "other," and inserting at the end of the sentence "other than those made by the State."

Mr. KENT. I do not desire to discuss this question, but I believe it is the intention of the General Assembly, at its next session, or at some subsequent session, to devote this fund to common school purposes. I think, therefore, the section ought to be adopted.

Mr. FOLEY moved that the motion be laid upon the table.

The yeas and nays being taken upon the passage of the section, resulted—yeas 62, nays 61:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Bowers, Bracken, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Coats, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of D., Kent, Kendall of Wabash, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Moore, Nave, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Trimble, Wiley, Work, Yocum, and Zenor—61.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Barbour, Beach, Bicknell, Biddle, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Fisher, Foster, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Harboit, Holman, Howe, Johnson of O., Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Murray, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pettit, Prather, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, Wolfe, and Mr. President—61.

Mr. PETTIT offered the following additional section:

"All trust funds held by the State shall be faithfully applied to the purposes for which the trust was created."

SEVERAL MEMBERS. ("That's right," and cries of "No," "no.")

Mr. PETTIT. It strikes me that no gentleman ought, on reflection, to cry "No" to this section. It is a simple declaration that we will faithfully apply the funds. No more, and no less. If we have received anything by gift, by donation—anything for a specific purpose, nothing, in any code of morals that I am acquainted with, can justify defeating the trust. I hope this simple declaration will be adopted.

Mr. OWEN. I hope, sir, that the section introduced by the gentleman from Tippecanoe will pass. I think if the Convention will reflect for a few moments, seriously, upon the vote which has just been taken, some of those who voted to lay the section on the table, will come to the conclusion that it had better not lie there.

The amount of our University fund is not large, but I doubt much whether, by the division from its original purpose, any fund of similar amount, we can bring greater discredit upon our State, than we shall if we take this grant from Congress expressly given for a seminary of learning, and apply it in any other way, whatever. Such action will redound little, we may be assured, to the credit of our State throughout the United States, and the world.

If it is desired to alter the plan of the present University, it is easy to do so. It may be made to embrace normal schools. An appropriation of ten thousand dollars annually is made by New York for such schools.

There is another thing which it behooves us to bear in mind. You cannot obtain for your University such talent as you ought to have, if there be any uncertainty connected with the period of its existence. If you do not know, from year to year, whether the University is to be permanent, every one who has any experience in regard to the faculty of such an institution knows well, that men of the proper stamp cannot be obtained. To the success of a State University, it is essential that its existence shall be placed, by Constitutional provision, beyond the changing influences of annual legislation.

Mr. WALPOLE moved to amend the section so as to provide that nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent the Legislature from diverting the University Fund, with the consent of the General Government, to the use of common schools.

Mr. FOSTER. I have but very few words to say in reference to this matter. I trust that the motion of the gentleman from Hancock will not prevail.

Some gentlemen have raised an objection to this section, because it contemplates other lands. That is a mistake. The situation of the college in regard to it is simply this: There were two townships originally granted, but out of those two townships four thousand acres had been sold anterior to the time of the grant; and when we say other lands, it is only to make up this deficiency of four thousand acres.

If the University is done away with, the State will have no claim upon the General Government for these four thousand acres, because the lands were donated for the purpose of maintaining a State University, and no other purpose. This is the only thing contemplated by the phrase "other lands." I make this suggestion because I think that gentlemen who voted to lay the section upon the table, if they had known the true position of affairs, would not have done so.

Now, permit me to say, inducements were held out to people to settle in that county on account of the University there. Land sold as high as six dollars and twenty-five cents an acre, while other and better land in the State could not command one dollar and twenty-five cents an acre.

It would not only be an injury to the county of Monroe, but it would be an act of bad faith on the part of the State to withdraw these funds, when it is very well known that two-thirds, at least, of the means for the support of the University were obtained by selling those lands at an enhanced price, which could not have been obtained if they had not been located there. Many Southern people availed themselves of the privilege of having their children educated there.

What has been the effect? There have been every year about one hundred and eighty students, and some sixty of these have been educated gratuitously, and the institution is ready to receive two from every county in the State, making in all one hundred and eighty beneficiaries.

But this is not all. The General Government granted the lands for a specific purpose, and to divert them to another purpose, would not only be a violation of the compact entered into with Congress, but it would be a violation of vested rights. Now, the whole amount of the fund will probably amount to fifty-four thousand dollars, and there is not an acre remaining unsold in Monroe county, notwithstanding some of the land is as sterile and worthless as any land can be. All that we contemplate is, getting the four thousand acres to supply the place of that which was sold previous to the donation to the University.

I will remark further, that the fund amounts to about fifty-four thousand dollars, as I have said; and if the interest on that sum should be divided among the children of the State, between the ages of five and twenty-one, it would amount to one cent and two-thirds to each. Will you, then, disgrace the State, in the estimation of all, by depriving us of a State University, without conferring any advantage in any other quarter? I think not. I think that, after the sober second thought, when the Convention have duly reflected upon the matter, I am satisfied they will not divert this sacred fund—yes, I maintain it is a sacred fund—to a purpose for which it was not originally intended, thereby destroying an institution which has done honor to the State—which has produced some of the ripest scholars that have graduated in any State in this Union.

I shall not protract my remarks. I intended merely to make a statement of facts. I hope the vote by which the section was laid upon the table will be re-considered.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. PRESIDENT: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Hancock will prevail. It simply provides that the Legislature may, with the consent of the General Government, apply the funds to the use of common schools. The donation was made by the Government for educational purposes, and should be faithfully carried out. But, sir, suppose this institution should go down by mismanagement, or otherwise, and prove to be of little or no advantage to the people of the State, I would ask why should the funds not be applied to common school purposes?

Mr. President, we have a number of colleges in our State that are under the patronage of individual enterprise; and I believe they are all in a healthy and prosperous condition. Such being the fact, the great necessity for a State University does not exist as would otherwise. Some of those institutions cannot be surpassed, East or West. Then, sir, the man who has the means need not be deprived of giving his children a collegiate education. The object that the General Government had in view is fully accomplished by individual enterprise. To educate the children of our State to that of a common school education, is all that we can hope to accomplish at the public expense; and, sir, this will never be done unless we collect together and husband all the various funds within our reach.

The gentleman from Monroe (Mr. Foster) says the amount is so small it can accomplish no good. Would the gentleman have us understand that, on account of its being so small, we should therefore give it to the citizens of Monroe county? Such would seem to be the argument of the gentleman. Now, sir, I am for gathering up every small item, and collecting together every means within the reach of the State to increase our common school funds. The gentleman tells us that lots have been sold and property bought, with a view to the advantages of the University, and that it would be a breach of good faith to divert the funds. Sir, the gentleman need have no fears from that quarter. The college buildings are all there, and will remain; if not under the patronage of the State, it will be under individual patronage and enterprise, and no doubt more successful. The average number of students is not over eighty or ninety.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me correct the gentleman from Franklin, by informing him that there is an average of one hundred and eighty.

Mr. COOKERLY. There never has been more than eighty-three within the last six years.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. PRESIDENT: Perhaps I am mistaken in regard to the number of students, and stand corrected. But, sir, I am not mistaken about one thing—that this fund has been a bone of contention, and ever will be, and I think should be distributed to common schools, in order that all may participate in its advantages, though ever so small.

Mr. BIDDLE. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Hancock, (Mr. Walpole), and in favor of the section offered by the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit). I am not so much opposed to the amendment on principle, for, if I understand the gentleman, he relies upon the same legal view of the question. But I oppose his amendment for the reason that the construction of the trust must be the same, whether we adopt the amendment or not.

Now, what is the university fund? The Congress of the United States has granted certain lands for a certain purpose, and those lands have been appropriated to that purpose. What title has the State of Indiana to them? She has no right whatever, to control them to any other use, without the consent of Congress; and I will undertake to say that the moment the State of Indiana diverts that fund from the purpose for which it was granted by the United States, to any other purpose, it will work a forfeiture of the fund; and it will be within the power of Congress to resume the fund, if they see proper. Gentlemen may say that Congress will never do it; but Congress may do it, and cut us out of the fundentirely. The State has, what is called by lawyers, a qualified or base fee in the college lands, subject to be defeated on breach of the condition. That is the legal point of view, and I have no doubt every gentleman will concur with me. We ought not, therefore, for fear of the consequences, divert this fund from the purpose to which it was originally intended. With the concurrence of the Congress of the United States, and of our State Legislature, it can be diverted—it can be changed with the consent of the contracting parties. It is like two persons making a contract—they, and they alone, can alter or abrogate it. This Convention, not being the legislative voice of the State, is not one of the contracting parties. It is impossible for us to divert the fund from its original purposes, without a violation of the compact, and the moment we do violate it, we are at the mercy of Congress. The amendment of the gentleman from Hancock, then, is useless.

Now, one word as to the propriety of the section introduced by the gentleman from Tippecanoe. In the first place, how any gentleman can vote against a proposition which merely declares that we shall, as a State, be bound to execute a trust confided to us, is surprising to me. Common honesty and common morality, as it seems to me, dictate the passage of the section. Shall we do that as a State, which will bring the indignation of the christian world upon us? Shall we betray a trust that has been confided to us? Suppose Congress should divert the fund of the Smithsonian Institute, granted for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men, to some other purpose—would we not hear one general denunciation from the civilized world? Let us look at the results. Gentlemen are for building up common schools at the expense of the University. I am in favor of common schools as far as any gentleman on this floor, but I would not give up the University funds for that purpose. Look at the matter dispassionately. Congress has been more liberal and munificent to common schools than to the University. While the General Government has given forty-two thousand acres to the University, she has given a million and a quarter of acres to common schools. Vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, and your common school fund will lie at the mercy of your Legislature. They may divert it to build a canal or railroad. You may also jeopardize your canal and road land, and even the soil on which your capitol rests. Congress may take away the appropriation for common schools, on breach of condition, just as well as to take away the University fund. If gentlemen would secure the common school lands, they must secure the University fund. Common schools are the more important, but I would never make provision for them by robbing the University. Let us sustain them both—they are mutual aids. A State cannot be prosperous in either her University or her schools, when she will, before the christian world, violate a trust confided to her. Bring the question down to a practical shape. I repeat, if we do not regard the trust for the support of our University, the fund confided to us for common schools, is not safe. Give repose to your institutions of learning; without this they cannot be prosperous and useful. I hope the section proposed by the gentleman from Tippecanoe will be adopted, and that no trust that has been confided to this State, will ever be violated.

Mr. WALPOLE. Perhaps if I had had the advantage of a seminary or a college education as my friend from Cass has had, I might feel as strongly attached to a university as he does. I know that we are a good deal biased by early associations. I never went far up the ladder of learning.

The gentleman says that my proposition amounts to nothing, because the high contracting parties can rescind the trust at any time, and such will be the case if the power be left to the General Assembly. But the gentleman proposes to take away the power from the Legislature, and to insert a provision upon the subject in the organic law of the State, prohibiting the contracting parties from making any different application of this fund. I object to placing such a provision in the Constitution, because you thereby preclude the Legislature from ever rescinding the trust. It has been proposed to appropriate the seminary funds to the use of common schools, and the gentlemen who oppose my amendment have themselves yielded to that proposition. They have agreed that the seminary fund shall be given to common schools, but they adhere, tenaciously, to the University fund. My opinion is, that we ought not to put it out of the power of the Legislature to control these funds. The gentleman from Tippecanoe says they should never have been granted, and I will go with him in support of his proposition, if he will leave it within the power of the Legislature to devote the fund to common school purposes; otherwise I shall be obliged to oppose it.

It is urged as an argument in favor of sustaining the University, that the several counties of the State have a right to send pupils to this institution free of cost. This is the case with every institution in the State, and it is proper that it should be so; it is a bonus for extending to them the extraordinary privileges they enjoy.

I trust we shall leave this whole question with the Legislature. I do not propose to abolish the University by Constitutional provision, but I propose to leave it in the hands of the General Assembly, from time to time, as circumstances may dictate their action to make such provision as may be necessary.

I trust that my amendment will be adopted as a compromise. It is not going so far as the State of Arkansas went. A large amount was given to her for a University, and that State, without the consent of the General Government, appropriated the donation to common schools, and that disposition of the funds has been ever since acted upon.

Mr. DAVIS of Madison. I move to amend the instructions by adding the following:

"Or for the establishment of a Normal school."

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's amendment is not in order. There is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

The question being on the amendment of the gentleman from Hancock,

Mr. BRACKEN moved that the amendment and the amendment to the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. PETTIT asked for a division of the question.

Mr. READ of Monroe appealed to the gentleman from Rush to withdraw his motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BRACKEN declined to withdraw his motion.

The question being first on laying the amendment to the amendment on the table,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 58, nays 56—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Beach, Berry, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Dunn of Perry, Elliott, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Hendricks, Hovey, Howe, Jones, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, May, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Thomas, Wallace, Watts, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—68.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allen, Ballingall, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Borden, Bowers, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Foley, Garvin, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Kent, Kendall of Wabash, March, Mathis, McClelland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, and Work—56.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

The question then being on laying on the table the section offered by the gentleman from Tippecanoe.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 39, nays 80—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Barbour, Beard, Berry, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Cole, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Foley, Garvin, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Johnson of O., Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Mathis, McClelland, Rariden, Shoup, Sims, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Walpole, and Work—39.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Elliott, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hendricks, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Jones, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, May, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—80.

So the section was not laid on the table.

The question then being on the adoption of the section,

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and, being taken, resulted—yeas 81, nays 61—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Perry, Elliott, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hardin, Hendricks, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Jones, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, May, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—81.

YAYS.—Messrs. Allen, Beard, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Cole, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Farrow, Foley, Garvin, Graham of Miami, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Mathis, McClelland, Nave, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Walpole, and Wiley—41.

So the section was adopted.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The section on consolidation of various funds for common school purposes, was taken up on its third reading.

Mr. MILROY moved to add the following words:

“That bonds belonging to the State devoted to no particular purpose, shall be applied to common schools,” after the words “after the payment of the public debt.”

Mr. BORDEN. It seems to me that this is a matter for legislative action. I do not see any necessity for filling up the Constitution with provisions about common schools. I therefore move that the section and amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Carroll,

It was decided in the negative.

Mr. DOBSON. It seems to me that we are getting along rather too fast. I wanted to say a word about the section that was offered by the gentleman from Tippecanoe, which was adopted a few minutes ago, because it comes in conflict with some other propositions that we have adopted. The proposition of the gentleman from Tippecanoe is that no trust fund shall be diverted from its original object, and in this section we find that the surplus revenue fund is proposed to be applied to a purpose which was not originally contemplated.

Again, another fund which is a trust fund, has been swallowed up by the internal improvement system. I mean the sinking fund, amounting to more than a million of dollars, and which we have guarantied that we will pay back when called upon to do so, a thing that we cannot do without taxation; and I for one, will never vote to tax the people of Indiana to raise that fund.

I should not be opposed to adopting such a provision as that contained in this section, had we not adopted the other; but having adopted the proposition of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, I contend we ought not to adopt this one.

Mr. COLFAX moved to strike out the following words, “The fund to be derived from the sale of county seminaries.”

A VOICE. We will have the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. COLFAX. Certainly But I wish to explain the proposition first. I go as far as any man, in providing, as the people so unanimously desire, that all fines and forfeitures, hereafter accruing shall go to the common schools, instead of the county seminary fund. That portion of this section, I do not desire to strike out, nor would I vote to strike it out.

But the section goes further. It seems to enact, that the seminaries shall all be sold; and there is no reservation of private rights in those buildings. If it is decided that they shall be sold, surely private rights should be respected. Nearly every seminary in the State, has been built, in part, by liberal contributions of individuals, donated to secure the erection of a building in their town, in which the higher branches should be taught. All that I wish is, that the matter of their sale should be left to the Legislature—so that if they should deem it expedient, they may secure the rights of individuals, out of their proceeds, as well as those to whom the seminaries may be in debt.

A VOICE. That's what we want.

Mr. COLFAX (resuming). Certainly the rights of the creditors of seminaries, whose only lien may be upon the building itself, should be preserved and maintained. Let us increase the resources of the common school fund, as far as possible, that the blessings of education may be increased and widened. But, in doing this, let us not lay violent hands on private property—or property that in part belongs to private persons, without providing that some just and equitable arrangement shall be made relative thereto.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I am not willing to put my hand upon private property, and convert it to the use of the State; nor does this section contemplate any such thing. It contemplates the sale of the county seminaries. The funds by which the seminaries were built were not trust funds, and therefore in selling them we violate no principle of law or of morals. They belong to the State.

Mr. BASCOM moved that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWKINS moved to add the following: “Debts due individuals for donations, shall be first paid.”

Mr. COLFAX. That will answer the purpose contemplated in my amendment.

Mr. HAWKINS said: Mr. President, it must now appear evident to every one, that not only the fund heretofore constituting the life-blood of county seminaries (the fines and forfeitures) is to be taken away from their support, but in addition to that, this section clearly contemplates the sale of seminary buildings and other property connected with these institutions, and the appropriation of the funds arising from such sale, to be made a part of the common school fund. Now, sir, to all this, I have no objection to offer; on the contrary, I am in favor of diverting that fund from its present channel, and bidding it flow out in such a manner as that all may reap the advantages in an equal degree.

But, sir, much as I may be disposed to see this fund diverted, and made a part of the common school fund, accessible to all, I am not willing that the property shall be sold, and the proceeds disposed of, without making some provision by which the honest debts and proper liabilities of county seminaries shall be paid. The old Constitution recognized and fostered, in a limited degree, these institutions. Under the laws of the State, buildings have been erected in most of the counties, and furnished with apparatus and furniture, to make them useful. And in many cases within my knowledge, under special laws for that purpose, monies have been borrowed, and the fines and forfeitures pledged for the payment of the debt. In many cases, where the fund has been insufficient for the erection of buildings and furnishing these institutions, the liberality of the citizens to be immediately benefited by the establishment of seminaries in their midst, has extended the necessary aid, by donations made for that purpose. These donations have been made, and the debts created in good faith, and should be re-funded and paid first, out of the proceeds of the sale. Sir, in the county in which I reside, there is a county seminary in operation, built in part out of the proceeds of the seminary fund proper—in part by a loan authorized by law, and the residue, being about one-third of the cost of building, &c., raised by subscriptions from citizens of the county, as a donation. These donations were made in good faith, not expecting that in two short years the object of their liberality would be offered in the market, and the proceeds diverted from the uses intended by the donors.

In the county of Randolph, they have a splendid seminary, well supplied with the necessary apparatus. This institution has also incurred debts and liabilities, for the purpose of making it useful. These debts should be provided for.

A VOICE. "The debts are bound to be paid. Lay the proviso on the table."

Mr. HAWKINS. I think it very doubtful whether the debts will necessarily have to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, unless this proviso, or something similar, is adopted. At all events, sir, unless the "donations" are provided for here, those making them will have no remedy. I, sir, am as much the friend of that system of schools that has for its object the education of all the children of the State at the public expense, out of one common, general fund, as, perhaps, any man in the State. I would like to see that fund large enough to furnish a constant school in every district in the State, dispensing its blessings upon all alike.

For that purpose, I would take any legitimate step. But, sir, I do not wish to violate private rights, in order to enlarge that fund. I am unwilling to have a sale of these institutions, unless the liabilities shall be paid out of the proceeds. It is for these reasons, that I have moved this proviso. If it will do no good, it can certainly do no harm. I therefore hope it will be adopted.

Mr. BASCOM. I do not think this provision is quite specific enough. Under this section they may take some of the school fund and pay their debts. I want them paid out of the sale of the seminaries, without taking the school funds.

The question was then taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Jay, and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. BRYANT moved to amend so as to appropriate the proceeds of the swamp lands, after the expense of selecting and drainage is paid, for the benefit of common schools.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. NAVE moved to strike out so much as makes counties liable for trust funds loaned out in such counties.

If it is the object, said Mr. Nave, of the drafters of this section to make counties responsible for these funds, I am opposed to it—it is wrong in principle. It is wrong for a county to accept a trust fund for the purpose of loaning it out, and in case it be loaned to irresponsible persons, to tax the people to meet the deficit. I repeat, sir, it is wrong in principle. I, therefore, make the motion that I have made. I hold that it is wrong for a county to loan out trust funds, and in case they are lost, to compel honest men to be taxed to meet the deficiency.

A VOICE. "The people must elect honest men to the Legislature."

Mr. NAVE. I care not how honest they may be. It is wrong to hold a whole county responsible for the acts of its officers in such cases. And for one I enter my protest against any such principle, as being inconsistent with principles of equity.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. I am surprised that the gentleman has not entered a protest against some of the articles in the revised statutes, one of which I will call his attention to. It reads as follows:

[See Revised Statutes, page 252, article 7, section 97:]

"The several counties shall be held liable for the preservation of said fund, and the payment of the annual interest thereon, at the rate established by law."

And a similar section he will find in respect to all the trust funds there mentioned.

Mr. DOBSON. One word in regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Hendricks. I am in favor of it and I will make this one additional remark in regard to this fund. It was originally distributed by the general government in the several States. The Legislature assigned a portion of it to the counties, not to the county officers in the county, in their corporate capacity, but persons appointed to act as agents in the counties. The counties have nothing to do with it. Some forty or fifty individuals have received the money. What they did with it I am not going to stop to inquire. But I ask is it proper to hold the counties responsible when they had nothing to do with it? As to what has been said by the gentleman from Washington, about the revised statutes—I trust in God we are not going to put the whole revised statutes in the Constitution. But we are verging fast towards it.

Now, by the section that was introduced by the gentleman from Tippecanoe, we are going to bind ourselves to pay back all these funds to the General Government. Now, this is getting along a little faster than I am willing to go. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. MOORE. I cannot but think that gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject, do not take the right view of the case. Now, to whose benefit does the interest derived from this fund go? Why, for the benefit of the common schools in the county. And if it be lost, who loses it? The county. It remains county fund, and if it is lost, it is lost to the county, and if the county is taxed to make it good, the county is taxed for its own good.

Mr. DOBSON (interposing). I ask the gentleman if we have not bound ourselves, in a former sections to pay back these funds?

Mr. MOORE. If the General Government demands that we should pay them back, no matter whether we have passed a section or not, common honesty requires that we should pay them back. But until the General Government should require it, we are under no obligation to do so. I say that this fund is now a county fund.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. The object of the General Government in making this donation, undoubtedly, was to maintain the schools of the State. But the gentleman says, if they are lost we must pay them back. Pay to whom? To the county itself. What is the use of this provision, if that be the case? Why not tax the county for schools, at once? The object is not to maintain a fund, but to maintain schools. And if you should appropriate funds for that purpose directly from the treasury, it would be cheaper than if you distribute the college funds, and afterwards collect funds and divide them among the colleges again.

Mr. WOLFE. I hope the motion to strike out will prevail. If a few reckless men within the county squander the money, would it be right that the people of the county should be held responsible? I think not.

Mr. LOCKHART. It seems to me that gentlemen do not understand what is proposed to be stricken out. If the motion of the gentleman from Sullivan (Mr. Wolfe,) should prevail, the section will be valueless; the words which he proposes to strike out are only an affirmation of what the law now is and has been for many years. The section provides that the several counties shall be held responsible for the preservation of such of the school funds as may be entrusted to them. Nothing, sir, can be more just than this. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. NEWMAN. The law now requires that all these funds shall be accounted for. I propose to amend the amendment by inserting in lieu thereof, "that the sale of any county seminary shall be made subject to all contracts, liabilities, mortgages, &c."

Mr. NAVE accepted the amendment as a substitute for his own.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment, it was, upon a division, yeas 36, noes 45, rejected.

The question then being on the engrossment of the section,

Mr. WALPOLE moved that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. HOGIN offered the following additional section:

"All debts that may have accrued in the building of said seminaries shall be paid out of the proceeds of such sale, &c."

The PRESIDENT. The Convention has just voted down a proposition of that character.

The section which provides that — per cent. of the dividends of certain incorporated companies shall be applied to the support of common schools, was read a second time.

Mr. BASCOM moved to amend by striking out the words, "in whose charters the General Assembly have reserved the right to repeal or amend the same."

It will be recollected, (said Mr. Bascom,) that this Convention has passed a section prohibiting the Legislature from repealing bank charters. If this amendment be not adopted, the provision will operate only upon incorporated companies, such as railroad and canal companies, and not upon banking corporations. I am willing that all shall be taxed, including banks, as well as railroad and other corporations.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALLACE. I would ask the chairman of the committee if he is prepared to suggest the proper amount of per centage with which to fill the blank.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. That is a matter which the committee thought proper to leave to the Convention to determine.

Mr. HOWE moved to fill the blank with "five."

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. I do not perceive why this section should be adopted at all.

We have already provided that the capital of all corporations should be taxed, and it is now proposed that their profits shall also be taxed. I see no reason why private corporations should be taxed more than any other. There are many cases where men may invest their money for other than selfish purposes.

If we adopt this provision, we are going to make a complicated system of taxation. I think this section ought to be voted down altogether. We have already provided that all corporations shall stand upon an equality—that is, that there shall be no exclusive privileges granted; and we ought to provide that all taxation shall likewise be equal.

Mr. PRATHER moved to amend the amendment, so that it should read, "not less than five per cent."

Mr. HOWE accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Jennings as a modification of his own.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. HUFF moved that the section and pending amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington offered an additional section, that every bank that shall be established shall pay a bonus of one quarter of one per cent. for common schools.

Mr. HAMILTON said—

PRESIDENT: I hope the section will not be adopted. I am decidedly for taxing banks and all other corporations, for every dollar they own, in money or any other kind of property by them held, in the same manner as I would tax a merchant, a miller, or a money-lender. My opinion has ever been that all ought to contribute to the support of the government in proportion to their property. If, sir, you have ten thousand dollars, and I only one thousand, you ought to pay ten times the amount of taxes on your property that I do on mine, because you have ten times as much to be protected.

By a former section, we provided that the banks shall not charge an amount of interest greater than individuals loaning money are allowed to charge. That they should pay taxes for everything they hold, the same as private property; placing them as to taxes, upon the same footing as an individual money lender, giving them no exclusive privileges; they should have none.

This amendment, as the gentleman from Wells has truly said, would add additional taxes on the capital invested in every other improvement made under corporate powers. But not on banks—for that is settled under another section. Yet, sir, my colleague either does not understand this question, or in his zeal to destroy all banks of every kind, has for some time seemed to be running wild, eternally talking about banks and bankers; it seems to be the first and last theme with him morning and evening. I would ask that gentleman in his zeal, to tax all plank roads and other necessary improvements, how would he like an income tax embracing the salary of State and county officers? Why should they not pay some of the expenses of government for the protection they enjoy? Do they not fare sumptuously upon the spoils of office? Why this zeal to get a double tax on such improvements as are made for the public good? Why does not my colleague show his desire to economize by a reduction in salaries of officers? No, sir; increasing them is all we have heard since we came here.

I should like to know how much of the public burthens some of these office holders bear; I think it would not be hard to carry. I can see no good reason why an income tax, arising from salaries, should not be assessed. I want, sir, to see taxes so assessed that all shall bear their proportion of the public expenses according to the means they possess, and at the same time, that these public burthens should be as light as possible. I do trust, Mr. President, that this section will not pass.

Mr. BORDEN moved that the amendment be laid upon the table.

Mr. PETTIT moved to amend the motion so as to lay both the section and the amendment on the table.

Mr. BORDEN asked for a division of the question.

Mr. HAMILTON withdrew his amendment.

The question being on laying the section on the table,

Mr. BORDEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion was, upon a division—ayes 69, noes 37—decided in the affirmative.

So the section was laid on the table.

Mr. WALPOLE. In order that we may have the yeas and nays upon this section, I move that it be taken from the table, and ask the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken, resulted as follows—yeas 46, nays 76:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bowers, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Cole, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Garvin, Haddon, Hardin, Hawkins, Hitt, Howe, Huff, Johnson, of D., Johnson of O., Kelso, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, McClelland, Miller of Gibson, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Prather, Schoonover, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Tague, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Work, and Zenor—46.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allen, Anthony, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Bourne, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dick, Elliott, Farrow, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Hovey, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Sharron, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Wiley, Yocum, and Mr. President—76.

So the section was not taken from the table.

On motion of Mr. SHOUP,
The Convention adjourned.

REMARKS OF MR MARCH,

In Convention, January 25th, 1851.

Mr. MARCH. The gentleman from Laporte has unwittingly just pronounced one of the most scathing sarcasms that could well be uttered, upon the system of practice and pleading at common law. He tells us that three farmers can, in a few short sentences, draw up a code of practice.

Mr. NILES (interposing, and Mr. March giving way). What I said was, that it would not require more than three short sections, and that those should be well considered and carefully worded. I did not say that three farmers could do it.

Mr. MARCH. He now tells this Convention, and he is high authority, that three short sections can take the place of what we have proposed to abolish—this stupendous system of practice and pleading which now fills hundreds of volumes.

What stronger admission could be made against it? If that is the nature of the system, is it strange that any one should come to the conclusion, in relation to it, that reform and destruction were not far apart? What stronger argument could be used for sweeping it away, and substituting in its place a plain, common sense method of procedure in our courts of justice? Of what worth is the gathered rubbish of a thousand years, if three sections are all that is required to supply its place? The system has a strong hold upon the feelings and sympathies of those whose minds have been trained in its rules, but it will soon be forgotten, except as one of the curiosities of a past generation. For one, I am ready to say, "Sweep it out of existence." Let it be gathered together and decently buried, with the honors of war, if it will be any gratification to its friends, alongside of the theories and speculations of the alchemists and metaphysicians of the middle ages. Let a monument be erected to its memory, from the contributions of those in whose pockets it has put money. Let its epitaph be the sentiment which has just been uttered by the gentleman from Laporte—"three short sections in the English language, fill the place of all this rubbish, these relics of a bygone age." [Loud applause.]

But it is said that the law reformers follow the guidance of theory, rather than the light of experience. This sentiment sounds very well, when expressed in words; but it is unfortunate for its intended effect, that it is not supported by facts. It is far more applicable to the opponents of law reform, than to its supporters. This system of pleading, in its rude origin, was undoubtedly the creation of circumstances, without much reference to its general scope or tendency. But its modern commentators and defenders contend that it is founded in the purest theoretical principles of logic. Now, sir, when the experience of centuries has shown its absurdities—has proved it cumbersome, and burdensomely expensive, and that it thwarts the ends of justice—yet gentlemen blindly shut their eyes to this bright light, streaming all along the track of the past, and still fondly cling to their beautiful theory of logic. It is the bitter experience which the people have had of the effects of the system, which has brought about an almost universal cry for reform.

The gentleman is startled at the idea of abolishing the distinction between law and equity, and administering justice in an uniform mode of pleading, and fears the consequence will be the destruction of equity jurisprudence. He also pronounced a high eulogium on the bill in equity, as a method of stating a case, and enforcing and protecting the rights of parties.

Courts of equity originated in the fact that courts of law could entertain a case only in a prescribed form. The existence of courts of equity is the strongest evidence of the defects in the common law method of remedies. In it the form of an action is made of far more importance than the substance of the action itself, or than even the rights of the parties. It is perfectly consistent with the spirit of the age in which it originated, but it is wholly at war with that of the present. It is arbitrary, barren, inflexible, and without any philosophical basis. Cases are made to bend to forms, and not forms to cases. It occupies the same place in the administration of justice, compared with that system which we wish to see established, that are occupied in philosophy by the theories of Aristotle, compared with the great experimental results of Bacon. The ancient philosopher laid down a theory, and then distorted facts to support it. This system of pleading lays down certain rigid forms, and then distorts all the principles of the law, and facts of a case, in order to suit the forms, or entirely excludes them from its cognizance. The cobwebs of special pleading have so far blinded gentlemen, that they do not appear to see or comprehend the nature and purpose of the proposed reforms.

The abolition of the different forms of action, and of the distinction between law and equity will not take from courts the power to grant any kind of redress which is now granted, but will enable them to grant that redress irrespective of any mere forms of action or complaint now in use, either in law or equity.

The tenacity with which gentlemen cling to these forms and distinctions in modes of procedure, confounding them with the principles of the law, shows the defects in the system, and the injurious effect it has upon the human mind, and the administration of justice. As in this discussion, the great principles of the law are lost sight of in the zeal for form, so in a court of justice, the merits of a case are often postponed and neglected in discussing the mere questions of pleading.

We do not propose to abolish or amend a single principle of the law or equity jurisprudence, which now governs the rights of parties. They will remain the same, so far as any action denoted by the section which we have proposed is concerned. Wherever any person now has a right to redress for any grievance, he will still possess it. But instead of being compelled to choose between a court of law and a court of equity, and between some ten or fifteen forms of action, at his peril, there will be but one court in which to file his complaint, and he will be permitted to make his own form of action.

In a philosophical or common sense view, it is difficult to perceive any necessity for a distinction between law and equity, in the administration of justice. Whatever is recognized by courts as a rule to govern them in deciding upon the rights of parties, and applying remedies, is the law of the land, whether it is called law or equity; and one court can just as well administer it, as two. In fact, in this State it is all administered in one court, but it must be done in two different capacities, possessing a kind of an amphibious character, one minute sitting upon the hard, dry land of the common law, and the next afloat upon the boundless sea of equity. But wherever the principles of the law are made to yield to forms of proceeding, and a narrow, inflexible system of practice, like that of the common law, is adopted for the administration of justice, something like equity must necessarily come into existence, or half the grievances in society go unredressed.

If the English system of practice and pleading had been founded, in the first place, upon a broad basis, with suitable principles of expansion and adaptation, equity jurisprudence, distinct from the common law, would never have been known. Neither will the proposed reforms necessarily abolish anything that is excellent in a bill in chancery, as a form of pleading. A bill in chancery is a clear and concise statement of the facts in a case, and an answer is a like statement of the defence. This is the very form of pleading, with some rules in regard to joinder of causes of action, which we wish to see adopted in all our courts, without any of those quibbling technicalities, which now perplex and obscure on every hand.

Then the only questions presented for decision will be the merits of the cause of action and defense, as presented on paper, and how they are sustained by the evidence. No one will then expect to have a case decided upon anything but its merits, and thereby greatly check the spirit of litigation; for one of the greatest promoters of litigation, at the present time, is the prevalent idea, that, with the aid of a good lawyer, by some trick or quibble, a party can gain his cause, right or wrong.

What is an action of law? Simply a complaint of one person against another. Well, we propose that all that should be required of any one having a cause of action against another, is to come into a court of justice and state his grievance in plain language, in his own way, and if, under the law of the land, he is entitled to redress in any form, don't turn him out until justice has been administered. How does the matter stand now? If you go upon the equity side of the court, the court has to decide, in the first place, whether you have a cause coming within the equity jurisdiction. If you have got as it were, the proper "pass word," the "open sesame," it is all right—if you have not, you may go as far as you please, and yet at any time before the highest tribunal has given its final judgment, the court, by turning to some old musty volume of decisions, made, perhaps, hundreds of years ago, discovers that you have come in at the wrong door; you should have commenced on the law side, and not in equity; so you have to go out of court smarting with cost, and either stay out or rap at another door, and dress up your case in a different "suit." But when you get into the vestibule of this boasted temple of justice, what do you perceive? You find some twenty doors opening into the inner temple, and upon which are inscribed such terms as replevin, assumpsit, trover, ejectment, debt, covenant, trespass, trespass on the case—and I will not call the roll any farther on the present occasion. [Laughter.] If you make a mistake as to the door you will enter, which is very likely to be done, though you have a dozen lawyers to give direction—if you call your action "debt," when some old judge five hundred years ago, in England, who, perhaps, did not know enough to make a respectable justice of the peace in Indiana, decided that such a cause should be termed something else, you are told politely that you may have a very good case, but you did not come in at the right door. The consequence is, you are turned out of court again, and have to commence anew or give up your case entirely; and many a suitor, who has had a good cause of action, after years of fruitless litigation has died before he got justice done him, or anything approaching to it.

The section directing the appointment of commissioners to simplify the practice, &c., has already passed, but gentlemen are constantly wandering back to that subject, and seem anxious to fight the battle over again, and I have thought it right and proper to say thus much in reply to some of their remarks.

The section now on its final passage proposes three things: First, that the commissioners already provided for shall be elected by the people: Second, that they shall continue in office for two years: Third, that the code of practice shall not become the law of the land until sanctioned by the Legislature. I can see no necessity for that last provision. No one ever dreamed that what the commissioners do shall be the law without the action of the Legislature being first had upon it. It is difficult to conceive how any man could have had the ingenuity to discover the necessity of such a provision.

The gentleman from Switzerland has urged in favor of the passage of the section, that, if it be necessary to have the men elected by the people who sit in our courts of justice, then those who make the laws for us should be elected in the same manner. These commissioners are not to make laws for us; they are only to draw up and arrange into a condensed form, a code of practice, and present it to the Legislature. I do not see the necessity of this provision in relation to their office continuing for two years. The duties of the office, possibly, may not last for six months. We should not make a positive provision of this kind, because the work may be done during the session of the first Legislature under the Constitution.

Sir, all this comes from the wrong quarter. It is not, I judge, from any friendliness to the cause of reform, that the gentleman made these propositions. In fact, he has ridiculed the idea from the beginning, and "damned it with faint praise," every step he has taken. He has pronounced the experiment in New York, as a perfect failure. Sir, some of the most distinguished lawyers in the State of New York, were appointed to draw up a code. They did so, and it is now in force, and has received the fullest approbation of the people, and the approval of the best lawyers in the State. It has facilitated business, and greatly reduced the expense of litigation in that State. And yet the gentleman gets up here, and, with a majestic and oracular air, tells the Convention that it has proved a perfect failure.

I understand that the gentleman from Floyd (Mr. Thornton) has with him the highest evidence of the success of the New York code of practice, which, with the permission of the Convention, I will thank him to read.

ALBANY, May 8, 1850.

Hon. David Dudley Field:

My Dear Sir—I take pleasure in answering your favor of the 6th inst., asking my opinion on the subject of certain inquiries made by Mr. Loughborough, of Kentucky.

I regard the uniting of law and equity jurisdictions in the same tribunal, as one of the most desirable of modern reform. There were great difficulties to encounter. There was a deeply rooted prejudice against breaking up two distinct and complicated systems of practice, with which all had become familiar; and it was exceedingly difficult to frame one system of practice applicable to both remedies. The principal obstacle was one of practice—not of principle; for every one was ready to concede that it seemed palpably absurd that a court which was authorized to pronounce the law should not have the power to administer justice between the parties. I think every day that passes will increase our surprise that a separation of law and equity was ever tolerated.

It will take some time to reconcile all our lawyers to the change. Much is to be unlearned, and the system of practice to be learned must be perfected. This it will take years to accomplish. The necessary machinery, though in most respects exceedingly well put together, cannot be made complete without the aid of experience in perfecting its details. But of the ultimate and entire success of the change I entertain no doubt.

Our present plan of taking testimony in open court at the circuits, has many advantages over the late practice of taking proofs in chancery. I often try at the circuit, in a few hours, an equity cause that would have occupied several days before the Examiner, under the old system. When the parties are before the court, it is easy to ascertain the real point in controversy, and to direct all the evidence to it. Having taken the evidence, and being, of course, familiar with it, much less time is consumed in the argument of counsel.

Very few such causes are tried by a jury. The counsel generally waive a jury, and try, the cause before the court. But if there is a jury, the judge has only to sift out the real question of fact, and submit it in the form of a question to the jury. He then declares what remedies the parties shall have, on the facts admitted or found.

I am, very truly, yours, &c., &c.,

AMASA J. PARKER.

NEW YORK, 10th May, 1850.

David Dudley Field, Esq.:

Dear Sir—I cheerfully comply with your request, "to give you the result of my observation on the practical operation of our blended system of law and equity, that you may communicate it to Mr. Loughborough," of Kentucky.

In the extensive practice which has come under my notice since the amalgamation, I have as yet seen no evils arising from it, nor any inconveniences which would not have occurred under the former system. In short, I have no hesitation in saying that the change has worked well. In the outset, efforts were made to obtain equitable remedies in cases to which they were not equitable. The minds of some members of the bar seemed to be entirely afloat, and I was applied to for an injunction, by way of attaching property, in a suit simply for goods sold; but this confusion appears to have been dispelled. * * * * *

Where there are distinct systems of law and equity, administered by the same Judge, I have no hesitation on the subject. Unless each could be administered by a distinct judge, I would amalgamate the forms of procedure at once. Our experience while our Circuit Judges were Vice Chancellors, was abundant to show, that there should be either an entirely distinct set of judges, or a single and uniform system.

With great respect, I remain,

Very truly yours,

LEWIS H. SANDFORD.

ALBANY, Sept. 20, 1850.

David Dudley Field, Esq.:

* * * * *

The leading principles upon which the reform embodied in the code is founded, are such as no government, when once adopted, will ever relinquish. There is, at this day at least, no reason why the distinction between the equity and common law proceedings should be preserved. Nor is there any more reason for preserving the different forms of actions at law. The provisions of the code, in this respect, abolishing the distinctions between law and equity, and the different forms of actions at common law, are, with perhaps here and there a single, if not a singular exception, approved and commended by our entire judiciary and bar.

The abolition of chancery proceedings under the operation of the constitution and code together, have been the means, in my judgment, of saving our present judiciary system from the evils which wrought the destruction of the former. My own deliberate conviction is, that had the old chancery system continued, our courts, by this time, would have been irretrievably swamped with the accumulation of business.

* * * * *

I have thus, my dear sir, frankly and cursorily expressed to you my own views of the practical working of the code. Its adoption was a great step in improvement, as well as progress. The great and leading features of the system can never be abandoned. In its details it is yet defective. Some of these defects will be cured by legislation, others by experience. Although I have sometimes felt discouraged, for reasons at which I have already hinted, it is still my purpose, while I am honored with the station I now occupy, to give my best efforts to carrying out and perfecting a system, resting, as I am per-sueded this does, upon the only sound basis of legal practice.

I remain, dear sir, with great respect,

Your obedient servant,

IRA HARRIS.

—
New York, December 26, 1850.

D. D. Field, Esq.:

Dear Sir—You have requested my opinion respecting the practical operation of our code of procedure, and particularly that part of it which abolishes the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity. I should have complied with your request earlier, but my time has been so much engrossed of late, as to prevent my doing so, and, even now, I must be very brief.

The opportunities I have had to judge of the new mode of proceeding, and of the practice under the code, have been sufficient to satisfy me of the great advantage we have gained over the old system of practice. The common law distinction of actions being abolished, and as a necessary consequence, all forms of pleading as heretofore used, and the informal pleadings described in the code, and only to the extent therein allowed, being substituted, seems to me an improvement, which I think cannot fail to be acknowledged in proportion as the profession become familiarized to it.

In the trials of causes, I have found no difficulty in readily understanding, from the pleadings as now generally framed, what are the disputed points or issues to which testimony is to be adduced, or the evidence applied; and those who are called to the work of "distributive justice," are now spared the necessity, which was many times a disagreeable task, of non-suiting a plaintiff, or over-ruling a defense, merely because of a mistake in the form of action or of a plea, or of a variance between the pleadings and the proof; a result oftentimes of the most technical character, producing expense and delay, if not entirely defeating the ends of justice.

I am likewise in favor of the code, wherein it has abolished the distinctions between actions at law and bills in equity. I confess I was always partial to the Court in Chancery as a distinct court, but when it was overthrown in our State, and the administration of equity jurisprudence became blended in the same tribunals with that of law, under our new Constitution, which took effect in 1847, there appeared to me no longer any very good reason for keeping up such a distinction as the equity side and the law side of the same court, in respect to its proceedings. The act passed May 12, 1847, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the Constitution in relation to the judiciary, did indeed recognize that distinction, and we were called upon to frame two sets of rules, one for the practice in equity suits, and the other in actions at law. At that time I ventured to express a hope that the necessity for such a distinction might soon be removed; and I think the code has wisely ordered a uniform course of proceeding in all actions, both for law and equity.

I am, with great respect,
Your obt' servant,
WM. T. McCOUN.

The opinions of these judges, who have administered the law under this new code of practice, may not be good authority with some, and yet they would yield the most implicit faith to the decisions of the pimps of Charles II, of the tools of the VIIIth Henry, and of a Jeffreys, a judge that would disgrace the judicial bench of the king of darkness. For my part, I give the preference to the authority of the judges in New York.

TUESDAY, JAN. 28, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. CRUMBACKER, a delegate from Lake county.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to make a motion having reference to the committee on revision. The sub-committee has already had several meetings and is anxious to submit the result of its labors to the Convention. They have completed the bill of rights, preparatory to submitting it to the committee itself, and to its presentation here for approval.

Upon examining that article, we find that there is a single section of three or four lines that has not yet been acted upon by the Convention. It relates to the rights to property of married women. We are desirous that it should be acted upon now, and either voted down or passed, so that the article may be modified accordingly. I suppose gentlemen will not desire discussion, as the section has already been debated at length. If so, the matter can be settled in ten minutes.

I move, Mr. President, that article fifty-two be made the special order for now.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read the section as follows:

"The real and personal property of married women and a liberal provision for widows, shall be and remain secured to them respectively, under equitable conditions by law."

Mr. OWEN. I move the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to lay the section upon the table.

Mr. SHOUP. I move a call of the Convention.

The motion was not seconded.

The question being upon laying on the table—upon a division—ayes 55, noes 71,

The section was not laid upon the table.

The demand for the previous question having been seconded, the main question was ordered to be put.

The PRESIDENT. The main question is, Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading?

Upon this question the yeas and nays were demanded and taken with the following result—yeas 70, nays 58:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Ballingall, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Clements, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Frisbie, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Graham of War-rick, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hendicks, Hitt, Hovey, Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, Maguire, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Prather, Rariden, Read of Monroe, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wheeler, Wiley, and Mr. President—70.

NAYS.—Messrs. Barbour, Beach, Biddle, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Far-row, Fisher, Foley, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Howe, Huff, Johnson of D., Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Logan, March, Mather, Mathis, Miller of Fulton, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Stevenson, Tague, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Yocum, and Zenor—58.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. LOCKHART reported an article defining the boundaries of the State, which passed to a second reading.

Mr. WALPOLE reported an article requiring that a vote should be taken by the qualified electors of the State, on the first Monday in June, for the adoption or rejection of the new Constitution, and that a separate poll should be opened to decide on the article in relation to the exclusion of negroes, which passed to a second reading.

CORPORATIONS.

The section providing that corporations shall not be created by special acts, but may be formed under general laws, and that laws conferring corporate powers may be altered and repealed, was read a third time.

Mr. COLFAX, I am convinced, Mr. President, that this is one of the most dangerous sections which has been engrossed in the Convention. Its language is broad and comprehensive—"all laws conferring corporate powers may be repealed." Not all laws hereafter passed—not that they may be repealed for good cause shown—not that a two-thirds vote shall be required to guard against hasty violation of vested rights. But under it, all laws heretofore or hereafter passed, which have granted or shall grant corporate powers, are placed at the caprice of a bare majority of any session of the Legislature. The same majority that is now required to authorize a State road, can, influenced by a few prominent men, revoke, without notice and without adequate cause—on unsubstantial grounds, or none at all—the charter of a company which has constructed an important and expensive work, from which they are just beginning to reap some recompense for their investment.

Believing, therefore, that it is an unwise and dangerous proposition—that, under it, vested rights will become a by-word—that investments in plank roads, railroads, and other works of improvement will necessarily cease—that those now interested in such enterprises will rather withdraw their investments than trust them to the uncontrolled whim or caprice of an accidental majority in the Legislature; and believing, further, that no harm can possibly ensue by leaving the Legislature to reserve, in every case that they desire, the power of repeal, and define the restrictions under which, and the causes for which, such power may be exercised. I move to lay the section on the table, and do sincerely trust that a majority of this Convention will resolve that this section shall not be incorporated into the Constitution we are framing.

The section was, upon a division—ayes 73, noes, 52—laid upon the table.

The section providing that stockholders shall be liable to the amount of their stock, &c., came up on its third reading.

Mr. OWEN moved to re-commit, with the following instructions:

Strike out and insert—

"Stockholders in all corporations shall be individually responsible to an amount over and above their stock, equal to their respective shares of stock, for all debts or liabilities of the corporation."

The Convention will recollect that we have already passed a provision with reference to banks, similar to that which my amendment proposes to insert in this section; that each stockholder shall be liable, in addition to his share of stock, for an amount equal to that share. I think we ought to put all corporations upon the same footing. If we prescribe this rule for the government of banks, it seems right that we should also prescribe it for the government of corporations generally.

I think it is quite as effectual as a provision that stockholders shall be liable for all debts, in the proportion of their stock; and, as being more definite, I think it less likely to deter the investment of capital in useful enterprises.

Mr. FOLEY moved to lay the section and pending instructions upon the table.

Upon this question, the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and, being taken, the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 57, nays 71:

YEAS.—Messrs Alexander, Ballingall, Barbour, Beard, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Carr, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Jones, Kelso, Kilgore, Lockhart, Maguire, Mather, Mathis, Mooney, Morgan, Mowrer, Newman, Niles, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Spann, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, and Zenor—57.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allen, Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Fisher, Garvin, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Hardin, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Howe, Johnson of D., Johnson, of O., Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Logan, March, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Trimble, Walpole, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Mr. President—71.

So the motion did not prevail.

Mr. STEVENSON said that he was opposed to the principle contained in this section, of making the liability of stockholders so great. Those farmers who should unite in subscribing to the stock of a road would be responsible for the full amount of their subscription, so that, in the event of the failure of said company, their farms would be subject to forfeiture. Their farms and not the road would be looked to as security, and would be levied on by the purchasers of the stock. In his opinion, this was a provision for the benefit of the rich.

Mr. NEWMAN moved to amend the instructions, so that corporations, other than banking, shall have such responsibility imposed on stockholders as may be provided by law.

Mr. N. remarked that it seemed to him the Convention should be careful how they restricted enterprise in the State, so far as public improvements were concerned. It should be recollected that, if they inserted a restriction of such a character in the Constitution, if the Constitution was adopted, the people would be left without remedy. But if the Convention left the matter open, so that the Legislature might pass general laws upon the subject, would any gentleman doubt but what that body would throw around the subject sufficient and necessary restrictions? Take, for instance, the Indianapolis and Terre Haute railroad, which was commenced with less than one hundred thousand dollars worth of stock subscribed, and which took half a million of dollars to complete it. Now, if the stockholders had been made individually liable for the amount of the stock subscribed to, what man on the whole line would have taken a dollar of stock? Not one. And thus it would be with the other railroad enterprises of the day. By this restriction the energies of the people would be depressed, and the public good greatly affected. The doctrine was monstrous, that a man who subscribed to one hundred dollars worth of stock in a plank road or railroad should be held responsible to the full amount of his means.

Mr. NILES. There has not been a truer sentiment uttered upon this floor, than that which was expressed a few moments since, by the gentleman from Putnam, (Mr. Stevenson,) that this is a provision for the benefit of the rich. The capitalist can carry on any business in which he may see fit to engage, without assistance from his neighbors. He needs no law to encourage associated enterprise, and the concentration of small sums from various sources, aid in promoting the public good, in connection with his own interests. And the wealthy are not always the men of the most public spirit. But men of small means must combine their efforts and capital, or they can engage in no great public enterprise. Without associated effort, we could have no plank roads—no railroads—no cotton or woollen mills in the State. It is an Ishmaelitic spirit which would frown upon associated efforts. They are connected with all that is progressive and hopeful in the present condition of the world. Every man's hand has been raised against his neighbor, and every man has been for himself, against all others, too much and too long already. Corporations are but associations organized to effect lawful and useful objects, which could not or would not be accomplished by individuals. Why, then, this ceaseless clamor against them? When has a plank road company or a woollen mill endangered our liberties, or done violence to private rights?

By adopting the section as reported by the committee, or the amendment offered by the gentleman from Posey, you will, in effect, prohibit all such associations, or so limit their number that the few wealthy and sharp-sighted men shall make large profits, and men of small means, who must unite in large numbers, will never risk the experiment. Look, for example, at the condition of the county of Laporte. We have a large wool crop. A woollen manufacturing establishment is much needed among us. We have no one, two, or half a dozen capitalists, who have the ability and the enterprise to go into the business. We can accomplish the object only by inducing a large number to form a joint stock association. An individual may be able and willing to invest a thousand dollars, but would wholly refuse to make himself liable for over another thousand—much less indefinitely for all the debts which might ever be contracted by the company. And the question is simply presented, shall such associations be tolerated, or shall they be prohibited altogether? It is said that partners are liable, indefinitely, for all the debts of the firm. But a partnership is one thing, and a corporation is entirely another, and is designed to accomplish objects which are beyond the reach of partnerships. A partner chooses his associates. The co-partner has no power to sell out his interest in the concern and bring in a stranger, for whose acts the other shall be liable. The partnership would be dissolved by such a transfer. The stock in corporations is assignable without the consent of the individual members, and must remain so, or the distinctive character of corporations will be destroyed. You could have no partnerships if you made partners liable for the acts of strangers, and you will have little of the benefits which may and do result from corporations, if you adopt these provisions. The conditions upon which corporations are organized, are understood by the public. No man is compelled to give them credit. If he deals with them he may require his pay in advance, or he may use the largest liberty in making his own terms or going anywhere else. With banks it is otherwise. Bank paper circulates as money, and men are all but compelled to receive and pay it out. We have very properly guarded banks against failure, but this section proposes to impose even severer restrictions upon corporations organized for other purposes—upon plank roads than upon banks. Now, sir, I hold that corporations, which would be in effect prohibited by this section, are to-day doing more to improve the country than all the money of individual capitalists put together, and I hold further, that there is not a larger proportion of failures by corporations, as organized under our present laws, than by individuals. By refusing to pass this section, we do not say that there shall be no individual liability in any case, but we leave the whole matter to the Legislature, to be regulated by wholesome laws, such as experience may prove to be necessary and useful. I hope, then, that, if anything is to be adopted, it will be the amendment of the gentleman from Wayne.

Mr. OWEN. The gentleman from Laporte (Mr. Niles) says, this provision that stockholders in corporations shall be liable, is a provision in favor of capital and of capitalists.

If honesty be in favor of capitalists; if to pay a man's just debts be in favor of capitalists, then so is this provision. It but imposes upon the corporator similar liability, though not to the same extent as an individual incurs under our laws, when he runs into debt.

An "Ishmaelitish sentiment," the gentleman says it is; a provision tending to "raise one man's hand against every man, and every man's hand against him." Ishmaelitish! In what possible sense can the gentleman make such an assertion as that? Is it an Ishmaelitish sentiment, that when a corporation incurs a debt, it should be made to pay it?

A wool mill, the gentleman gives as an example; an incorporation associated for the very useful purpose of making woollen fabrics. Well, sir, let us take up that particular case. Of whom does such a company obtain their raw material? Of whom is the wool they manufacture purchased? Usually of the farmers in the neighborhood. Suppose the company mismanage their affairs and lose money; so that their capital stock is insufficient to pay their debts. Suppose the individuals who compose the corporation amply able to pay all debts. Is it an Ishmaelitish sentiment that the law should hold them responsible to the farmer for the wool with which he furnished them? Is it not far more Ishmaelitish that they should suspend payment full handed, and secure behind the immunities of their character, bid the farmer seek his remedy where he could find it.

I would not run into extremes, sir, in this matter. I consider this a compromise between the opinions of those who hold that all stockholders should be responsible to the full amount of their property, and of those who would free them from all individual liability. And as such, I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. LOCKHART was opposed to the section, because, if the doctrine therein contained was carried out, it would put a stop forever to the construction of railroads and plank roads. In the section of the State from which he came, men took their axes upon their shoulders and went out and gave fifty dollars, worth of labor and material in the construction of a plank road, and if, in addition, they had been made responsible to the amount of fifty dollars, these roads would never have been constructed. If this section was put in the constitution, he did not believe that they could get stock taken in any plank road or railroad in the State.

Mr. DOBSON said, he was in favor of the section as it stood. He desired to see the people of the country protected from any injustice which might be done them by corporations. He took the broad ground that corporations were no more than artificial persons, and he thought that artificial persons should have no more rights than natural men.

Mr. READ of Monroe. Mr. President, as chairman of the committee reporting this section, it is proper that I should say, that in committee it was not presented by myself. The principle was brought forward by the gentleman from Greene, (Mr. Butler,) and was unanimously adopted by the committee. The gentleman from Jefferson, (Mr. Gregg,) a member of the committee, was not present upon its adoption. My own agency was confined to putting the section in proper form, and to making such liability as the section prescribes relate to debts contracted during the time the stockholder should hold stock in the corporation. The object of this was, to prevent a stockholder escaping liability, by selling out his stock in an insolvent company to Jack Straw, or some other equally notable personage, and giving him three drinks of grog to take it, the said Jack Straw assuming at the same time the liabilities as well as the ownership of the stock.

Sir, I have no hostility to associated wealth. On the contrary, I do not hesitate to say, that I consider it one of the great instruments of modern civilization. I would afford all proper encouragement to the union of capital for promoting the various improvements of the country.

While I was at first averse to the principle here presented, and in consequence kept back the report of the committee to a late period, after, in the mean time, conversing with numerous capitalists of this State, and with a number belonging to other States in regard to the true ground to be taken on this delicate subject, I became satisfied that there is none of the danger in the section which is apprehended by some gentlemen.

The principle of unmitigated individual liability is not the principle of the section. It is liability in proportion to stock—in proportion to ownership. I say, sir, that the more I have reflected on this principle the more it has commended itself to my mind as sound and just. Look at it, sir: if there are gains, these gains are in proportion to stock. If there are losses, why should not the losses be in the same proportion? Can any man answer? I confess, sir, I can not. If there are losses, somebody must lose. This is clear. Now, upon whom should the losses fall? Would it not seem to be most obviously just, that they should fall upon those who would be the gainers, if gain there should be in the enterprise, and precisely in the proportion of the gain? To make the loss fall upon those who cannot have any of the gains, seems to me not right. It is giving to men the power of winning without any risk of losing. In regard to the expediency of the principle, I hold that what is just is always expedient.

But, sir, I do not believe that this principle, if adopted, would have any other than the most salutary effects upon all joint efforts in the various improvements of the country. It might prevent some wild and headlong schemes which throw the losses, not upon their authors, but upon the innocent and unsuspecting.

Unlimited liability makes the stockholders liable for all debts. The limited liability of the section, as proposed by my friend from Greene, makes the liability, in case of loss, fall, not upon the public, but upon the stockholders; but still in proportion to their stock. The principle is a safe one—it is just. To do right is always safe; it is the highest expediency. Wild speculators and schemists always tell us, if they are not permitted to speculate and gamble at the risk of others, all enterprise will be destroyed, and the country will be ruined. Sir, we have but one thing to do in the case, and that is to prescribe the simple rule of justice.

While I say this for the principle, I must also say that I can never consent to lay a less liability upon banks than upon other corporate enterprises. There is every reason why higher responsibilities should rest upon moneyed institutions than upon other corporate enterprises. Why? Because moneyed capital can be more easily transferred than other capital. It more readily evades the creditor. Because, again, such institutions in the privilege of having their credits circulate as money, enjoy a great and extraordinary advantage.

Sir, I have known a man living in a palace, yes, sir, literally in a palace, with his ill-gotten wealth screened by the iron bar of corporate privileges; when the poor woman holding his paper, earned by the toil of the needle, could not with a five dollar bill buy a pound of coffee. One of the bills signed with his name, I have this moment in my pocket. I would hold him and his associates responsible to the last dime.

You have adopted the principle of liability for banks in the amount of the stock, and of still another amount equal to the stock. This is better than heretofore. It is something gained upon the "divine rights" of such institutions in behalf of common justice. It may, sir, be enough. In all ordinary cases I think it will be. But, let me tell gentlemen, that in England, even in aristocratic England, the idea of a joint stock company not being liable for the paper credits which they issue would be scouted. Such an exemption is unknown there. It is reserved for our land of equal rights to confer upon classes of men privileges and immunities which in no other country upon which the sun shines would they dare to claim. I rejoice, sir, that so much has been gained.

My chief object in rising was to say, that in regard to other corporations, those corporations designed for improving the country, for the promotion of education, for other great objects of common interest, I am willing to commit the amount of the personal liability and the mode of enforcing it to the Legislature, to be adapted to each particular class of corporations. That, sir, was my proposition in committee.

At the same time, I must say, while I feel no manner of anxiety for the fate of the reported section, I see in it none of "the hydras and chimeras dire" which some gentlemen have conjured up to their imagination from its adoption. I do not believe it would put a straw in the way of any honest enterprise in the country.

MR. BUTLER. I am a member of the committee on banking, and had the privilege of bringing forward the principle contained in this section. I believe the principle set forth in the section to be strictly correct. I am, Mr. President, for guarding the rights of the people, above everything else. This section was not hastily acted upon, but deliberately examined and the chairman of the committee hesitated longer in regard to it than any member of the committee; finally it was adopted unanimously. I trust the section will pass.

MR. FOSTER. I do not care how stringent this provision is made in regard to bank corporations, but I think that a distinction should be made between plank road and railroad corporations and banking companies. Without occupying further time, I would merely observe that I am opposed to the section, and hope it will be indefinitely postponed.

MR. NAVE said that he considered it true democracy to make stockholders liable for the amount of stock they hold in a company. He believed that fifty or more individuals who organized themselves together for the purpose of carrying on business, should be as responsible for the debts they contracted, as one man, or as a partnership composed of two or more individuals are responsible. He favored the section as reported by the committee.

MR. READ of Clark remarked that he was opposed to the passage of the section, because he considered that its adoption would cripple the enterprise and energy of capitalists in going forward with works of enterprise in the State. He would just tell gentlemen who advocated this measure, that if it was adopted there would not be another railroad or plank road built in Indiana. He hoped the section would be rejected.

MR. BASCOM moved the previous question.

The call having been seconded, the main question was ordered to be put.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wayne (Mr. Newnan) to the pending instructions, upon a division, yeas 60, noes 42, it was decided in the affirmative.

The question then being upon re-committing the section, with the instructions as amended,

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and, being taken, the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 69, nays 56:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Ballingall, Borden, Beach, Beard, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Bryant, Carr, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of D., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kilgore, Lockhart, Maguire, Mather, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Smith of Scott, Spann, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Watts, Wheeler, Wolfe, Zenor, and Mr. President—69.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Bracken, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Fisher, Gordon, Haddon, Hardin, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson of O., Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Logan, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Tague, Trimby, Walpole, Wiley, and Yocum—56.

So the section was re-committed with instructions.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The section in relation to the appointment of trustees for the town of Clarksville, was read a third time and passed.

The section providing for an enumeration of the inhabitants of the State every six years, was also read a third time and passed.

The section providing that the first session of the Legislature under the new Constitution shall be held under apportionment made this winter, was read a third time and passed.

The first three sections embraced in article 45, reported by the committee on education, were read a third time and passed.

The fourth section of the same article was then taken up for consideration.

It was read by the Secretary, as follows:

"SECTION 4. The Common School Fund shall consist of the Congressional Township Fund, and the lands belonging thereto;

"The Surplus Revenue Fund;

"The Saline Fund, and the lands belonging thereto;

"The Bank Tax Fund, and the fund arising from the one hundred and fourteenth section of the charter of the State Bank of Indiana;

"The fund to be derived from the sale of County Seminaries, and the moneys and property heretofore held for such Seminaries, the fines assessed for any breach of the penal laws of this State, and all forfeitures which may accrue;

"All lands and other estate, which shall escheat to this State, for want of heirs or kindred entitled to the inheritance;

"All lands that have been or may hereafter be granted to this State, where no special purpose is expressed in the grant, and the proceeds of the sales thereof;

"All corporation taxes that may be assessed by the General Assembly for common school purposes, as hereinafter provided;

"The several counties of this State shall be held liable for the preservation of so much of said funds, as may be entrusted to them, and the payment of the annual interest thereon."

Mr. WOLFE moved to re-commit the section with instructions to strike out the words, "the several counties of this State shall be held liable for the preservation of so much of the said funds as may be entrusted to them, and the payment of the annual interest thereon."

Mr. MORRISON of Washington expressed himself in favor of the section as it stood; believing that the funds entrusted to the counties should be duly taken care of; and that the only way to have them secured and applied to the purpose for which they were raised, was to make the counties responsible for them.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe said he thought the motion to re-commit with the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Sullivan ought to prevail; even though his argument might be, as the gentleman from Posey describes it, not a good one. The chairman of the committee on education had said that the money loaned in the counties belonged to the people of these counties, and was a sacred fund, and if it was lost they should be taxed to replace it. Now, (continued Mr. C.,) I understand it to be designed by the creation of a school fund to assist the people of the counties in the education of their children. The design is undoubtedly to promote education by the use and expenditure of the money in aiding parents to pay for the tuition of their children; not to collect a large fund for mere show, and call such policy a devotion to the cause of education. Well, sir, if the State, by bad laws, entrusts the loaning of these funds to unfaithful or ignorant officers, and if it is lost, the people in the county where such loss occurs, by the provisions of this section, are to be taxed to replace the fund so lost. I ask how this is to help the parent in such instances to educate his children? When you tax the people to replace this fund, you withdraw from them, to the amount of the tax, the means of providing for the education of their children. Why not levy the tax at once to maintain the school, instead of the roundabout method of replacing the fund, to distribute back to them the interest upon it? The money will be entrusted to the hands of other agents, and perhaps be lost again. Then a new tax is to be levied to supply the second loss.

The object to be attained is not to maintain the fund at the expense of the schools, but to make the fund aid in the support of schools. Our school laws have all been mere paper systems, impracticable and inoperative—contrived to make a great figure in the statute book, but so theoretical and expensive in practice, that the pretended assistance offered to parents, to aid in the purposes of education, has always cost more than the money so obtained was worth. Gentlemen talk eloquently about the sacred nature of this fund, the blessings of education, and the propriety of entering into these details by constitutional provisions, so as to secure the fund, and, in the usual phrase, to prove our devotion to the cause of education. Heretofore, the friends of education, as they called themselves, said the school fund was so sacred that it was right to loan it at 10 per cent., although individuals could receive but six. The result was the obvious and natural one; those who borrowed these funds were embarrassed or improvident, and consequently their lands were sold under the mortgages given to secure such loans. In other words, the money was lost. And, in the distribution of the interest of these funds, so many oaths and certificates were required, and so much labor to be performed in getting a pittance from each of the various funds, and no pay allowed the persons who finally distributed the money to support the school, that no good whatever was accomplished. It was hard to find anybody willing to undertake the difficult business of obtaining the distributive share of a school district, and without any compensation. I say, Mr. President, that in my judgment, if these funds had been heretofore scattered to the winds, as gentlemen seem to fear they will be, the people of the State would have been as well off in the matter of schools. If each district were required to levy a tax, and support a school, without all this parade of funds, the system might be so simplified that it could be carried out, and with far less expense than by the circuitous system of levying a tax to raise a fund to be loaned out, and then to distribute the interest back again to the people.

I have very little faith in the visionary schemes of projectors of any sort, and we are not without them in reference to schools. The real school is kept in little obscure districts, and the parents, or those who have care of the children to be taught, must provide the house and pay the teacher. The funds, (if any there be,) or the tax, ought to be brought to their aid and encouragement. Any contrivance by which the ability of the parent is diminished, (even though it be to create a sacred school fund,) so far operates as a discouragement and hindrance to the business of education, and therefore I hope we shall amend this section as proposed by the instructions to the committee.

Mr. WOLFE stated that he desired to have a vote upon the motion he had made, believing that to tax the people to replace a fund which might once have been squandered or lost, was unjust. He was in favor of having penalties attached for the punishment of any embezzlement that might be made of the funds, but he did not believe in taxing the people for any wrong which might be committed by the officers having charge of these funds.

Pending the question,

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention resumed the consideration of the fourth section of article forty-five, relating to the disposition of the common school fund. The pending question being a motion to re-commit, made by the gentleman from Sullivan (Mr. Wolfe) with instructions—

Mr. KILGORE. I move to amend the pending instructions by striking out and instructing the committee to add a section providing that the fines and forfeitures now constituting the seminary fund, shall in no case be applied to common school purposes, until all the debts of the seminaries heretofore contracted, shall be fully paid.

Mr. BRYANT. I hope this section will not be re-committed. The provisions which it contains are precisely those of the Revised Statutes, and which have been the law for years, and no one until now has ever made the slightest objection to them. The statute provides that the several counties of the State shall be responsible for the safe keeping of the Surplus Revenue and Congressional Township Funds, and for the payment of the annual interest thereon. I am astonished at the remarks of the gentleman from Sullivan, (Mr. Wolfe,) and the gentleman from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Clark). They speak of these school funds as of funds belonging to the present possessors, and in which posterity can have no interest; that if they are lost, it is our loss only. Sir, it is a sacred fund which belongs not merely to the present, but to all future generations. Every child which now is, or which may hereafter be born in the State, is interested in its preservation, it is a fund which belongs to the orphan and the friendless equally with those whom circumstances have rendered independent of it. Take away this responsibility from the counties to which you have entrusted this fund and what becomes of it? Where there is no responsibility there is no vigilance, and where there is no vigilance there is no security. I know of one case in my own county, where a loan of Surplus Revenue to the amount of three hundred dollars, had been secured by a mortgage on land, altogether insufficient to produce the amount. A knowledge of the fact, that by the statute, the county was responsible for the fund, induced the commissioners to take the necessary steps to secure the loan, which they did. Another case has occurred in my own county. A former school commissioner absconded with a large amount of school funds in his possession, and after the lapse of many years, and ineffectual attempts to recover the money from his securities, when many of them were dead or removed from the State, the people of Warren county, I believe a majority of the voters, petitioned the General Assembly to release them from any further liability as such securities. An act was passed at the last session of the General Assembly releasing them from their obligation. The Governor interposed his veto at the commencement of the present session, but the General Assembly, acting on the principle that the people of Warren county being ultimately responsible themselves, had a perfect right to determine this matter, passed the bill again by a constitutional majority, notwithstanding the objections of the Executive.

The people of Warren county have never been known to shrink from any responsibility belonging to them. Most of the petitioners knew of the legal effect of such release by the Legislature, and they have not asked, nor will they ask for any exemption from liability. When I call this educational fund a sacred fund, I speak as their representative—I do but give utterance to the sentiments which animate them. This is not the only case of the kind within my knowledge. A similar act was passed some years ago, releasing the securities of the school commissioners of Montgomery county, upon a similar petition. All the counties of the State have been entrusted with large amounts of this fund—a fund which belongs not to themselves, but which belongs to all time and generations, who are to succeed us, and of which we have merely the use. I am opposed, therefore, to any provisions which shall say to those having charge of this fund, this is your own fund, waste, squander, or destroy it, as you may, you shall be held to no accountability therefor. Another reason why I favor this section is, that at the expiration of the Charter of the State Bank, a very large portion of this fund heretofore employed in the Bank, will be seeking other investment. It may become necessary to deposit it with the counties. Are you prepared to say that they shall not be responsible for its safe keeping? The section applies to moneys which may hereafter be entrusted to them, it is not necessary so far as the funds heretofore placed in their charge are concerned. The law has already fixed and determined their responsibility for them, and even if you strike out this section, their liability for past losses will not be changed nor affected. I trust, therefore, that no re-commitment will be made, that no amendment diminishing the security which ought to be required, will be adopted, but that looking to the great interests of those who are to succeed us, we shall exact a strict accountability from those who have the management and use of these funds. It is a precaution which time and experience has sanctioned, and which ought not inconsiderately to be abandoned or omitted.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I trust this last amendment will prevail. I know that many of the members of this Convention, are cognizant of the fact that debts have been contracted and are now due in the form of seminary certificates which should be paid out of this seminary fund.

There can be no doubt as to the propriety of the provisions, and I trust it will prevail. There is no good reason why the proceeds arising from the sale of county seminaries, should be appropriated entirely to common schools, leaving the individuals engaged in erecting and repairing them to go unpaid for their labor.

Mr. CHAPMAN. The great difficulty in regard to this section, appears to consist in the sentence providing for a fund derived from "the sale of the County Seminaries." It seems to me that we can obviate that difficulty very easily, by leaving out that sentence entirely. We should thus leave the matter of adjusting private rights and claims to the Legislature, where it properly belongs. Probably, however, the Legislature will protect those rights, in any act which it may pass, even if we retain the sentence objected to by several gentlemen.

But, sir, I am inclined to vote against the whole section, whether it be amended as I have suggested, or not. I very much doubt the policy of seeming to recognize the propriety, as we shall appear to do by the specifications of this section, of perpetuating the present division of the school funds. I consider that division a great evil, and one which should be remedied if it be possible. While we continue the present mode, the evil will certainly predominate over the good. Can any good reason be given for continuing the division of the school moneys into a dozen different funds, to be scattered all over the State, and entrusted to the custody of an army of officers, whose fees and perquisites must necessarily consume a large part of the income of the various funds, if they be ever so well managed? The whole concern, as it has been heretofore managed, is to me utterly odious, in every respect. I detest the idea of establishing loan offices in every neighborhood of the State; for the purpose of either shaming the people for the support of schools, or of holding out inducements for them to run into debt improvidently.

I hope, therefore, that the section will not be adopted. But if it should be, I shall offer a section to this effect: That the Legislature shall have authority to consolidate, so far as may be legal and practicable, all the school funds, and invest the same, or the proceeds thereof, in the bonds of the State, constituting the State debt; the principal of the same to be placed to the credit of the general school fund, and the interest to be forever applied, equitably, to the support of common schools.

In this way, we can reduce the present complicated and improvident system to one safe, economical and profitable; and what is equally important, we can by this judicious arrangement, reduce the amount of our foreign debt some two or three millions of dollars. I consider this latter object, of quite as much immediate importance as any other which we can consider. But it seems to me that the Convention have hardly given it that degree of attention which it deserves. It is true that we have adopted the general sinking fund section, reported by the gentleman from Gibson (Mr. Hall,) and we have incidentally provided for a gradual recall of the bonds, under the general banking clause, if it should be carried into effect. But this is not as much as we ought to do, nor as much as we probably would do, if we could have time to deliberate carefully. At this late period of our labors, and under the great anxiety which is manifested by all, to close our session as soon as possible, I cannot hope for that kind of action in regard to the State debt, which I should desire to see. Yet we can and should do something. We have hardly begun to feel the full pressure of the debt as adjusted under the Butler Bill. But we shall feel it in 1853, when we shall be required to pay an interest annually abroad, exceeding $300,000 in hard cash. [Cries of "consent," and "that's right."]

It is chiefly with a view of bringing home our State bonds, while at the same time, we can by the same means, best secure and economically invest and administer our school funds, that I make these remarks. Our present system is extravagant and wasteful; the management of our school funds costing annually, one-third as much as that of the State government. The proposition which I offer, will avoid this extravagance—will be safe and profitable, so far as it affects the interests of common schools, or the common school fund, while at the same time, it will reduce our foreign debt to a considerable degree.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Delaware to the pending instructions.

MR. KILGORE. It may not be the case in the older counties, but in, perhaps, a majority of the new counties, where they have but recently finished their seminary buildings, a large indebtedness is hanging over those establishments, based upon the credit of the seminary funds, and if, by the new Constitution, they divert those funds entirely to school purposes the honest and hard working mechanics who constructed those buildings will have no means of coercing payment for their labors; no means, unless the county treasurer provides for their payment. The object of my amendment is to reserve the present seminary fund in each county until the debts hanging over those institutions are entirely extinguished.

The question having been put upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Delaware, it was decided in the negative.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is now upon the adoption of the instructions offered by the gentleman from Sullivan. The question was put and decided in the negative.

MR. SHOUP. I move the previous question.

The call for the previous question having been seconded by the members, the main question was ordered to be put.

THE PRESIDENT. The main question is Shall the section pass?

The yeas and nays were taken upon this question, under the rule, with the following result—yeas 112, nays 8.

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Bowers, Bracken, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer Hitt, Hogen, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Watts, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—112.

NAYS.—Messrs. Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Howe, Nave, Pettit, and Wiley—7.

So the section passed.

SUPERINTENDANT OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

The section providing for the election of a State Superintendent, to hold his office for six years, &c., was read a third time.

MR. MILLIGAN. I move, sir, to re-commit the section with instructions, to strike out and insert a provision for the election of county superintendents, whose duties shall be regulated by law, and that nothing shall prevent county auditors from acting as such superintendents.

MR. WALPOLE moved to lay the section and instructions upon the table.

A division of the question was called for.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion to lay the section and pending instructions upon the table.

Upon this section the yeas and nays were demanded, ordered, and taken, with the following result—yeas 33, nays 63:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Berry, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Duzan, Farrow, Foley, Frisbie, Gootie, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Hamilton, Hendricks, Hovey, Huff Johnson of D., Kendall of Wabash, Maguire, Mathis, McClelland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Nave, Pepper of Crawford, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Trimble, Wiley, Wolfe, Youcum, and Zenor—53.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Anthony, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Carr, Chenowith, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonson, Elliot, Fisher, Foster, Garvin, Gibson, Gregg, Hall, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Howe, Johnson of O., Kelso, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, May, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Prather, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schnoover, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smith of Scott, Steele, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, and Mr. President—73.

So the motion to lay upon the table was negatived.

THE PRESIDENT. The question will be now upon re-committing the section with the instructions offered by the gentleman from Jay, (Mr. Milligan). The motion to re-commit was lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the section pass?

Upon this question the rule requiring the yeas and nays was suspended, and the section passed.

SUPREME COURT.

The section relating to decisions of the Supreme Court was read a third time and passed.

TRUST FUNDS.

The section providing that trust funds shall not be diverted from the object for which the trust was created came up on its third reading.

Mr. ALLEN moved to re-commit, with instructions, providing that the State University fund may be diverted to the use of common schools, under authority of the Legislature.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President: The instructions offered does not contemplate, or involve any violation of public faith, but simply seeks to leave the matter in the hands of the Legislature, so they can, with the consent of Congress, divert the State University fund to the cause of common school education.

Sir, we are not asking, at this time, to take that fund from the State University and apply it to common schools, but we are asking the Convention to leave it in the power of the Legislature, with the consent of the general government to so appropriate it, if they shall deem it consistent with the best interests of the State. Now, sir, suppose that this State University should go down. Suppose that she could no longer get pupils, would not the necessity of her longer continuance cease? Yet, if you pass the section without the amendment which I have offered, it will be impossible for the Legislature, even with the consent of Congress, to divert that fund to any other purpose only that for which it was created by the general government.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. I desire to say, in reply to the argument of the gentleman from Carroll, (Mr. Allen,) that if he wishes to keep up an everlasting agitation in Indiana upon the subject of appropriating the funds and property of the University, the adoption of his amendment will secure that desirable object. This fund amounts to some sixty thousand dollars, and if divided among the counties of the State, hte proportion, would be but small; and, therefore, I think the best mode of action with regard to the fund, will be to reserve the fund sacred to the purpose Congress donated it. I do not think the matter should be left open for agitation, as its donation to any other purpose than to be used as a University fund. The people living near the site of this University have purchased lands and property there with the expectation of its being the permanent seat of that organization, and I think they are also entitled to be protected in their rights by the Legislature.

Mr. OWEN. In addition to what the gentleman from Jefferson has stated, I would remark that, as a matter of business, every one who has had any experience with such institutions must be aware that it is better that such an institution should be voted down at once, and done away with by the action of this Convention, than that it should be left in the precarious condition of being frustrated from year to year. Such a course will endanger its reputation, and its prosperity.

Mr. FOSTER. I consider that the donation of six thousand acres of land, appropriated exclusively for a University in this State, by Congress, shows very clearly that to devote the fund arising from the use of those lands to any other object than that contemplated by the donors, would be unjust. Notwithstanding all the discouragements that have hitherto beset the action of this institution, it has been attended with a prosperity entirely unexampled. We have not yet had the requisite means of a people going there. The roads conducting to it have not hitherto been easy of access; but there will soon be a railroad completed going right to the spot.

I need not remark that I am a conservative in principle, and a friend to vested rights, and that I consider this a right which should be strictly guarded, and in the maintenance of which the honor of the State is involved.

Mr. BASCOM. I hope this amendment may prevail. I desire that this matter should be left open to the action of the Legislature, so that the fund may not be expended in keeping a few professors in office, doing nothing. I am willing to sustain the institution so long as it performs its work aright. This amendment of the gentleman from Carroll proposes no change in vested rights; it simply provides for contingencies.

Mr. McCLELLAND. I am a friend to common schools, Mr. President, and consider that our government owes to every child in the land the education which should be given it, and I desire that all the spare money which we have should go to the support of common schools, and not of college seminaries. How is it, sir, with this University? Is it free to every child in the State? No, sir, it is only free to those children whose parents are able to pay their board at Bloomington? I hold, sir, that all schools endowed by the public—all sources of education should be within the reach of the meanest individual in the community as well as the wealthiest. The remark has been made that this fund is a vested right of many years standing; but if it has been in use so long for the purposes of the University, it appears to me it is high time that if the common school fund is entitled to any benefit from it, it should receive it at once.

It is also said that this fund is so small that it would amount to but a very small sum when distributed throughout the State. Now, as to the amount, it appears to me it makes no difference, in respect to the principle involved. It might as well be urged that, because this institution has had the use of sixty thousand dollars so long unmolested, that, therefore, it is entitled to several times that amount, properly belonging to the common school fund. Whether one dollar, or a million of dollars, the fund should be fairly distributed.

It is partially admitted that this fund should revert to the support of common schools, and I find that the Legislature has spent more time in quarrelling about it than it is worth; but if they have a right to appropriate it in aid of the common school fund, I want them to do it. I do not want the hands of the Legislature to be tied up, so that this fund shall be held in perpetuity. If the Legislature, with the consent of Congress, has the right to appropriate this fund to the support of common schools, let it be done.

It was remarked that this institution was in a flourishing condition; and so are other seminaries of learning in the State in a prosperous condition. But I do not want this institution to be kept up for foreign students, students coming from other States, when we have so many poor young men in our own State unable to pay their way so as to derive any benefit from this institution. If there must be a school fund kept up at the expense of the State, let it be for the benefit of all; let there be an equality and not an aristocracy of learning.

Mr. DOBSON. I should not now make a remark on this subject were it not for the fact that my course has been misunderstood by gentlemen, upon this subject. I have not been heretofore, nor am I now disposed to destroy the State University. I had supposed that the ordinance of '87, together with the propositions made by Congress to the people of the Indiana territory, 19th April, 1816, would be retained and published with the new Constitution, as they were with the old one. It is known that we entered as a State into several agreements with Congress, some of which we carried out in good faith, and others, with the consent of Congress, we departed from. They gave us the Salt Springs, together with a sufficient number of acres of land to work them, which have been diverted to another purpose. We have had five per cent. upon the sale of the public lands given to us, for which we agreed not to tax any land sold by Congress for five years; two townships were given for a seminary of learning; also, every sixteenth section was given to the townships, for common schools. The General Government gave us four sections of land on which to locate a seat of government; and, sir, I suppose that as all these propositions had been accepted by the Convention in 1816, and published with the old Constitution, though not a part of it, that they would be published as a matter of course, with the new Constitution, but not as a part of it, and would be binding upon the Legislature and upon Congress, as they were heretofore. If gentlemen will read the obligations we have put ourselves under to the General Government, they will see that there is no necessity for saying a word about the University in the Constitution, the act of Congress approved 19th April, 1816, having been accepted and agreed to by the Convention June 29, 1816, was binding upon both parties from that date, and we could not if we would, discharge ourselves from the obligations that that acceptance laid upon us. This question, in my opinion, should never have been raised here. I want the University to remain. I would not disturb it; and if I was in the Legislature I would not vote to divert a dollar of the fund to any other purpose whatever. I would cherish and encourage it.

Sir, I may be wrong, but my opinion is that there is no necessity for this provision in the Constitution. If I thought there was, I would vote for it.

Mr. READ of Monroe. I would be glad, Mr. President, to have the hearing of the House for a few moments, on the subject now before it. [Cries of "Go on! Go on! We will hear you."] I need not say that it is a subject of deep interest to a large portion of my constituents. Nay, sir, I think it is more; that the honor and interests of the State itself are involved in the question.

Here, sir, is a fund, not a single dollar of which the State of Indiana ever gave; a fund of which the State is the mere trustee, and in regard to which the State has but a single duty to perform; and that is, in all good faith to carry out the purposes of the trust in such manner as shall best subserve the great purposes for which it was created. It is now proposed in this body, with the sanction of Congress, to procure a diversion of the purposes of the trust, or else to leave the subject afloat for the agitation of every succeeding Legislature, and for political tricksters of the smallest class all over the State, to use as a hobby for gaining a seat in the Legislature. I hope, before sitting down, to show that fair dealing with our own citizens as well as the honor and interest of the State, equally require a faithful discharge of the trust according to the terms and uses designated in the original grant by Congress.

The section proposed by my friend from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit), and presented after consultation with myself, is designed to secure the fund arising from the sale of the two townships given by Congress for "the use of a seminary of learning," and now appropriated to the support of the Indiana University, to the sole and exclusive purpose for which it was granted; and not only this, to secure all other funds held by the State in trust in like manner to the purposes for which such trust was originally created, and as long as the Constitution shall last to foreclose all question or agitation for an unfaithful application of such funds. Let it be written broadly and boldly upon the Constitution, in direct terms, that the faith of the State is, in regard to these funds, to be preserved sacred and inviolate, that public faith is a part of the Constitution of Indiana.

Mr. President, I will say if you leave the question an open one, you may just as well destroy the University at once. If the question is with every recurring session of the Legislature to be brought forward, and there is to be a never-ceasing agitation as to the diversion and dispersion of the fund, better—far better—do the work at once; strike down, by the action of this Convention, the seminary which has so long existed among us; secure the assent of Congress, and disperse the fund over the State. The institution cannot flourish while there is uncertainty hanging over its very existence. No institution of learning can flourish under such circumstances. No competent man will remain in it as a Professor; nor, as chairs of instruction become vacant, will competent men come into it. Students will not resort to an institution the tenure of whose existence is uncertain and doubtful.

Why, sir, the law suit which has been pending in regard to the funds of the institution, has inflicted upon it the most serious injury. Let me show the effect in a single instance. The chair of mathematics and civil engineering became vacant; a correspondence was opened with Professor Ross, known as one of the most distinguished mathematicians of the country, since of the Free Academy in the city of New York. Well, sir, but for this unfortunate suit we should have had among us an instructor of our youth this gentleman, so eminent in his profession. Again: subsequently to this Professor McCartney, another distinguished mathematician, and who is the author of the well known work on the application of the calculus to geometry, was by the Board of Trustees elected to the chair, and signified his acceptance of the place; but on learning that a suit was pending involving the whole endowment of the University, he promptly declined the place. Stability and uniformity of policy are essential to the prosperity of any institution of learning, and without them any such institution will dwindle and die out.

But the gentleman from Owen (Mr. Dobson) supposes the fund already sufficiently secure, that there are existing guaranties in our compact with the General Government which will secure its faithful application. Does not that gentleman know that, on this very day, the question is pending across the street in the Capitol, whether Congress shall be memorialized for permission to divert the fund to common schools, and are we not now here in this body debating the same question? If left open, the agitation will be kept up to the ruin of the institution. In my judgment, upon the decision of the question on the section proposed by the gentleman from Tippecanoe, depends the question of the continuance of the University.

It has, sir, been a matter of amazement to me, that this small fund, amounting to some four thousand dollars a year—a fund not raised by taxation—not borrowed upon the credit of the State—but a gift—a mere gift for a specific purpose, and a fund most usefully and beneficially employed—should seem to some politicians a subject of more serious import than the millions squandered, and for which the people are paying taxes. Sir, the influences and considerations which produce this state of things are beyond my power of comprehension or understanding.

The gentleman from Carroll (Mr. Allen) asks, with an air of triumph, what would be done with the fund if tied up by this section, in case the University should go down? I might just as well ask him, what would be done with the common school fund, in case common schools should go down? The presumption, sir, is, unless civilization should be blotted out, that both common schools and higher institutions of education will continue to exist; and I trust the Convention will hardly deem it necessary to provide for the contingency, when they shall cease.

Sir, I hope my own position and relations will not, in the estimation of any member of the Convention, render it improper for me to refer to the condition of the University. What, then, have been the results of this fund, as actually applied in times past? You have an institution of learning, with suitable buildings, organized with different departments of instruction, with an annual average number of students, during the seven years past, of one hundred and eighty. Of these, the number of sixty, from different counties, receive their tuition free of all charges.

The several departments of the University are those of law, moral philosophy, of chemistry and natural philosophy, of mathematics and civil engineering, of languages, and a department for the general preparation of students for the other departments. With an accurate knowledge of the standard of education in most of the higher institutions of learning in the United States, I say with entire confidence, that, in your own University, your sons may obtain as complete an education as anywhere else in the country. To the gentleman from Owen (Mr. Dobson) I might say, that a young man from his own county, in the institution, not a year since, (now, alas! no more,) I would have been proud to compare, in every department of scholarship, with any young man in any college in the whole country—East or West.

In this Convention, sir—in each of the two Houses now sitting in the Capitol—you find those who have received their education in the University. You cannot go into any body of men, whether professional, political, or literary, in this State, in which you will not find the sons of your University. Young men of genius and ambition, struggling with poverty, through its provisions have obtained all the advantages of education which wealth can bestow. The rich can send their sons to distant institutions. Not so with the poor and those of moderate means. They must have institutions near at hand, or be excluded from their advantages.

The institution, with more ample means, doubtless might have accomplished more. But when I consider its actual means, and look at the results, I am astonished; and still more so, when I compare it with those colleges which fill the land with the fame of their glory.

But, Mr. President, there is still another view. Is nothing due to your own citizens, who bought the seminary lands, after the site of the seminary had fixed upon one of the townships, and fixed there for the avowed purpose of increasing the price of the lands, and thereby increasing the fund? After this has been done, and the funds have been by these means made what they are, is it fair and honorable—is it just and honest—to scatter the fund, and deprive the people of an institution who were, under these circumstances, drawn around it?

And, sir, let me ask, what great public good is proposed by this measure? You strike a death blow at one of your towns, which has grown up with boarding houses and other accommodations adapted to the institution; you disappoint the just expectations of those who have bought property and gathered around the University for the sake of its benefits; you violate that which, if not forming a part of the contract, was, in the price of the lands, a consideration in the contemplation of both parties. For all this, what do you gain? Why, sir, with the now existing population, you actually distribute to each child one cent per annum toward educating him in a common school!

But gentlemen say, let some denomination buy out the University property at Bloomington. The buildings are there, and the people will be equally benefited. First of all, I ask, what denomination wants it? There must be two parties in the operation of buying and selling. How much could be had for all the property compared with cost? The merest song. Besides, while the process of diverting the funds, of selling out, &c., is going on, the institution is broken down, its students and professors are dispersed, and every man, who knows anything on these subjects, knows that it is an easier work to build up two new colleges than to resuscitate one old one. Break down the University, and were I an agent for a religious denomination, I would not receive as a gift the University property, and undertake to build up a college upon its ruins. The history of numerous institutions shows the truth of this statement; and, did time permit, I could easily show the philosophy of it.

But, sir, the idea prevails to some extent in our State, that all colleges ought to be under the control and patronage of particular churches. No man ever heard me utter a syllable against the noble and persevering efforts of some of our religious denominations in building up institutions of education. I honor them for these efforts. This is a broad land. There is room and work for all. Besides, the State University—not claimed as its own by any denomination—is needed to fill precisely the ground which it occupies. But for it, there is a class of young men, who would either go out of the State, or not enter any public institution.

I feel quite sure that could I have the suffrage of all the colleges in the State to present to this body, it would be that the State University has a work to perform which is needed in the field of education in Indiana.

I must also say, that those great institutions which form not only the pride of their respective States, but a part of the glory of our nation, such as Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Union, Columbia, &c., do not belong to any particular religious denomination. If at any time, the professors in these institutions, or in any of them, shall be of one particular denomination, (and they seldom are so,) that circumstance no more makes the institution denominational, than our Supreme Judges, happening to be of a given denomination, would make the Supreme Court denominational. In our best known and most celebrated American colleges, no synod, council, or other ecclesiastical body, has any right of interference or control whatever. No denomination can claim them. I do not, therefore, assent, that denominational control is an essential element of prosperity in colleges. Such a conclusion I do not think is warranted by the history of American colleges.

But, Mr. President, when you shall have added the swamp lands to the other lands given for common schools, the donation of government lands for the great purpose of common school education will amount to considerably over two millions of acres. Of this immense gift, it has not been sought to take a dollar for institutions of higher education. Well, sir, where Congress has given for the specific purpose of a seminary, such as has been established with the gift, shall we be the first American State, disregarding all the considerations of fidelity in the performance of a trust—disregarding the just claims of our own citizens, without thereby accomplishing any public good worth the name—shall we, I ask, as a State, in the reckless spirit of tearing down our existing institutions, proceed to destroy the University and take away its funds? Our votes must answer.

Mr. HAMILTON. I desire to know from the gentleman from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit,) whether it is his opinion that in voting for this section as it stands, I am voting to make the State pay back such portion of this University fund as it may have used; if so, I shall vote against it.

Mr. PETTIT. The State has already squandered a large portion of it, I trust I may be permitted to say sir, that the State has wantonly put her hands upon one of the trust funds which she plighted her faith to secure, and if I should properly express myself, I would say that she had brought a deep stain upon her honor as a State. I deeply regret to hear that any such thing has been done. The best thing the State can do is to tax our people for the re-imbursement of this squandered money and regain her honor. I do not know whether this section goes so far as to provide for this amount so unjustly diverted from its legitimate object, or not. This may be the case, however.

I would remark, further, Mr. President, that I consider it the bounden duty of the State to guard sacredly the trusts confided to her charge. Whenever a nation or a State so far forgets herself as to begin to waver in and shrink from the faithful discharge of its public duties—and that course is continued—then ultimately must that nation or State sink into utter nothingness, and become an object of scorn in the great family of nations.

I would not care, sir, whether this college fund was to remain a perpetuity for a thousand years; the General Government gave it to us for a good and a particular purpose, and our reputation and honor as a State imperatively demand that we should carry out the purpose of the trust—having accepted it in the manner we did—without any hesitation whatever.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. President: I am perfectly satisfied that the framers of our present Constitution, when they penned the section which has just been read by the gentleman from Owen, (Mr. Dobson,) had the true idea of a proper system of popular education. They were far in advance of many in this Convention who claim to be the friends of common schools, and who attempt to manifest their friendship for them, by open hostility to every institution of learning, other than common schools. Those who framed that Constitution provided for a general system, ascending in regular gradation from township schools to a State University; and in that provision they gave us the germ of a perfect system.

I am surprised to hear from the gentleman from Randolph (Mr. McClelland) that he wants nothing but common schools—that he is opposed to high schools, and low schools, and all schools except common schools. Many who profess, and honestly I have no doubt, to be the friends of common school education, have no other idea than that of voting money to them; they would sell all your colleges, all your academies, and pay the proceeds into the common school fund. Sir, it will be a long time before any efficient system of education is established by these gentlemen. You might as well attempt to establish a planetary system, without a sun and centre, as to expect that the lower grades of education can flourish, whilst the higher are neglected, or discarded. Sir, without your colleges, and higher schools, your common schools would be worse than worthless; and if gentlemen would give as much of their time and attention to this subject as I have done for the last five years, they will repudiate the heresies which they now thrust before as orthodox truth. It is not money we want for the support of common schools, so much as a proper system.

I appeal to the experience of every member of this Convention, and I ask them if the defect in our system does not consist more in want of competent teachers than in a deficiency of means. (Applause.) The State of New York, and Massachusetts, and Connecticut, now prominent as educational and intelligent States, after passing through the same process of ill advised expenditure upon a defective system of education, have, by long and costly experience, approached the true system. In the former State there is an annual expenditure of ten thousand dollars for normal schools, in which well educated and qualified teachers may be prepared for service in their common schools. Without well trained teachers, what would their model system be worth? Without them what is our system worth in its practical operations. What is the character of your teachers? Some of them are young men, of respectable attainments, who have ulterior objects in view, and who will teach one or two terms, until their present necessities are supplied, and then abandon your schools; but the large majority of them ought to be seized by the public authorities and sent to school themselves.

The school examiners of the counties are frequently censured because they give certificates to those who are not properly qualified, but they are compelled, many times, to authorize the employment of teachers who do not possess the proper qualifications, or have your common schools abandoned altogether. Can it be expected that any common school system will flourish under such an arrangement as this! Surely not. We want professional teachers; men, every way fitted and qualified for their responsible duty, and devoted to it. And, yet, how hard it is to convince men, even the enlightend members of this Convention, that with our present system, we are engaged in a profligate expenditure of the public funds, without any beneficial results, and in defiance of all the lessons of experience, continuing that system from year to year. I fear that the subject does not enlist sufficient interest, either in the General Assembly, or in this Convention. It surely is an important one; one which should engage the attention of every man upon this floor, and the best talent of the State; and I am persuaded that those who now manifest such undisguised hostility to every thing like a well regulated system, would be entirely open to conviction if they would only consent to investigate. Year after year we have had addresses prepared by individuals interested in this subject, printed at private expense, and laid upon the tables of the members of the Legislature. We have had them here, during our session; who reads them? Every body is a friend to common schools in general, and few care anything about the particulars. Sir, if we could have calm and deliberate examination of this whole subject, instead of the restlessness, and impatience, which is too apparent whenever it is approached, we should soon have a different order of things. We must have higher schools in our State for the training of teachers. That we have not, constitutes the principle difficulty which we have to encounter.

I know there is a society in existence which has for its object the supplying of our schools with teachers from abroad. As a temporary expedient it may subserve a useful purpose, but as a system it will fail. We must have teachers of our own people; acquainted with our habits and peculiarities, and those of our children. The materials are abundant, if we will only employ them. Admitting that our University has not been, in times past, as efficient an ally of our common schools as it might, and ought to have been, furnishes no reason, whatever, for its abolition; it is rather an evidence of the very superficial attention that has been bestowed upon our educational affairs, and that we have neglected making it what it should be. The fact that people are demanding the abolition of our county seminaries, and the diversion of their funds to the common schools, establishes no such position as has been taken in this debate. It is not because the people are opposed to seminaries, but because the county establishments have been unprofitable. They never were properly endowed—never were made efficient for the purposes for which they were intended, and have degenerated into mere district schools for the county seats; but the people themselves, who call for their abolition, are erecting academies and seminaries from their own means, all over the State, thus furnishing the most indubitable evidence that they properly appreciate their value. The increase of these institutions should be encouraged, and those which have been established assisted by a judicious application of the public funds. Give us normal schools, well regulated academies, and school district libraries, in aid of our common school operations, and the people of the State will not long complain of the inefficiency of our system. We cannot afford, in the present condition of our State, a very large appropriation from the treasury for normal schools, but there is no reason why the University Fund may not be made to subserve this great object. With the adjuncts which I have named, we can educate the children of the State, and we stand more in need of them than of money. It was to carry out this view that the committee reported the action laid upon the table yesterday, whereby ample power would be given to the Legislature to establish schools for the training of teachers.

I know that this subject has been treated, both in the Legislature and in this Convention, as a matter of minor importance, but it is as vital an interest as any that has been brought to the notice of this body. Sir, we do not realize the true condition of our State, in regard to education. What is it? In 1840, by the census then taken, this State, which we boast of here, as being the fifth State in the Union, in size and population, was clearly proven to be the most ignorant of all the free States, and far, very far, behind many of the slave States. We had then thirty-eight thousand one hundred persons over the age of twenty years, who could neither read nor write. The friends of education were startled into action, they assembled in Conventions at our State Capital, and declared that it was our true policy to adopt some system of general education in accordance with that marked out by the framers of our present Constitution, and that then we should have an efficient system. The subject was agitated among the people, and in the Legislature, a bill was passed through the House of Representatives, and defeated in the Senate. The question was submitted to the people, whether they would have free schools or not. They responded in the affirmative by a majority of about sixteen thousand in the State. The next House of Representatives passed a bill establishing a system of free schools with a limited tax, the Senate referred that to the people, by a provision that the law should only operate in such counties as should by a popular vote adopt it. It was adopted by more than sixty counties, with an average majority in the State, of about seventeen thousand, exhibiting the fact that the people were far in advance on this subject, of many of those who had aspired to represent them. One would suppose that with this state of feeling among the people we were steadily if not rapidly increasing in intelligence. I awaited the taking of the census in 1850, with much anxiety, to ascertain what the measure of our progress was. We know now what our condition is, and it is proper that this Convention should know and ponder upon it. Sir, we have forty thousand voters in our State, who cannot read the ballots which they use. (Marked sensation.) Yes, sir, and thirty thousand mothers who are rearing our successors and destitute of the very first elements of education. We have, sir, according to the late census, (extracts from which I hold in my hand,) seventy-three thousand two hundred and ninety-nine persons over the age of twenty years, who cannot read and write. This paper shows fully the condition of the State:

Counties.	Attended School.	Over twenty years of age & cannot read & write.	Population of the County.
Adams,	1071	161	5,774
Allen,	no return
Bartholomew,	2758	1125	12,852

Benton,	326	96	1,144
Blackford,	610	155	2,864
Boone,	3341	828	11,629
Brown,	824	879	4,846
Carroll,	2706	1009	11,025
Cass,	2222	117	10,922
Clark,	2920	977	15,836
Clay,	1023	382	8,134
Clinton,	2468	1032	11,871
Crawford,	1057	905	6,318
Daviess,	1124	1173	10,354
Dearborn,	4938	1317	20,165
Decatur,	3861	1288	15,100
DeKalb,	1980	605	8,257
Delaware,	2384	1009	10,976
Dubois,	572	452	6,230
Elkhart,	3181	1070	12,903
Fayette,	3028	549	10,140
Floyd,	2580	1022	14,876
Fountain,	3790	1457	13,260
Franklin,	4301	422	17,914
Fulton,	1401	487	5,864
Gibson,	2451	1343	10,782
Grant,	3709	1238	11,092
Greene,	2246	1513	12,247
Hamilton,	2700	1422	12,686
Hancock,	2445	646	9,714
Harrison,	1990	88	15,538
Hendricks,	3236	1333	14,077
Henry,	4987	1218	17,668
Howard,	1151	157	6,567
Huntington,	1257	583	7,850
Jackson,	2174	1494	11,030
Jasper,	932	191	3,424
Jay,	1870	422	7,051
Jefferson,	4366	1533	23,931
Jennings,	2570	562	12,541
Johnson,	2836	496	12,228
Knox,	2199	814	11,086
Kosciusko,	2455	1105	10,243
Lagrange,	2287	134	8,424
Lake,	1051	130	3,991
Laporte,	5755	613	12,169
Lawrence,	1457	1135	12,210
Madison,	2762	1135	12,497
Marion,	4332	999	24,289
Marshall,	1025	416	5,348
Martin,	644	1131	5,955
Miami,	2648	1131	11,349
Monroe,	2509	1000	11,283
Montgomery,	4881	1233	18,227
Morgan,	3406	1362	14,654
Noble,	1888	371	7,948
Ohio,	979	37	5,310
Orange,	2791	1468	10,818
Owen,	2636	1126	12,040
Parke,	3377	1104	15,049
Perry,	929	1101	7,251
Pike,	875	1101	8,599
Poter,	1418	264	5,250
Posey,	2543	1469	12,367
Pulaski,	455	173	2,595
Putnam,	5123	2134	18,612
Randolph,	3646	453	14,694

Ripley,	3572	2075	14,822
Rush,	4611	1600	16,445
Scott,	1565	900	5,889
Shelby,	2135	1985	15,446
Spencer,	1260	1021	8,664
Stauben,	1689	761	6,107
St. Joseph,	3142	278	10,955
Sullivan,	1269	755	10,163
Switzerland,	3410	126	12,953
Starke,	55	88	558
Tippecanoe,	4184	547	19,269
Tipton,	558	467	3,534
Union,	1678	97	6,881
Vanderburgh,	1720	147	11,415
Vermillion,	2163	718	8,601
Vigo,	3618	1709	14,693
Wabash,	3090	822	12,109
Warren,	1995	284	7,423
Warrick,	2126	343	8,822
Washington,	3759	1292	17,088
Wayne,	5285	1065	25,900
Wells,	1487	590	6,152
White,	1211	421	4,760
Whitley,	1278	331	5,190
	216,682	73,299	975,877

If the present Constitution be correct in asserting that "knowledge and learning generally diffused through a community, (is) essential to the preservation of a free government," what have we a right to expect from the state and condition of learning among us? An impression seems to be general that we have done a great deal for education in the State of Indiana. This arises, in part, from the fact that it always makes a prominent item in the stump speeches that are annually made. Many prophesy in its name, and teach upon our streets and cross roads, and are great and devoted friends of common schools just before an election, but with all our professions, what have we done? I can sum it all up in a few words. We have received from the United States the Congressional Township Fund, the University Fund, the Surplus Revenue Fund, the Saline Fund, and by a tax upon the State Bank for school purposes, we have collected from two to three thousand dollars a year to be distributed among ninety-one counties, the highest sum to any one county eighty-one dollars thirty-six cents, the lowest, three dollars seventy cents. Not a dollar, sir, from the State Treasury for any educational purpose. We have been the passive recipients of the bounty of the United States, and have by our neglect and mismanagement wasted thousands of dollars of the principal of this bounty, whilst we have applied without system, and to very little purpose the interest which has accrued upon it. If posterity does not look upon us with surprise and indignation, it will be because by our own neglect we have plunged them so deeply in ignorance, that they cannot appreciate the duty which belonged to us, and which we have not discharged. Under these circumstances we should pause and seriously consider every section of this article, before we either adopt or reject it. I am persuaded that if the members of the Convention will give to the particular section now under consideration, the calm, yet earnest attention which it should receive, they will not be found changing the direction of this University Fund and applying it to the common schools. To strike out this section and divert the fund from the legitimate object of its donation by Congress, is to strike at the very root of the system which the friends of education desire to have adopted. Those who hope to assist common schools by the abolition of colleges, are mistaken—sadly mistaken. Let me state a fact. I reside in a school district which numbers perhaps one hundred and thirty children of the age prescribed by law for pupils of the public schools. Last winter we had application after application from those professing to be teachers, for our school, but totally unqualified to take charge of it. For a long time we were in doubt whether we should embrace the one or the other alternative, of having no school at all or employing a teacher whom our judgment did not approve. In this extremity, it occurred to me to call for assistance from the nearest college. I accordingly addressed a letter to Professor Hovey, of Wabash College, stating our situation, and requesting that if possible, one of their students might be sent to our assistance. That gentleman, with a promptness for which our people are much indebted to him, immediately sent to us a member of the junior class of the College, without whose services we should have been destitute of any efficient school during the entire winter. This circumstance illustrates the connection which subsists between colleges and common schools; they are all parts of the same great system, acting harmoniously together, and all assisting in the accomplishment of the same great purpose. Let us cast aside any prejudices we may have in this matter, and let those who profess to be the friends of common schools be persuaded that without schools for the education of teachers, any system they can devise will be worse than worthless. I trust that the section, which has received the full investigation and sanction of the committee on education, may yet be taken from the table and adopted without further opposition.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. PRESIDENT: The gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit) mistakes the question. He argues the question as though the instructions which I have offered, contemplate a violation of good faith on the part of the State towards the General Government. Sir, it contemplates no such thing; and if the gentleman will take the pains to examine it for one moment, he will see that he is mistaken; for the very language of the instruction is, that the Legislature, with the consent of Congress, shall have the power to divert that fund to common school education. Now, sir, does this amendment contemplate any violation of good faith on the part of the State towards the General Government? Then it seems to me that all this great blow of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, about violated faith and broken contracts amounts to nothing. He says that the State would be disgraced. Now, sir, suppose that the Legislature of this State should believe that this fund was doing no good where it now is, and suppose that the General Government and the State should mutually agree to divert this fund from the State University, and appropriate it to common school education: I ask if there would be any great disgrace in this? or if there would be any contracts broken or faith violated?

The gentleman from Warren (Mr. Bryant) says, that it is necessary to have a State University, to act as a great centre, around which the smaller institutions could revolve; so that we could educate our common school teachers. I ask him if this State University is such an institution as he so vividly portrays in his able speech? I ask him, where are the common school teachers that it has furnished the State? Where are the great benefits that we have received from this boasted and pampered University? I, sir, have lived in the State all my life, and I have yet to see the first benefit which we have derived from that University. The gentleman asks where we are to get our common school teachers, if we do not have a State University? Sir, I can only say to the gentleman, that, unless this State University does better in future than it has heretofore, that we shall never get them there. Sir, look around and see which are the most flourishing colleges in this State. Is the State University one of them? No, sir, they are those that have been established and put into successful operation, unaided by public donations, or government appropriations. But, sir, I am not disposed to make war upon the State University, nor does the amendment which I have offered, do any such thing. I only ask this Convention to leave the matter where it has ever been since the organization of our State Government.

The gentleman from Warren (Mr. Bryant) says that we have some seventy thousand persons in the State of Indiana, over the age of twenty-one years, who can neither read nor write. Sir, I think that this is a very strong argument in favor of common schools, and perhaps if this University fund had been appropriated to the support of common schools, that the number who can neither read nor write would have been much less than it now is. Sir, it was for the purpose of giving to the cause of common schools every support that is consistent with justice and honesty, that I introduced this amendment. Sir, if there is any cause that should call to its aid the universal sympathies and unflinching support of this people, it is the cause of common schools. We should cherish it as one of the strongest safeguards of human freedom; we should encourage it by every legitimate means in our possession; and we should not stay our efforts until we shall have placed within the reach of every child within the State, poor or rich, the means of a common school education. When we have done this, we shall have accomplished more for the cause humanity, more for the safety of our free institutions, more for the permanence and security of society, than by any other act of legislation which we could adopt. And, sir, it was for the purpose of securing to common school education, with the consent of Congress, the benefit of this University fund, in the event that it could not be profitably used in its present situation, that induced me to offer this amendment. For, sir, if this section is adopted without this amendment, the door will be forever closed, and the fund will have to remain where it is for all time to come, whether it is of any value or profit to the State or not. I do hope, Mr. President, that this amendment will be adopted. It will then leave the fund where it always has been since the donation was made. By doing so we surely cannot injure the University so long as it continues to be of any importance to the State; and when it ceases to be of any utility, the fund by which it is supported should be taken away from it and applied where we know that it would be of the greatest importance and where it would accomplish the object for which it was donated. Sir, I have heard many loud professions in favor of the cause of common schools by gentlemen upon this floor, and I do hope that they will now come forward and show by their votes that those professions were real.

Mr. STEELE. I cannot see, for my part, what the gentleman from Carrol (Mr. Allen) means by this trade he talks so much about. It appears to me there can be but one side to it, and that is, that by it this University will be robbed of her funds for the benefit of the common schools. In my plain way, allow me to illustrate the case. My father gives, for instance, two of us, his sons, a cloak apiece, and yet proceeds, very soon thereafter, to take that cloak from me, and gives it to my brother, leaving me destitute of necessary protection against the inclemencies of the weather. Sir, it is proposed to deprive this University, in like manner, of a fund necessary to its support, and give it to the common schools. It astonishes me that this fact is not apparent to every member of this Convention, that this will be the result of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Carrol. I think, sir, it is as necessary that we should have universities and a higher order of schools in Indiana, as it is to have common schools. Would to God that sources of education had been so common in my youth as that I could have had access to a State Seminary or University; then, instead of being able to defend the interest of my countrymen with only a pocket pistol of learning, I should have been able to vindicate their rights in the thunder tones of a brass piece, as is the case with the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettitt). [Laughter and applause.] I desire, for one, to see the higher grade of schools flourish as well as the common schools.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I call for the previous question.

The call having been seconded by the Convention, the main question was ordered to be put.

The PRESIDENT. The first question is upon re-committing the section, with the instructions of the gentleman from Carroll.

On this question the yeas and nays were demanded, ordered, and taken, with the following result—yeas 58, nays 64.

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Ballingall, Pascom, Beard, Beeson, Bowers, Bracken, Butler, Coats, Cookerly, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Garvin, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Hamilton, Helms, Helmer, Hitt, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Logan, Mathis, McClelland, Nave, Prather, Read of Clark, Shoup, Sims, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Trimby, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Zenor—58.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Barbour, Beach, Berry, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Chenoweth, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hendricks, Hovey, Howe, Kinley, Lockhart, Maguire, May, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Smiley, Snook, Steele, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Zenor, and Mr. President—64.

So the section was not re-committed.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the section pass?

The yeas and nays on this question were taken, under the rule, with the following result—yeas 73, nays 48:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Beach, Berry, Biddle, Blythe, Brookbank, Bryant, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Elliott, Foster, Gibson, Gordon, Haddon, Hawkins, Hendricks, Hogan, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Kinley, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mather, May, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, and Mr. President—73.

NAYS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Bowers, Bracken, Butler, Coats, Cookerly, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Hamilton, Helms, Helmer, Hitt, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Logan, Mathis, McClelland, Nave, Prather, Read of Clark, Shoup, Sims, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Trimby, Wheeler, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Zenor—48.

So the section passed.

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

REMARKS OF DR. SHERROD,

In Convention, Jan. 13, on the subject of Banks.

The pending question being on the reference to a select committee, with instructions,

Mr. SHERROD. Mr. President: I do not rise for the purpose of inflicting a lengthy speech upon the House. It is not my intention, sir, to argue the question now under consideration at length, but simply to ask the indulgence of the Convention while I define my position.

I am well satisfied, in my own mind, that no more important question will be presented to the consideration of this Convention, than the one now under consideration. Equally important ones may be presented for the consideration of this House, but none more important—none more vital for the preservation of liberty itself.

And, sir, I speak but the sentiments of my heart when I say that I have never before felt the responsibility that I now feel. One among the youngest members upon this floor, I find myself engaged, not in the passage of laws—not in that action which we can do to-day and undo to-morrow, but, sir, in that important and sacred work of laying the foundation upon which the prosperity and perpetuity of this great and growing commonwealth depends, and under which we, and our children, at least, must live.

And, sir, when I come to consider, for a moment, that one false step in the building up of this great work, may bring upon those who sent us here misfortune, ruin, and desolation; sir, how important the trust—how fearful the responsibility. What diligent inquiry—what serious consideration—what high and stern principles it demands of those who would discharge it aright. Sectional feeling, or favoritism should have no place here. The low, vulgar, and malignant character of the partizan, and factionist, should be merged into that of the representative and the patriot. Nothing should be done in the vile and violent spirit of mere prejudice—nothing in hot zeal—nothing under the paralyzing influence of conservative fear. What is best for the whole nation—how shall we best promote the interests of the masses—how best attain a perfect equilibrium of liberty and order, should be the questions in the heart of every honorable gentleman upon this floor.

Sir, it has been justly remarked that that Constitution which represents and protects the interests of all classes of the people is the best.

Then, sir, the question naturally arises, will the adoption of a creative clause in the Constitution, establishing either a State Bank, or a general banking law, upon the principles proposed here, accomplish this end. I answer no, sir, no. I have been an attentive listener for the last ten days, to the debate upon this question, and I may justly say that we have had speeches of all dimensions, blended with what I consider very strange and novel doctrine. Now, sir, I do not pretend to say what has been the effect of these speeches upon the minds of honorable gentlemen who have been attentive listeners; I can only speak for myself, and I must say, sir, that if I were to believe all the strange and extreme dogmas that have been urged here, I should begin to despair of the result of the deliberations of this Convention—I should begin to despair of the Constitution and the republic—I should begin to think with the wag in the old story book, that "God Almighty's great creation of men down here upon this globe was going to prove a magnificent failure." [Laughter.]

I am opposed sir, to adopting any creative clause in the Constitution. I am willing, however, to sanction, by my vote, a well regulated, restrictive clause, leaving the creative power in the hands of the people. Here, sir, is a proposition that meets my approbation, which I will read: "The Legislature shall not have the power to create, authorize, or incorporate, by any general, or special law, any bank, or banking power, or privilege, or any institution, or corporation, having any banking power, or privilege, whatever, unless previously submitted to, and approved by a direct vote of the electors of the State." Thus far I go, and no farther. I believe it to be the safe and true ground, and I am confident that it will meet with the approbation of the great mass of the people. It would give them the privilege of deciding for themselves, for or against banking. So far as my individual feelings and opinions are concerned, I stand here, sir, the uncompromising enemy to all banks. I care not by what name you call them, whether it be State Banks, or free banks. I regard the whole system of banking as a monopoly, by which the few amass prodigious fortunes at the expense and toil of the laboring millions. I believe, sir, that a popular hurricane, that would sweep from the face of the earth the well dressed paupers, who live in luxury and idleness, without ever having earned a dollar in their lives—a political earth quake that would engulf the whole of our paper money shaving shops, would be the richest blessing that could be bestowed upon this highly favored land. It would unhelotize honest industry, it would raise equal liberty out of the dust and degradation into which she has been trampled by the iron heel of privileged fraud. And, sir, I have the whole history of the country to bear me out in this declaration. History is philosophy, teaching, by example, and I ask, sir, what is the lesson that we learn from the past history of the banking system? Alas! a sad and impressive lesson, and one that we should learn and profit by. Go back, sir, if you please, and trace up the history of banking—its effects and tendencies upon the property of the country. Let us ask ourselves what portion of the community it is that have been benefitted by the operation of the banking system? Has it been the toiling millions, who are the prop and stay of this government? No, sir, they have been the sufferers, on all occasions; whether amid the excitement of bank speculation, when the country is flushed with a paper circulation, or at a time when specie payment is suspended. And let me ask, sir, who it was that suffered from the operations of that bantling of the banks—that legitimate child of the extra session of Congress, 1841—that odious bankrupt law, that went down to an early grave, unpitied, unwept, unsung, unless, indeed, its long train of beneficiaries chaunted its funeral dirge. Sir, it was the laboring classes—the farmer and mechanic, that were robbed of their hard earnings, those who make their living by the sweat of their brow. But, says one, we must have banks in order to make money plenty. Sir, when do they make money plenty? In seasons of scarcity, or when money is abundant? To whom do they make money plenty—to the community at large, or to those, alone, who obtain the exclusive privilege of manufacturing it. Sir, who ever heard of banks making money plenty during a panic—a pressure when assistance is most needed?

These institutions are said to be incorporated and established for the "public good." Let there be a scarcity, and where is the philanthropy, the sympathy, of these patriotic institutions then? They are so far above the people, that they hear not the cries of distress—they stand aloof—they can only hear the pressing calls of the directors, and their pets and favorites. The whole capital, then, becomes monopolized by some six or eight of their favorites, and no one else can obtain a dollar. Enormous accommodations are made to their favorites, with which to speculate upon the distress of others—a few gorge to the full, while the many starve. Favors should go to the many; not to the favored few. I cannot conceive, sir, at this enlightened day, how any one, professing democracy—equal rights—can be anything else than a deadly opponent to those machines of secret fraud, cunningly devised to cheat the people out of the guarantee of equal rights, and the most deadly foes to republican purity that our country has yet had to contend with.

In the early days of our government, the truest and purest men of the republic—the last of those who periled their lives and property for the triumph we now enjoy—warned the people against incorporated monopolies, and especially against a paper money monopoly. I believe it was William Pitt, the great statesman of England, that so truthfully said: "Let the American people go into the banking system, and their boasted liberties will be a delusion."

Sir, one of the many frightful consequences that result from the banks, is their natural and irresistible tendency to produce a wild, untamable spirit of over-trading and speculation, which ends in wide-spread bankruptcy and desolation. The full flood of disaster, which, in years that have passed, rolled its resistless waters over the land, carrying wreck and desolation on its turbid bosom, extending its deadly effects through all the ramifications of society, bringing justice into disrepute, unheeding public morality, weakening confidence, and forcing credit to beg at the door of unfeeling avarice, spreading bankruptcy throughout all the borders of the land, dishonoring our national banner abroad, with the reproachful epithet of "bankrupt flag," was let in and set in motion by the bankers and stockjobbers that infest the land.

Sir, shall we never learn wisdom? Reasonable people would have naturally supposed that this terrific tornado, which swept over our country like the besom of a destroying angel, would have taught us a salutary lesson, and one that centuries could hardly have effaced from our recollection. It ought to have introduced the people of this country to a better knowledge of the dangers of our present banking and paper system, than they have heretofore possessed, and should have led them, long before this, to have effected a radical improvement in the whole system, which should have strengthened the power to do good, and limited the influence to do evil. More than this—it should have afforded an instructive lesson to the banks themselves, and to the government also, leading to an entire separation—a complete divorce between the banks and the government. But above all, and far more than all, this impressive warning should have taught us a lesson for all future time; one whose bitter instruction should have been heeded and profited by, until the latest period of our national history.

Such, alas! I fear sir, is not to be a recorded fact. I have the most painful apprehensions, from all I can hear and see, and from the sentiments uttered by certain gentlemen upon this floor, in favor of monopoly, and especially paper monopoly, that we have already forgotten the wisdom taught us by our past experience. And, sir, when we turn our eyes to the Legislature, we find exclusive privileges granted to corporations and companies throughout the State. The fever of excitement has already begun to spread with appalling violence. The people have invested millions of dollars in railways, and are yet plunging still deeper and deeper into the whirlpool of speculation. The whole face of the country will soon be intersected with these improvements, as they are termed. And, sir, what will be the consequence? It does not require a prophetic eye to tell. Monopoly—far-reaching, grasping, soulless monopoly, will overshadow the whole land, with all its mammoth disproportions, and its power will be the people's law. Other speculations are springing up in their proportionate strength, and again we shall have our State prosperity smitten, as with a palsy—shattered as with a lightning streak.

Mr. President, this is rather a digression from the main question. I trust, however, that the Convention will excuse me, as I regard it as a legitimate child of the banking system. Gentlemen who are desirous of forcing their bank projects through the Convention, tell us that it is nonsense to talk about ridding the country of those swindling shops, and in proof of their position they point us to those States which have swept the last vestige of banking from their soil, and tell us that they are going to adopt a banking system. In this, gentlemen are mistaken. I have recently read the Governor's message of Iowa, and in speaking of the prosperity and rapid growth of that young State, he says it is attributable to the fact that they have a sound constitutional currency, consisting of gold and silver. Hence there can be no bank fluctuations or explosions, to mar or retard the upward and onward march of a prosperous and happy people.

Sir, it is a historical fact, that there are more bankruptcies in the United States in one year, with our present banking system, than in Holland, with her specie currency, in a whole century. Does not this one circumstance speak volumes against the pernicious influence upon commercial prosperity and private happiness of these chartered gaming houses, by which idlers take the earnings of labor from the pockets of the poor?

Gentlemen have also quoted General Jackson, in order to sustain their position in favor of these swindling shops. Now, sir, such an argument as this, has about as much reason connected with it, as the infidel, when he attempts to prove, from holy writ, that there is no God. Sir, that great patriot had the interests of the toiling millions always nearest his heart. This was exemplified in his every public act, and more particularly at the very close of his mortal existence. Almost his last words were uttered in thankfulness, that he could resign his spirit to the God who gave it, with the cheering reflection that "the country was fast settling down upon a firmer democratic basis. The rights of the laboring classes were respected and protected; for, he adds, it is from them the country derives its prosperity and greatness, and to them we must ever look to defend our soil, when invaded. They have never refused; no, sir, and they never will. Give them an honest government, freedom from monopolies and privileged classes, and hard money, not paper currency, for their hard labor, and all will be well." Sir, this is the true Jacksonian doctrine, and there is more democracy, patriotism, and truth, embodied in the language I have just quoted, than in all the speeches that have been made upon this question. Sir, it needs no comment. It embraces a volume of truth that cannot be successfully contradicted. Now, sir, let us bring this question home, and take a common sense view of it.

Suppose, in this land of equal rights and equal laws, as it is called, a farmer or a mechanic should petition the Legislature of your State for a charter which would enable him to receive interest upon all the debts he owed, (and this the banks do now,) which should enable him to make one hour's labor sell for more than a whole year's toil does at present. Sir, what would be said of him by the law-givers of the land? They would tell him he was a swindler; they would throw his petition under the table, and kick him down stairs.

Why, sir, is this not a land of equal rights and privileges? What privilege has he asked for that the banks do not enjoy? Is not a useful branch of productive industry as worthy of being supported by special legislation and exclusive privileges as manufacturing promises to pay out of paper rags, which have little or no intrinsic value, and which a breath of public suspicion may at any time destroy. Sir, I do not expect a perfect equality of wealth. That would be impossible. But I do ask an equality of protection of property acquired by honest labor and industry. I ask that dishonest laws shall no longer give idlers the privilege of amassing prodigious fortunes, without ever having earned a dollar in their lives, thereby filching from labor the just reward of its toil. I do not expect that all men will be of the same height; but I ask, and shall contend, that all feet may stand upon the same political level. All I ask, sir, is a fair field, and no favors.

I shall strenuously oppose every bank proposition that may be submitted here, unless it is one that clearly and distinctly secures the bill-holder. If I am forced to choose between the free bank system and a State Bank, I shall vote for the latter, believing it to be the least of the two evils. But, sir, its restrictions must be quite different from that of our present State Bank. I believe it to be a corrupt affair, and rotten to the very core; and, sir, in my humble opinion, the people of the State will yet be taxed to pay its responsibilities.

One other remark, Mr. President, and I have done. I trust, sir, that the motion of the gentleman from Vanderburg (Mr. Lockhart) to recommit, will not prevail. If I thought, for a moment, that it would expedite the business of the House, I should not object. But, sir, I am well satisfied, in my own mind, that it will have an opposite effect. Suppose we refer this question, and it is reported back to the Convention, I ask gentlemen if they suppose, for a moment, that this Convention will agree upon any proposition without discussion? Sir, we have had this question debated for the last ten days; and, in my opinion, gentlemen have generally blown off their gas; and I think we should act upon it now. [Cries of "Consent."] I hope the proposition to recommit will be voted down.

~~~~~
WEDNESDAY, JAN. 29, 1850.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. FARROW.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

Mr. KINLEY presented a petition signed by ladies, Quakeresses, and others, setting forth that, inasmuch as women are deprived of political rights, they ought at least to be permitted to hold and have the exclusive control of property.

Mr. LOCKHART, from the select committee to whom had been referred the seventeenth section of article ten, being the section in relation to the boundary of the State, reported, as directed by the Convention, another section in lieu thereof.

The section was read a first time, and passed to a second reading.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The PRESIDENT announced the first thing in order to be the section in relation to the rights of married women to hold real and personal property, to their separate use, and in relation to making an equitable provision for widows, &c., on its final passage.

The section having been read a third time, Mr. LOCKHART moved that it be re-committed, with instructions to strike out the section and insert the following:

"The property of women, owned by them at the time of marriage, and all property legally the property, for the purpose of paying debts contracted by him. That is the whole extent of the law. Now what is the difference between that law and the present proposition? There is a very important distinction between them. So far as that law goes I have no objection to it. So far I am willing to vote for it. And this I understand to be the ground which the proposition of the gentleman from Vanderburgh (Mr. Lockhart) now covers. It is simply a proposition, as I understand it, to protect the property of the wife against the creditors and legal representatives of the husband after his death. Thus far I have no objection to go. But when you say that you will protect the wife's property against the husband in his lifetime, it is a very different proposition. It is one that interferes with one of the most delicate and tender relations of life. It is one that is calculated to disturb the harmony which should exist in the married relation. It is one whose consequences will be mostly realized by future generations. We of the present generation will not feel its consequences.

You cannot force our people to comply with a provision like this, because whether it be the law or not, they will follow along in the old beaten track in which they have grown up and been educated; but when the present husbands and wives have passed from the present scene of action and other husbands and wives succeed to their places in society, this will come to be their rule of action. And what is it? It is the rule of the civil law; of that law which is in force in France, and which has produced in that country such a state of society as no one, I trust, would wish to see introduced into the State of Indiana. I have looked at the matter coolly and deliberately, and without prejudice. I once voted for a similar section, but I am satisfied now that we ought not to adopt it. I hope it may be re-committed, with the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Vanderburgh.

The gentleman from Posey in speaking of this matter, says the section proposed by the gentleman from Vanderburgh is in substance the proposition that was offered by the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit) some time since, and voted down; and he calls upon the members of the Convention not to stultify themselves by adopting a provision that they then refused to adopt. Let me ask how it is with regard to the proposition offered by the gentleman from Posey himself? Has not the very same principle been voted down in the proposition that was offered by the gentleman from Vanderburgh (Mr. Blythe)? If we pass any provision on the subject, I think the one offered by the gentleman from Vanderburgh (Mr. Lockhart) is as good as any that we can pass. If it be advisable for our people to adopt any such provision, why not leave it to the discretion of the Legislature? Can we not trust the people?

Can we doubt that they will send representatives who will enact such laws as are needed? Gentlemen must be aware that although we should not adopt such a principle in the Constitution, the Legislature will not thereby be prohibited from adopting the very same rule; and it will have precisely the same effect if adopted by the Legislature as if adopted by this Convention. And if it is a principle that is in favor with the masses, can we doubt that they will carry it out and that it will be done speedily? Then if by experience it be found to work badly, it will be in the power of the Legislature to modify or repeal it. But if you place it in the Constitution, how will it be? Though nine-tenths of the people should be dissatisfied, it cannot be changed without great expense. If it be found to be productive of serious inconvenience, yet it will be beyond the reach of the people's representatives; and although it is an argument which I am not in the habit of using and one which perhaps is not entitled to very great weight in this body, yet allow me to say that this section, in my humble opinion, if you insert it, will insure more votes against the adoption of the Constitution than any other provision that the Constitution will contain. I have stood here and voted uniformly against what has been called "negro exclusion," yet to my mind, though I have ever opposed a principle of that kind, this is not less objectionable.

Mr. GIBSON. That is a very proper classification.

Mr. OWEN. I hope the gentleman from Vanderburgh will withdraw his motion.

Mr. FARROW. I believe this is the third time that this subject has been brought before this Convention, and we have made two different dispositions of it. But what course the Convention will take with it now, I am unable to determine. If, however, we act upon this matter now, as we have done with others of at least equal importance, we shall decide to let it remain where the decision of the Convention last placed it. This section, securing certain rights to married women, was first introduced as the favorite measure of the Delegate from Posey, (Mr. Owen,) and after having consumed a large portion of the time and debate of the Convention, was voted down by a majority of this body. It then fell into the hands of its friend from Vanderburgh, (Mr. Blythe,) and was passed by a small majority; it was subsequently placed before the Convention by a reconsideration of the vote by which it was passed, and received again the patient consideration of this body, and was voted down by a respectable majority. During the whole time that this subject was undergoing the various changes through which it has passed, hundreds, and I may say thousands, of the ladies of Indiana, have petitioned this body on other subjects, and not a syllable is to be found in any article or section acquired by them after marriage, shall never be charged with the payment of the debts of the husband. And a liberal provision shall be made for widows and orphans."

Mr. OWEN. There is one portion of this amendment which I believe ought to be incorporated in the section which has been reported by the committee. The section as reported reads, "a liberal provision for widows," and there may not improperly be added, a provision in relation to orphans. But as to the rest of it, it is quite clear that this amendment is similar to the one which was proposed some time since by the gentleman from Tippecanoe, and voted down by the Convention, by a large majority. It is a section for the benefit of men, not of women—of husbands, not of wives. It says in substance, that the husband may squander the property of his wife, but if his creditors call on him for the payment of a just debt, they shall not be allowed to touch the same property.

Now, sir, if we desire to do anything in regard to this matter, for the benefit of married women, I call on the Convention not to stultify itself by adopting a section that will have a contrary effect—not to turn round and make the section exclusively for the benefit of married men. With regard to the proposition, I have settled down on something like a compromise. It will be remembered that the section reported by me, as the chairman of the committee, was a very different section from this. That was a section giving to women the sole use and disposal of their separate property. That is very different from the proposition of the gentleman from Vanderburgh. This section, if we are to pass anything for the benefit of married women, is as much a compromise as any that can be conceived. If we pass any provision for their benefit, it must be to secure their property to themselves, and not to their husbands. I simply call the attention of the Convention to the fact, that the proposition of the gentleman from Vanderburgh is not for the benefit of married women, but for the benefit of the husband.

Mr. MATHER. Before the vote is taken upon this subject, I wish to say a few words. Although much time has been occupied in the discussion of this subject, I have not, as yet, said a word in relation to it. I voted for the section which was adopted some time ago. I refer to the amendment that was proposed by the gentleman from Vanderburgh, (Mr. Blythe,) and it will be recollected by the Convention, that the gentlemen on this floor who advocated the passage of that section, insisted to the Convention, that the section only embraced a principle which had been the law of the State, by statutory enactment, since the year 1847. Under that impression, believing that to be the effect of the section, I for one (and I know it was the case with several friends here about me) voted for that section. After the section had passed, upon looking at it in print, I came to the conclusion that it introduced an entirely different principle, and I therefore voted for the re-consideration, and when the section was again on its passage, I voted against it.

The section that is now introduced is, in my opinion, the same in substance, as the one which the Convention, on that occasion, rejected. I believe it is, in fact, more objectionable than the proposition offered by the gentleman from Vanderburgh, at that time. It is insisted now, by gentlemen who ought to know the distinction, that this is the same in principle with the law now on the statute book. This I deny, and upon this issue I am willing to meet any man upon this floor, because I undertake to say that it is as different as daylight is from darkness. Now I wish to read from the law of 1847, that every man in the Convention may understand it. I do not wish the Convention to act, without understanding the nature of the question. I voted in that way once, and I am satisfied now, that I voted wrong; and if there are others who have been deceived as I was, I wish to take this opportunity to disabuse their minds upon this subject.

Now, what is the law of 1847? It reads as follows:

"SEC. 1. Be it enacted, &c., That no real estate whereof any married woman was or may be seized, or otherwise entitled to at the time of her marriage, or which she has or may fairly acquire during her coverture, or any interest therein, shall be liable for the debts of her husband; but the same and all interest therein, and all rents and profits arising therefrom, shall be deemed and taken to be her separate property, free and clear from any and all claim or claims of the creditors or legal representatives of the husband, as fully as if she had never been married: Provided, That this law shall not be so construed as to apply to debts contracted by such married woman before such marriage, but in all such cases her said property shall be first liable therefor.

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage."

Now notice the wording of the act. It is true that this language does occur: "shall be deemed and taken to be her separate property." That would seem to imply that it was intended to cover the same ground that this section does. But how shall it be deemed and taken to be her separate property? "It shall be deemed and taken to be her separate property, free and clear of all claims of the creditors or legal representatives of the husband." The protection is against them. But as against the husband I apprehend it never was the design of the Legislature to guard the property. I apprehend that no Court in the State would construe the law as having the effect to protect the property against the husband. I understand it to mean that his creditors or administrators shall not have the rents and profits of that we have passed that has been predicated on those petitions; yet, sir, upon the presentation of a single petition of not exceeding one hundred ladies from one of the towns of this State, this whole matter has been thrust upon us again, as though its friends were determined never to yield until they succeed in fixing this uncalled for provision in the Constitution. Mr. President, I cannot be mistaken in saying this provision is uncalled for by a large majority of the ladies of this State; for had they have felt half the interest in it that their friends here supposed, they certainly would have availed themselves of the privilege of making their wants known to this Convention; but with the solitary exception of the case above named, there has not been one application made to have woman's rights secured by Constitutional provision. Neither am I mistaken in saying that the agitation of this subject is principally confined to the towns and villages of the State, for it is from them alone that all the complaints come that woman's rights are not sufficiently secured. You may travel, sir, over the length and breadth of the State, and ask our country wives what are their wishes on this subject, and they will answer you in the language of the wives of Jacob, "all that thou hast gotten of our father, that is ours and our children's;" with this they are content, and willingly submit themselves to act out and perform all the domestic duties which pertain to their sphere in life. Under our present arrangement, sir, we have lived happy with our wives, and they have not complained that their rights have not been sufficiently protected; and while they are contented and happy, I would do nothing to disturb or change that arrangement, which they so generally approve. Before taking my seat, I move the indefinite postponement of the section and pending instructions.

Mr. LOCKHART. I do not propose to make a speech upon this question; I only desire to say that I cannot support the section as it is; if it is re-committed with the instructions which I have proposed, I can support it. The gentleman from Posey, (Mr. Owen,) in his zeal to carry this measure, in some shape or form, now proposes to strike out my section, as well as his own, and insert the statute as it now is and has been for several years past. What the legal effect of the statute which he proposes to insert in the Constitution is, I am not prepared to say. I believe that it has not yet received a judicial construction; it would therefore be improper for me to express a decided opinion upon it. The section which I propose to strike out, when stripped of all unnecessary verbiage, reads as follows: "The real and personal property of married women SHALL BE AND REMAIN SECURED TO THEM respectively."

It seems to me, sir, that this section is far more objectionable than the one that was voted down some time since in the Convention, by a majority of nineteen votes. In that section, its deformity was measurably covered up by pretty sounding words. Not so with this. Adopt it, and, in my opinion, we will effect a total severance of the interests of husband and wife, so far as property is concerned. I hope that the amendment to the instructions will not be adopted; if we are to have any section upon the subject, let it be one that will produce no such disastrous results.

Mr. KELSO. I have never, as yet, given any opinion beyond my vote in regard to this matter; and I have come to the conclusion that we are making more fuss about it here, than there is made anywhere else. I am not at all sure that we ought to adopt any provision in reference to this subject; but if we do, I go for securing the property of the wife, not only against the creditors of the husband, but against the husband himself. For, if it be necessary to provide a security at all, it is as absolutely necessary to guard the wife against the improvident action of the husband himself, as to guard her property against his creditors. It may be improper, indeed, to say that he shall be allowed, on the faith of the property of the wife, to obtain credit, and that that property shall not be made liable for the payment of the debt so incurred, while the wife and family are enjoying the proceeds of the property. If it be right to do anything at all in relation to this subject, the proposition last offered by the gentleman from Posey, is the correct one.

Now the question is, is it necessary to do anything at all? [Cries of "no," "no."] The law which has been referred to, has been in force for several years, and I have never known a question to be presented in court in regard to that law. I am not aware that advantage has been taken of it in a single instance in Indiana. Now there is one thing certain: that is, that the question of dollars and cents has much less to do with the domestic happiness of the people of Indiana, than we seem here to imagine. We had this matter presented to us in a very favorable light the other day, when we heard the story of the jolly shoemaker related, who, with his last in one hand and hammer in the other, was as happy as the day was long, until the lord and lady of the manor happened to be thrown from their carriage on a stormy night, near the door of his humble dwelling, were taken in and hospitably treated by the humble shoemaker and his family. They, feeling a proper gratitude for the services rendered them, made the husband a present of £20. He, thereupon feeling himself so elated, that he treated his wife with harshness, and thereupon they quarrelled, and the result was, that, in less than a week he thrashed his wife soundly, with a shoemaker's strap. [A laugh.] I fear that if we pass such a law as this, the condition of married people in Indiana will be similar to that of the shoemaker and his wife; and that the shoemaker's strap will have to be used. ["Consent," and immoderate laughter.] If I were going to give a vote in favor of any proposition of this kind, I should vote for the last proposition offered by the gentleman from Posey; yet I have my doubts whether it would not breed disturbance; whether turmoil and strife would not grow out of it, instead of its being productive of any ultimate good.

Mr. OWEN. I would inquire of the gentleman from Switzerland whether his remarks apply to the existing law!

Mr. KELSO. They apply to both; because, in my opinion, they are as nearly alike as possible. They are as nearly equal as a sixpence is to a glass of grog.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson moved that the section and pending instructions be laid upon the table.

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken resulted as follows—yeas 73, nays 59:

Mr. CHAPMAN'S name being called, he said, I vote "No." I am not afraid of my wife.

The yeas and nays were as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Biddle, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Carr, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Huff, Jones, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Thornton, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Zenor—73.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bryant, Chapman, Chenowith, Cole, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kilgore, Kinley, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Nave, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Prather, Read of Monroe, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Spann, Steele, Tannehill, Thomas, Wiley, and Mr. President—59.

So the section and the instructions were laid upon the table.

The section which provides that the Legislature may invest and re-invest school funds, was read a second time.

Mr. CHAPMAN moved to amend by adding a section that the General Assembly shall have the power, whenever the public interest may require it, to consolidate the different school funds, and such funds as may hereafter be set apart for that purpose, and apply the proceeds to the purchase of our State bonds; which shall be placed to the credit of the common school fund, and draw an interest of six per cent.

Mr. HARBOLT moved to lay the section on the table.

Mr. CHAPMAN demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 49, nays 75—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Bowers, Bracken, Clements, Cole, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Edmonston, Farrow, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Graham of Warrick, Harbolt, Hardin, Hendricks, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Lockhart, Logan, Mathis, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Mowrer, Nave, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Robinson, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Watts, and Zenor—49.

NAYS.—Messrs. Barbour, Beach, Berry, Borden, Bourne, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Kent, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Newman, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Thornton, Trimble, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—75.

So the section was not laid on the table.

Mr. WATTS moved to amend by striking out the words "State Bonds," and inserting the words "State Bank of Indiana."

Mr. DOBSON. It does occur to me that members of the Convention do not fully understand the purport and meaning of this section. If they do, it is surprising that they should have voted one way yesterday and another way to-day.

I ask if it is right to make this a common fund, and divide it all over the State! I think if members had understood the purport of this thing they would not have voted as they have.

Mr. CHAPMAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that this section only proposes to amalgamate these funds so far as to give discretion to the Legislature to act in reference to them all, in order that they may act in a judicious manner.

Mr. DOBSON. The judicious action of the Legislature in regard to them is a term that is about as distinct and well defined as a "judicious tariff." I am opposed to the section.

Mr. RARIDEN. I did not understand the question when I voted. I therefore move a re-consideration of the vote by which the section was laid upon the table.

Mr. KELSO. I would like to make the inquiry, and I hope the gentleman from Monroe will answer it: Has not the Legislature the power now to do what this section contemplates?

A VOICE. Certainly they have.

Mr. KESSO. If they have, why not leave it to them?

The question was taken on the motion to re-consider, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The question being on laying the section on the table.

Mr. DOBSON demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, and being taken, were—yeas 76, nays 44—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Carter, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, Mathis, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Moore, Morgan, Mowrer, Nave, Notsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Ritchey, Robinson, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Walpole, Watts, Wunderlich, and Zenor—76.

NAYS.—Messrs. Beach, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Fisher, Foley, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Hall, Maguire, Mather, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Newman, Niles, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Snook, Smith of Scott, Thornton, Trimble, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Mr. President—44.

So the section was laid upon the table.

Mr. HAMILTON offered an additional section providing that the trustees of each township, or the proper officers have power to distribute the school fund among the schools according to the number of schools in each county.

Mr. BRYANT. I hope the section will not be adopted. I hope it is not the intention of the Convention to go into the framing of school laws. All that we have to do is to shape out the principle. I move that the section be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

So the section was laid on the table.

Mr. BRYANT offered an additional section, to the effect that the General Assembly shall apply such portion of the common school fund for the purchase of libraries as may be deemed expedient.

Mr. GIBSON moved that the section be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

So the section was laid on the table.

Mr. DUNN of Madison offered an additional section, that all lands or town lots which have been delinquent for State and county taxes, and have been forfeited to the State, and in failure of the owner to redeem the same, shall be sold, and the proceeds, after the payment of the taxes and the interest that has accrued thereon, shall be paid into the common school fund.

Mr. BASCOM moved that the section be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

So the section was laid on the table.

The section which provides that all county and township officers shall be liable to be removed from office for misfeasance. &c., was read a second time.

The question being upon ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading,

Mr. GIBSON moved to strike out the words "indictment and."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Scott. If the Secretary will turn to the fifth page of the amended Constitution, he will find a section upon this subject which is almost identically the same with the one now proposed. I therefore move that this section be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to, and the section was accordingly laid on the table.

The section which provides that all State officers shall be liable to be removed from office by impeachment by the House or Representatives, to be tried by the Senate for any crime or misdemeanor, was taken up upon its second reading.

The question being, Shall the section be engrossed?

It was so ordered by consent.

The section which provides that any judge being convicted of any felony or corruption in office, may be removed from office by the judgment of the Supreme Court, on information in the name of the State, was taken up on its second reading.

The question being upon the engrossment of the section.

Mr. BORDEN. If I understand the section it provides that the Judges of the Supreme Court shall try any county officer who shall be accused of mal-feasance while in office. It appears to me they ought to be tried by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that it only applies to judges.

Mr. BORDEN. Well, sir, it occurs to me that, where judicial officers are accused of mal-feasance in office, the Senate is the proper tribunal to try them.

Mr. GIBSON. It seems to me the only question that will come before the Supreme Court under this section will be, whether the man was convicted or not. The Judges of the Supreme Court do not try him; but, if convicted of the offense charged, he is to be removed by them. They are the mere executive officers of the law.

A VOICE. "That is right."

The section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The section which provides that any State officer may be removed from office by a joint resolution of the General Assembly, for incapacity or general negligence of the duties of office, two-thirds of the members of each branch voting therefor, having been read a second time, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The section which provides that the General Assembly shall pass laws regulating proceedings for the removal of officers from office, pursuant to the foregoing provisions, was read a second time.

The section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The section which provides that it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to provide by law for the support of institutions for the education of the deaf and dumb, and of the blind, and for the treatment of the insane, was read a second time.

The question being upon ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading,

Mr. CHAPMAN offered the following as a substitute:

"It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to provide one or more farms, to be an asylum for those persons who, by reason of age, infirmity, or other misfortunes, may have a claim upon the aid and beneficence of society, on such principles that such persons may therein find employment and every reasonable comfort, and lose, by their usefulness, the degrading sense of dependence."

I desire, said Mr. C., to give one or two reasons why I offer this as a substitute,

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman's substitute will come in more properly in place of the third section.

Mr. CHAPMAN. No, sir, I desire to have it here; and if the Convention will listen but a moment, I will give my reasons.

The section, as reported by the committee, requires that the Legislature shall make appropriations for the support of the deaf and dumb, the blind, and the insane. I have no special objections to such a requirement, but I think we can very safely, in this instance, trust to the discretion of the Legislature, under the general provision which I propose. That provision is in the precise words of the present Constitution of the State, under which all these institutions have been erected, and thus far, liberally endowed. I think true policy dictates that we should still leave the matter to the discretion and under the full control of the General Assembly.

I am aware that I offer my amendment in the face and eyes of the great popularity which these institutions now enjoy, and therefore have but little hope that it will prevail. My duty to my own mind is nevertheless clear. I cannot consent that, under any and all circumstances which can possibly occur, we should make a specific constitutional requirement for the support of institutions of such a character. It would be better in all respects to leave them entirely subject to legislative provision.

But I offer my proposition for another reason, perhaps more important, and that is to do justice to the original author of it, as it stands in the old Constitution. That man was, I believe, Mr. BAOLET, a delegate from the county of Knox, to the Convention of 1816. He was a member of the committee who reported the section, and, so far as I have been able to ascertain from the records, no man was more likely to have been the author of a provision so generous and praiseworthy. I am strengthened in this belief by the fact that he was a Frenchman; for I do not believe that so much generosity often characterizes the harder natures of the Anglo-Saxon race.

Gentlemen here have frequently expressed great reverence for the old Constitution which we are about to supersede by a new, and, I have no doubt, a better one. But if there be one provision of the old instrument which I do esteem and venerate, it is the one which I propose to retain. It is a more liberal and humane provision than is contained in any of the Constitutions of the Union. It should be retained as a memento of its noble author. But if it be not, I shall have partially accomplished my object, in thus awarding just praise to his benevolent feelings.

Whilst this provision gives the Legislature ample power to promote the objects in view, it does not so imperatively prescribe and circumscribe its action as the section proposed by the committee will do. I therefore hope that my proposition will be adopted.

Mr. DOBSON. It does appear to me that we shall get rather too much in our new Constitution, if we go on in this way. We have got buildings provided for these unfortunate persons, and now we must go to buying farms for them. I think we have gone quite far enough in this matter already.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Marion, and it was decided in the negative.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The section which authorizes the Legislature to provide homes of refuge for the correction and reformation of juvenile offenders, was taken up on its second reading.

Mr. MARCH moved to amend by adding the following:

"The penal code of this State shall be founded on principles of reformation, and not of vindictive justice."

Mr. GIBSON. Both the original section and the amendment are very right and proper, but if we put everything that is right and proper into the Constitution, I presume we shall have to divide it into several volumes. It would become more voluminous than the reports of our debates.

Mr. BRYANT. I was about to offer an amendment to this section, and I now propose to strike from the section the words, "have the power to," so as to make it obligatory upon the General Assembly to provide houses of refuge for juvenile offenders, instead of referring the subject to the discretion of that body, as proposed by the reported section.

Since this Convention assembled, we have had a state of facts presented to us, such as I had previously no conception of. In reply to a call made by the gentleman from Vanderburg, (Mr. Lockhart,) early in the session, the warden of the State prison made a detailed communication to this body, exhibiting the names, ages, &c., of the convicts sent to the State prison from September, 1822, to November, 1850. I have made out a list from this report of the warden, and I find the whole number of convicts committed within that time to be 1131, of which 157 (more than one-eighth of the whole number) were minors within the age of twenty-one years, and some of these as young as eleven years of age. The gentleman from Vanderburg deserves the thanks not merely of this Convention, but of the whole community, for dragging to light this outrage upon civilization and humanity. I am persuaded that if these facts had been spread before the public, such a deep disgrace to the character of Indiana would long since have been swept away by the fierce indignation of the people. There is one case where, as late as 1840, two brothers, one fourteen and the other eleven years of age, were sent to the State prison. Sir, what is the object of all punishment? It is two-fold: the prevention of crime and the reformation of the offender. How do you propose to diminish crime, or to reform offenders, by this system of sending the children of the State, perhaps the victims of dissolute parents and neglected education, to this school of vice and infamy, where they cannot fail by means of the associations into which you thrust them, to be irretrievably ruined? With such facts before us, it is the imperative duty of the Convention to arrest this evil, to prevent this iniquitous system from being any longer tolerated, and to compel the General Assembly to provide institutions where these juvenile offenders can be restrained, and at the same time reformed. There is in this Convention, I am sure, but one feeling in regard to this matter, and that is, that this outrage upon all propriety and humanity shall no longer be.

Mr. LOCKHART. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Warren (Mr. Bryant) will be adopted. I have had a similar amendment lying on my table for several days. It seems to me that there is no question that can be presented for the consideration of this Convention, that is of more importance than this. The correction and reformation of juvenile offenders is a subject upon which I have thought and reflected much. Having occupied for several years past a high judicial position, I have often been pained to see the youth, the mere boy, branded as a felon, under our laws, and sent for a series of years to that worst of all prisons in the United States—the Jeffersonville State prison.

It will be recollected that I offered a resolution calling on the warden of the State prison for the valuable information which was some weeks ago laid upon our tables. As soon as it was procured, I moved the appointment of a select committee to whom the subject should be referred. The committee was appointed. At a subsequent day a resolution was introduced by a member of the committee on benevolent institutions, instructing that committee to enquire into the expediency of reporting a section providing houses of refuge for the punishment and reformation of juvenile offenders. This committee, sir, in hot haste, and before I had convened the select committee, reported the section now under consideration. It is, however, due to the gentleman from Warren that I should here state, that he has since informed me that he was not aware that the subject had been referred to a select committee. After that report was made, I did not think it necessary to duplicate sections upon our journal, and therefore abandoned the idea of convening the select committee, being willing to take the section reported as the basis of the action of the Convention, having no doubt but that the Convention would, without doubt, adopt the amendment now pending.

I hope, sir, that without a dissenting voice, the pending amendment of the gentleman from Warren will be adopted, and that the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. March) will withdraw his amendment and offer it as a new section; if so, I have no doubt but that it will pass.

Mr. MARCH. I am willing to withdraw my amendment and offer it as a distinct section.

The amendment was accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. BRYANT moved to strike out the words "have the power to."

The amendment was adopted.

The question being on the engrossment of the section, the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. MARCH offered the following additional section :

"The penal code of this State shall be founded upon principles of reformation and not of vindictive justice."

The question being, "Shall the section be adopted," it was decided in the affirmative.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The section which provides that county boards shall have the power to provide farms to be an asylum for those persons who, by reason of age, infirmity, or other misfortunes, may have a claim upon the aid and sympathy of society, was read a second time and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The section which provides that "no man shall be held to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of any other person upon any contract entered into from and after the year 1860, except in cases where executors, administrators, guardians, trustees, and public officers are required to give bond and security, and where security is given to persons acting in a fiduciary capacity," was taken up on its second reading.

The section having been read a second time, Mr. FOLEY moved that it be laid upon the table.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 61, nays 44.

So the section was laid on the table.

Mr. KENT moved to take from the table the section which had been just laid upon the table.

Upon this motion, the yeas and nays were demanded, and being ordered were taken—yeas 54, nays 70:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Beeson, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Carr, Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cookerly, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hadson, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Kinley, Logan, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Owen, Prather, Read of Clerk, Read of Monroe, Sherrod, Shoup, Tannenill, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Yocum, and Mr. President—64.

NAYS.—Messrs. Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Biddle, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gregg, Harbott, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Jones, Lockhart, Maguire, Mather, May, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marlon, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Wolfe, Wunderlich, and Zenor—70.

So the motion did not prevail.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

The section which declares that it shall be the duty of the General Assembly, to provide by law, within five years after the adoption of the Constitution, for a thorough geological survey of the State, was taken up on its second reading.

On motion by Mr. COOKERLY,

The section was laid on the table.

TRIBUNALS OF CONCILIATION.

The section which provides that "tribunals of conciliation may be established with such powers and duties as shall be prescribed by law, or the powers and duties of such tribunals may be conferred upon any of the other courts of this State; but such tribunals and other courts, when sitting as such tribunals, shall have no power to render judgment to be obligatory on the parties, except they voluntarily submit their matters in difference, and agree to abide the judgment, or assent thereto in the presence of such tribunal or court, in such cases as shall be prescribed by law," was read a second time.

Mr. GORDON moved that the section be laid upon the table.

SEVERAL VOICES. No, no!

Mr. McCLELLAND demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BORDEN. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his motion to lay on the table, merely to give the friends of the proposition an opportunity to explain its object.

Mr. COOKERLY. It will not be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was withdrawn.

Mr. KELSO. I have a proposition to make, and it is one that will not preclude debate. I move the indefinite postponement of the section, and I will give briefly the reasons why I make the motion. We are told by gentlemen here, that this provision will look well on paper—that it will sound well, and that it will win its way with the people. That is all true enough, but let us consider what it is we are doing. We must not imagine that the people at home are so dull and stupid that they cannot see through this flimsy cob-web.

If there were a single vestige of power to be given to the Legislature of Indiana, I would be ready to vote for it. I have no objection whatever to this "court of conciliation," to which people may by common consent submit their differences, but by which they may or may not be bound. But, I ask any man now to tell me whether the Legislature has not the power, ample and complete? I challenge any man to produce a single clause in the new Constitution that will prevent the Legislature from creating as many courts of conciliation, and of such character as they think proper. Now I ask you, where is the utility, the good sense, or the propriety, of incorporating in the new Constitution section after section, and incurring extra expense, for the purpose of conferring extra powers and privileges upon the people? The gentleman has had the honor of making the proposition, and I care not how high it may place him in the niche of public fame; but I ask him where is the necessity for encumbering the Constitution with a provision conferring additional power on the people? The section declares that they may create tribunals of conciliation, or call them by what name you please, upon which shall be conferred judicial powers, and jurisdiction in the transaction of business, by which the people who may become suitors in that court shall be bound. Why should we grant express power to the Legislature for this purpose? I can see no reason for it, because they have the power already. It is for this reason that I have moved the indefinite postponement of this section.

Mr. MARCH. I hardly deem it necessary to make use of any argument in favor of this section now before the Convention, in order to insure its adoption. It is a proposition in behalf of the settlement of legal controversies. We have already, on a former day, had a strong vote, which showed unquestionably that we have no veneration for the ancient usages of the law, however sanctioned by time or backed by high and distinguished names, unless their results meet with our approval.

We have adopted a section which goes to the foundation, and reforms the administration of the law as it now exists in our courts of justice, by the simplification of the practice and pleadings. Now, sir, this section proposes to take another step in the progress of reform. It proposes to sanction, by constitutional provision, a plan of settling law suits in peace and harmony, without the spirit of strife and contention. ["That's the doctrine."]

Sir, our present system of litigation is one of warfare transferred from the sword and the musket to the word of mouth; and the lawyers are the soldiers—the Swiss guards. ["Consent."] Is there any necessity for this, or is there any propriety in carrying it on, in the way and the extent we are now doing, without attempting any change, except simplifying the tactics. I believe not. All that is necessary is to open up some court where the parties can appear and can ascertain their rights, and the law governing them, without being compelled to employ and fee an attorney in their behalf, to contend for them in a battle of words.

A large number of law suits that are now carried on, and that are constantly springing up, arise from a mere misunderstanding; and such misunderstanding may arise among men who are perfectly honest.

Now, sir, under the present arrangement of things, where are they to go to ascertain the law and settle up their difficulties? One goes to one attorney's office, and the other to another; and whatever may have been their feelings towards each other when they went, after holding two or three hours council, each is confident that he is going to gain his cause, sure; and the next time they meet, they eye one another as pitted antagonists.

I care not how honest and able a lawyer may be, he examines the case from one point of view, and that is as a feed attorney upon one side, endeavoring all the time "to make the worse appear the better reason." Now, sir, why is it that in this age of the world, we cannot provide some means by which an honest man may ascertain what the law is, and what his rights are, without going into court for trial at all, or rather, without employing a class of men whose business it is to set up and procrastinate litigation? That is the object of the section. It is to have a tribunal and officers—competent officers, those who understand the law—before whom the parties may go, if they will, and state their grievances, and be informed what the law is, and what they ought to do in the case. And I believe, sir, that when such a court is sanctioned by the Constitution of the State, and established by the Legislature, it will become popular, and the people of the country, nine-tenths of them at all events, will go to it for information instead of going to the offices of attorneys.

Take another class of cases, cases which originate in the mere heat, excitement, and passion of the moment, where a man goes at once to the office of an attorney, and commences a law suit, and it is carried on to the end, in all the virulence of warfare, and with the same spirit and feelings in which it is commenced. Courts and attorneys do not assuage, but fan the strife.

Now if there was a court open, with a competent officer in attendance, where individuals, under such circumstances, might ascertain what the law is, there might be a chance of having these cases settled in peace and harmony, and without expense.

Sir, there is nothing that contributes so much to disturb a neighborhood, as one of these hard contested law suits. It is almost equal to border feuds in olden times, for the worst passions of the human breast, are brought into the most active exercise.

The gentleman from Switzerland says he has no objection to courts of conciliation, and that he has no objection to the conciliation of law suits; but he says—and his objection resolves itself all into this: that the section ought not to be placed in the Constitution—that there is no end to introducing provisions into the Constitution. He wishes this description of business to be committed to the inferior courts, and to the justices of the peace. Sir, I am for giving to this court of conciliation character and standing by making a constitutional provision in reference to it. If you say that it shall be composed of men of ability, of character, and standing, it may produce much good. The gentleman is willing to dignify the ordinary court, by a constitutional provision, and incur almost any amount of expense in building court houses, paying judges, sheriffs, constables, and lawyers, for the purpose of having a semi-annual tournament at the bar, with the rights and interests of parties all at stake; but almost any little affair is good enough for the small business of settling controversies. We must make the business of settling difficulties respectable, and then it will be adopted.

If there be a difficulty between two men now, the natural consequence is, they must go to law, because it is customary. They are laboring under the impression that they would not be considered men of spirit, if they did not go to law, and fight it out in the court house; and in order to fight it out, they must, so far as their pockets are concerned, bleed most freely.

The gentleman is one of those who most strongly opposed the section the other day, on legal reform. It is perfectly consistent for him to oppose this also. But I tell gentlemen who are in favor of legal reform, that this is one of the most important steps in it. The section that we passed, was for the purpose of simplifying and cheapening litigation. This is intended for the higher purpose of preventing litigation.

Mr. KELSO (interposing). I ask the gentleman what I have done to oppose legal reform?

Mr. MARCH. I understand from the whole tenor of the gentleman's remarks, that he is in opposition to it.

Mr. KELSO. Not at all. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MARCH. Well, then, the gentleman has a very peculiar way of showing himself in favor of it.

Now, sir, this section is not imperative. Personally, I would prefer that it should be imperative, but am willing, so far as that is concerned, to let it be settled by the opinions of a majority of the Convention. I would prefer to have it imperative, but this is the form in which it has been incorporated into the Constitutions of those States which have adopted it. New York has adopted it in this form, and Wisconsin has adopted it in this form; and the reason why they have done so, is, that it is more likely to be approved of by the people, in this form than in any other, and is an experiment, and it is desirable that the Legislature shall have power to change it, if it should not be found to succeed. I therefore hope that this section will not be postponed, and that all those gentlemen who are in favor of legal reform, who are in favor of introducing a new, cheaper, or simpler method of settling legal controversies, will support this section. It can do no possible harm.

While we have devoted eight or nine sections to warfare—to physical warfare—while we have devoted nine or ten sections to courts of justice, where the war of words is waged, let us at least devote one short section to the purpose of making peace.

Gentlemen say it will encumber the Constitution, and be a great expense to print it. They must be hard pushed, when they are obliged to resort to such arguments. What an awful amount of expense, to print this one short section! It is a great pity that we did not think of this expense of printing, some time ago; we might have saved something, if we had. It is straining at a gnat and swallowing a whole drove of camels, to make that an objection. Sir, it will not encumber the Constitution; on the contrary, I maintain that it will be an honor and an ornament to it, and will stand as a lasting testimony to the good sense and discretion of those who placed it there.

I hope the section will not be postponed, but that it will be finally adopted. By adopting it, we shall hold out some inducement to obey the injunction of the great Teacher: "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou art cast into prison." We may also, in an humble way, merit a part of that sublimest of all benedictions, "Blessed are the peace makers."

Mr. THORNTON said:—

Mr. President, I do not pretend to be able to urge anything in favor of tribunals of the character under consideration from any experimental knowledge possessed by me, as they have not been in use in this State. I feel disposed to oppose the motion to indefinitely postpone the article, especially for the reasons urged by the mover. I do not understand the language of the article as he does. He argues and labors to establish the conclusion that after a case would be submitted to such tribunal by parties and a decision had, they would not be bound to abide by it if they chose to refuse. I understand the voluntary submission spoken of in the section, to have reference to the action of the parties in the first instance when agreeing to submit any matter to such Court, and not particularly to any action after decision. It is fairly inferible that if parties voluntarily agree to submit any matter in dispute to such tribunal and to abide the judgment which may be rendered, it would be binding on them. The section, however, provides that the course of proceeding is to be prescribed by law, and certainly the General Assembly may make the necessary provisions for rendering the course of proceeding binding on the parties. It would be idle and more than useless to suppose it would do otherwise. I understand the words "or assent thereto in the presence of such tribunal or Court," not to embrace a case where the disputants had in the first instance "voluntarily submitted any matters in difference and agreed to abide the judgment," &c., but to have reference to a case simply submitted, without any previous agreement to abide the judgment, and after judgment or award given to assent to it in the presence of the Court. It might also embrace a case where the parties had agreed upon the judgment to be rendered, and upon being rendered then to assent thereto in the presence of the Court. This is the only rational construction which can be given. To sustain any other, or least such as contended for by the gentleman moving the postponement, would render the whole plan of such a peace-making tribunal abortive. The details of proceeding must of course be settled by the Legislature, and I have no doubt would be settled properly and so as to carry out the salutary object to be accomplished by the creation of such Courts.

I cannot but think such a tribunal as this would afford great facilities for adjusting matters of difference arising between friends, relations, and members of the same society. A principle somewhat similar obtains in that numerous and respectable body of Christians, the Methodists. I had occasion not long since to be present when a matter involving a large amount in value was in dispute between a brother-in-law and sister-in-law, having been called on as a witness between the parties. I then witnessed the salutary working of the rule of discipline adopted by the church. The matter was satisfactorily adjusted, without expense to the parties. If this had not been done a vexatious and most unpleasant law-suit must have taken place, which would have involved a heavy amount of costs, and created heart-burnings and an irritated state of feeling which might never have been healed or reconciled, and would no doubt have resulted injuriously to both of the parties.

Another consideration commends this kind of tribunal to my humble judgment. It is one of the boasted favorite maxims of the law, that there should be an end of litigation. The creation of a Court of this description, would conduce to that desirable end by affording facilities for adjusting matters of difference between parties, who might be compelled to resort to the ordinary course of litigation to enforce what they might deem their just rights.

I have been indebted to an esteemed friend and fellow-member (Mr. Chapman) for an article on this subject, which he has just handed me, which purports to be an extract from one of the New York journals, to which I would respectfully call the attention of the Convention. It appears that this description of Court has been in use for a long time in some of the European governments, and especially that of Denmark; and the article has reference to the course of proceeding established by the Danish government in her West India Islands, particularly St. Croix.

[The reading of the extract being loudly called for, Mr. Thornton read it as follows:]

For the Albany Weekly Journal.

COURTS OF CONCILIATION.

Some years ago my esteemed friend Humphry Howland of this town, sojourned during the winter in St. Croix, (Santa Cruz,) one of the Danish West India Islands. Observing that mediators were generally employed in the adjustment of differences—so very dissimilar to the practice of this country—he took much pains to inquire into the whole matter; and was assured by Judge Anderson of that place, that nine-tenths of all disputes were settled by the Reconciling Commission.

After Humphry Howland's return home, he received from Judge Anderson a full and complete copy of the ordinance issued by Christian VII, King of Denmark, dated December 7, 1798, translated from the Danish original; and that roll is now lying before me. It is too voluminous for publication in a newspaper, but I give an abstract of some of its sections and provisions.

The preamble is worthy of the serious consideration of our legislators; and when they adopt sentiments as paternal as those of that monarch, and show it by their acts, every good citizen, anxious for the welfare of his country, will respect and honor them. I give it verbatim:—

"Whereas, it is incumbent on us to prevent, as far as possible, unnecessary and expensive law-suits between our beloved and faithful subjects, by the interposition of mediators to effect an amicable adjustment between the contending parties; and having experienced that the Reconciling Commission established in our West India Islands in consequence of the ordinance of the 31st March, 1795, hath not had the desired effect, we have determined to establish a Reconciling Commission in the West Indies on the same footing that it now stands in our kingdoms in Europe, by our late ordinance for that purpose, the good effects of which hath answered our paternal intention; wherefore we decree as follows:—"

SEC. 1. In every jurisdiction there shall be a Reconciling Commission for the amicable adjustment of disputes.

SEC. 2. The ruling power of St. Croix and of St. Thomas shall propose four or six of the most respectable, intelligent, and honest men of the district, from whom the burghers and inhabitants shall by vote choose two as Reconciling Commissioners, who are bound to accept the office and conduct it for three years, unless they have a law-suit or well-founded reason to excuse them. Both shall not be discharged at the same time. Lawyers are not to be chosen as Reconciling Commissioners.

SEC. 5. The members on taking their seats in the commission, swear "to exert all the means in their power to promote the amicable adjustment between the parties, in every case that shall be brought before the said commission, and endeavor zealously and honestly to effect it to the best of their judgment."

SEC. 6. It is enjoined on the members of the government to use their influence in favor of the institution, and to take a seat there when official duty will permit, "in order to promote harmony between the parties at variance."

SEC. 7. "All civil causes in general, whether concerning property, rights, debts, or anything else, shall be subject to the Reconciling Commission, except (1.) suits respecting bills of exchange, (2.) demands in dealings, bankrupt estates, or estates under the administration of trustees, because there are no law expenses in such cases in the first instance."

SEC. 18. The Reconciling Commission shall assemble once a week.

SEC. 20. Those who have anything to lay before the commission, shall previously notify it, either verbally or by writing.

SEC. 24. Each party when summoned, shall personally appear before the commissioners, unless he can render justifiable excuse; and in that case, the absentee may send a good man in his place, empowered to treat for and reconcile the cause; "but it is expressly forbidden either to take with you, or to send in your stead, a lawyer to act in the Reconciling Commission."

SEC. 25. Whoever shall be summoned to hear proposals for reconciliation, and shall refuse to attend, or to give good and sufficient reasons for not attending, shall be condemned to pay his adversary the expenses of the suit, should the cause be decided by a process of law.

SEC. 27. If an arrangement is not made, nothing in writing from the commission to be granted, except an attest when the complaint is returned to the plaintiff, that it could not effect an amicable reconciliation.

SEC. 31. All causes brought before the Reconciling Commission to be closed and settled within eight days, and not remain longer without the consent of both parties.

SEC. 35. No cause (with a few specified exceptions) shall be received or entered in any court of justice, unless the plaintiff proves by a certificate from the Reconciling Commission that an arrangement with his opponent had been attempted, but not obtained.

SEC. 39. A commissioner who has labored with unremitted zeal and activity for eight years, "We will distinguish as a worthy man and member of society, conferring on him a suitable rank, or other mark of our approbation."

SEC. 40. The Reconciling Commissioners and the Recorder shall receive a reward for their trouble when they effect an amicable adjustment; otherwise nothing.

I have thus given a synopsis of the more important sections of this remarkable ordinance, and observe that its extraordinary success appears to be mainly owing to two things: 1. The whole influence of the government is brought to bear against litigation. 2. The commission sits in private, and without reference to the nice distinctions of the law, earnestly endeavors to reconcile the parties.

It has been said in all soberness that the expenses of litigation in this State, exceed the value of the property in dispute; but be this as it may, the expenses are only a part of the evils that law-suits produce. Can citizens leave their business and be recompensed by the scanty fees allowed to a juror or a witness? Damages not found in bills of cost are of great amount; and mental discomforts are not to be estimated by dollars and cents.

DAVID THOMAS.

Near Aurora, Cayuga county, 2d mo. 28, 1850.

Mr. President, I therefore hope that the article will not be indefinitely postponed, but that it will be sustained by the Convention and become a part of our amended Constitution. It seems to me it is a wholesome, beneficent measure, calculated to produce peace and harmony in society; and as such, will entitle its advocates to that benediction which is ever awarded to the peace-makers.

MR. GIBSON. I am in favor of the establishment of this court; but the provision here proposed to be adopted, amounts to just nothing at all. I have an amendment to propose when it shall be in order. I shall offer it in good faith, and if it be adopted, I shall then vote for the section. It is, to strike out the word "may," and insert the word "shall." If there is any good to be derived from the establishment of such a court, let us have it established. To leave it discretionary with the Legislature, is tantamount to making no provision on the subject at all.

MR. KELSO. I wish to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from Delaware, and at the close of my remarks I will leave gentlemen to put the section in such shape as they may think proper.

Now, I ask whether, if you establish this court, the judge is to sit there and the court to be open at all times, whenever litigants choose to make application to it? It appears to me that the court must be constantly in session; and is he going to sit there and render service to the community and receive no compensation for it? If he is to be paid, who is to pay him? If the State is to pay him, must there, or can there be, with any propriety, more than one court to each county? If the judge of this court is to devote the whole of his time to the interests of the community, I ask you if he can afford to do it for less compensation than the circuit judge receives. And, sir, having ninety-one counties in the State, you must, therefore, necessarily have ninety-one judges, at a salary of a thousand each. That will make ninety-one thousand dollars to be paid by the State, to the judges of your courts of conciliation. Is that right? If it is not to be the arrangement, then the litigants must pay. The judges must be paid; they cannot transact the business for nothing; and I ask you if you are to pay a man for deciding the legal rights of parties, must you not employ a man who understands the legal rights of parties? Most undoubtedly. You will have to employ a competent lawyer. If, then, he be placed there to take his fees from the pockets of the litigants, will he bleed them any less freely than my worthy friends, the lawyers, do at present? The judge must be expected to make his living; he will be pretty much in the same condition as a probate judge; and we are told, in respect to the probate judges, that they never yet failed to consume the greater part of the estate coming under their jurisdiction.

Well, then, where is the great good that is to result from it? The evil consequences that may follow, are apparent. There must be at least one judge for each county. You cannot expect people to travel from one county to another for the purpose of procuring either the adjustment of a difficulty that may arise between neighbors, or information upon the law regarding the case. You must secure men who are qualified, men of talent and integrity—men who are willing to devote themselves to the business, and you must pay them accordingly. Then you would have a court that has all the advantages that a court can furnish, with a single exception. It provides that men can thus avail themselves of this court of conciliation as they please, and if they do, there is nothing to prevent them employing counsel; they may employ lawyers, as in the circuit or supreme courts. That is one advantage I admit. There are no legal technicalities in the way; this court is to decide according to what they consider the principles of common justice.

One word in regard to what was said by my religious friend from Floyd, about suits arising between members of the church. The bitterest law suit that I ever saw in my life, arose between members of the Methodist church, and it well nigh destroyed two class leaders. It arose from the circumstance of one borrowing a horse from the other, and riding the animal so hard that he died, and, refusing to pay for him. He was brought up before the church and tried, and afterwards the case was carried into court, and the parties spent, in litigation, six times the price of the horse. Feelings of hostility between the parties were there engendered, that continue to this day. Of all schisms that are incurable, those which grow up in the church and among relatives, are the worst. Suppose you have a court of conciliation established, and have it provided that each party is to pay a portion of the fees of the judge; one man goes in and he pokes down ten dollars to the judge, the other gives him twenty dollars, and then justice inclines to the other scale. Now, sir, I said I would withdraw the motion to postpone indefinitely, and let the friends of the measure make it as perfect as they can; and after that, I will exercise my own judgment in regard to it.

The motion to postpone indefinitely was withdrawn.

The question being upon ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading,

Mr. MORRISON of Marion. I am decidedly opposed to any amendment being made to this section. I look upon this court of conciliation through very different spectacles from those through which legal gentlemen view it. I do not consider that we are by this provision directing the appointment of a judge; we are merely providing that in each county, as the Legislature may direct, a permanent board of arbitrators shall be constituted; and we do not restrict them to those rules of action that have heretofore obtained with boards of arbitration. We give them general powers as conciliators, to decide questions without the forms of law. We do not even embarrass them with the sanction of a judicial decision; we allow them the greatest latitude; and it will be an easy matter for the Legislature to decide what fees shall be taken.

The gentleman from Switzerland is very much alarmed at the corrupt influences which he thinks may be brought to bear upon these arbitrators; but, sir, this may all be obviated by leaving it within the power of the Legislature to establish such guards as may be necessary. The gentleman from Switzerland says we may choose our own arbitrators for the settlement of our difficulties. But the advantage is this: here is a permanent board appointed in each county, and they are compelled to take cognizance of cases where the parties desire it. Under the old practice, the party going before the arbitrator was obliged to make out a written statement of the points of his case, and if the arbitrator decided upon any other point, the whole proceeding was null and void. The establishment of such a tribunal as this will have the effect of preventing litigation, to a great extent; that is its intention. Gentlemen say that this may be done by the Legislature without a constitutional provision. Sir, this section directs the Legislature to consult the wishes of the people in this respect; and if it be found that the people are in favor of tribunals of this description, then they can be established under such salutary restrictions as will dispel the "chimeras dire" that haunt the imagination of the gentleman from Switzerland.

Mr. BRACKEN demanded the previous question.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe, The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention resumed the consideration of the section in relation to courts of conciliation.

Mr. BRACKEN withdrew the demand for the previous question.

The question being on the amendment of the gentleman from Clark, to strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

Mr. MARCH. I desire to make a few remarks in reply to some of the objections that have been made to this section this morning, by the gentleman from Switzerland (Mr. Kelso), and by the gentleman from Clark (Mr. Gibson). I regret, sir, to find the gentleman from Clark, in opposition to this section. I had supposed that he was certainly a friend of law reform. He ably advocated and voted for the section which has been adopted in relation to that subject. I say that I for one regret that the gentleman is not with us on this question. The amendment that he proposes, is to strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall." I believe the section had better stand as it is. It is a new measure, and it is important that all measures which propose a material change, as this does, should move slowly. All reforms, or propositions to change long existing forms, customs, or usages, should be carefully considered and not hastily adopted. By leaving the section as it stands, the matter will be entirely within the control of the Legislature. I hope it will be adopted as it stands.

The gentleman from Switzerland asks who is to pay this judge. As the section now stands, it is left to the Legislature. The Legislature will have power either to make a district court, or they can make it the duty of the other courts of the State to act as conciliation courts. If I had to draw up a law in regard to it, I would confer the power on the other courts.

There is no necessity for establishing any new court for this purpose. The duty of conciliation judges should be conferred upon justices of the peace, upon the probate judges, or upon the circuit judges, and the fees for this description of business may be regulated by law or it may be made part of the duty of the circuit judge under his present salary. Thus you need not increase the expenses of the State one dollar; but even if you do, I maintain that ten dollars spent in settling law suits, is money better applied than one dollar spent in carrying on a law suit.

It was said by the gentleman from Switzerland, that it will have a tendency to increase litigation, to encourage frauds. Sir, I ask any member of this Convention, if there be any more danger of bribing a judge when sitting as conciliator than when sitting in a court of law? Not one particle. There is no greater inducement to attempt to bribe or to yield to bribery, in the one case than in the other; and if anything, the chances are in favor of the conciliation judge, for his purpose is to bring about an amicable adjustment of a difficulty, and not simply preside in a legal contest.

Again it is said that we have all that we desire under the present Statute, in the shape of arbitrators. Now, this arbitration is a perfect burlesque in the way in which it is now managed. In the first place it requires as much skill on the part of the attorney to prepare the case to go before the arbitrators, as to go into court; and after all, the parties have to go into court before judgment can be entered. The object of this conciliation court, is to have a tribunal not for contesting cases, but for settling them.

Now, sir, since the adjournment this forenoon, one of the delegates from Marion county (Mr. Chapman,) who favors this section and who always has the documents to sustain any position he takes, has handed me very high authority in favor of this court. I will read it, with the permission of the Convention, and when I have done so, I presume it will not be disputed by any one. It is in a communication from Col. Benton to the people of California, in relation to the government. In the course of his communication, the Colonel says:

"You need a governor and judges, and some peace and militia officers: that is about all. The Roman civil law, which is the basis of your law, is just and wise, and only needs to be administered by upright judges, (alcades) whom you should elect. Avoid new codes of law until introduced by permanent authority. You need but little, at present, in addition to what you have, and that your convention can give you, to-wit: elections, trial by jury, and courts of "Reconciliation." This latter is for the termination of disputes without law, by the mediation of the judge; it is easily engrafted on the Roman civil law, which you have, and which favors arbitration and amicable settlements. It is founded upon the command in Scripture, "agree with thine adversary quickly while thou art in the way with him," &c. It exists in some of the northern European nations, Norway especially, where two-thirds of all the disputes are settled in courts of "Reconciliation." * * *

"Avoid, if possible, law suits above everything else. They are a moth which eats up the crop, and often the land itself. Beside, no judgment in a land case would be valid, being a proceeding in rem, unless agreed to by both parties—decided by arbitration, or in a court of "Reconciliation."

Appended to the communication, I find the following note :

APPENDIX A—LAWSUITS.

The "Court of Reconciliation," as established in Norway, is thus described by a late American traveler :

"In every School district, the free-holders elect a Justice of the Court of Reconciliation. Every lawsuit must first be brought before this Justice, and by the parties in person, as no lawyer or attorney is allowed to practice in this Court. The parties appear in person and state their mutual complaints and grievances at length, and the Justice carefully notes down all the facts and statements of the plaintiff and defendant, and, after due consideration, endeavors to arrange the matter, and proposes for this purpose, what he considers perfectly just and fair in the premises. If his judgment is accepted, it is immediately entered in the Court above, which is a Court of Record; and if it is appealed from, the case goes up to the District Court upon the evidence already taken in writing, by the Justice of the Court of Reconciliation. No other evidence is admitted. If the terms proposed by the Justice are pronounced to be just and reasonable, the party appealing has to pay the costs and charges of appeal. More than two-thirds of the suits commenced are settled in the Court of Reconciliation, and of the remaining third not settled, not more than one-tenth are ever carried up."

Now, I ask gentlemen what better evidence they want in regard to the operation of this court of conciliation. I ask what higher authority do you want? I will place the authority of Mr. Benton against that of the gentleman from Switzerland, and the gentleman from Clark; and I presume they will not consider that I do them any injustice when I do so.

Mr. NAVE. I am in favor of the establishment of such a court as this, but I am opposed to the section as it has been reported to the Convention, for two reasons. One is that it leaves it discretionary with the Legislature whether they will organize such a court or not; and my second objection is, that it is made optional with the parties whether they will abide by the decision of the court. And next, if we adopt such a provision, we should adopt it in accordance with the sentiment, "agree with thine adversary quickly whilst thou art in the way with him;" and the decision should be final. There should be no appealing to the Supreme Court. If the parties once agree to submit their differences to the court of conciliation, the decision of that court should be a quies so far as regards all matters. But if you adopt the section which has been introduced by the gentleman, I undertake to say that it will not be promotive of the interests of the people, but that it will increase litigation—that when a suit has passed through that court, and one of the parties should be dissatisfied with the decision, an effort will afterwards be made to show that there has been fraud on the part of the conciliators, and in this way the case will never be got rid of until it goes before the Supreme Court. Look at the reports of your Supreme Court; nine-tenths of all the cases that are carried into that court, are such as have been before arbitrators. And if we are here for the purpose of fixing a court of conciliation for the convenience of parties who have matters in difference, why not make the judgment of that court conclusive? Then I propose to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Clark, by substituting the following :

"Tribunals of conciliation shall be established with such powers and duties as may be prescribed by law; and when parties voluntarily submit their matters in difference to such tribunals, the judgment or award of such conciliators shall be final between the parties."

If it be put in such a shape as this, I will vote for it; otherwise I cannot.

Mr. GIBSON inquired whether the amendment of the gentleman from Hendricks was in order.

The PRESIDENT remarked that the amendment was not now in order, as it did not propose to amend the pending amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Clark was to strike out the word "may," and insert the word "shall."

Mr. FOLEY demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question having been seconded, the main question was ordered to be put.

The question being upon the amendment of the gentleman from Clark,

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and, being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 97—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Beach, Bright, Chenowith, Dick, Elliott, Frisbie Garvin, Gibson, Gordon, Hitt, Kelso, Miller of Fulton, Morgan, Nave, Pepper of Crawford, Read of Clark, and Robinson—17.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Prather, Rariden, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—95.

So the amendment was not adopted.

The question being upon ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 72, nays 52—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Foley, Foster, Garvin, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hitt, Hogin, Huff, Johnson of D., Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Schoonover, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, and Yocum—72.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Barbour, Beard, Biddle, Bright, Brookbank, Carr, Carter, Chenoweth, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Crawford, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Frisbie, Gibson, Gordon, Haddon, Harbolt, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Holman, Hovey, Johnson of O., Kelso, Lockhart, Logan, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Rariden, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Stevenson, Thomas, Watts, Zenor, and Mr. President—52.

So the section was engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. SMILEY offered an additional section to the effect that every person shall have the right to prosecute or defend his suit by counsel.

The question was taken upon the adoption of the section,

And it was decided in the negative.

Mr. NAVE proposed an additional section, that the commissioners on law reform, to be appointed by the Legislature, should not continue in service more than one year, and shall not receive more than three dollars per day.

I have listened, said Mr. N., to the arguments of gentlemen on this floor, and I am satisfied—very well satisfied—that such commissioners will be authorized to be appointed; and it is important, I think, that we should limit their period of service, and pay. [Cries of “Consent!”] It is for this reason I have offered this section. [Much clamor prevailing in the Hall.] I hope the Convention will hear me for a moment, because I am never in the habit of detaining them very long.

It is argued by gentlemen, and I understand it to be the principle maintained by those who advocate this measure, that we are to go back to the age of the world in which men were accustomed to go into court and make their declaration of grievance ore tenus, when all the proceedings were ore tenus. [Cries of “Translate! translate! Give us the English!”] When the proceedings before the courts were by word of mouth. Now if this system is to be adopted by us, it is important that these men who are to be appointed commissioners should be so instructed. And it occurs to me that, if our policy be to simplify the law, and lessen the expenses attending its administration, we should begin by restricting the pay, and the time of the continuance in office of these commissioners who are to prepare a code for us.

Now, I wish to say another thing. It appears to me that it is very important, if the law be, as it is stated on this floor to be, that A, having a note under seal, and a note not under seal, and a book account against B, cannot bring one suit for the recovery of all these claims, but must bring three separate suits, I insist that I have not read the law to any good purpose. And if A, in bringing suit against B in a court of equity, fail to set forth that he has no remedy at law, and if this be a sufficient ground of demurrer to his bill, then I confess I have read the law to very little purpose.

It is important, doubtless, that we should have revisors to revise the laws of the State. And, whilst I do not oppose the proposition for the appointment of such revisors, I wish to limit the expense attending the proposed revision. It is for this reason I have offered the proposition which has been read. I offer it in good faith, not for “Buncombe,” but for the country at large. I wish the country not to be imposed upon by these men first doing the work and then making out their bills. I wish to have it understood what compensation they are to receive before they commence their work.

Mr. HAMILTON moved that the section be laid upon the table.

The question being upon the motion of the gentleman from Allen,

The yeas and nays were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 77, nays 48—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helmer, Hitt, Howe, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shoup, Sims, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thornton, Wiley, Yocum, Mr. President—77.

YAYS.—Messrs. Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bracken, Brookbank, Carter, Clark of Tippecanoe, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Elliott, Fisher, Garvin, Harbolt, Helm, Hendricks, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Kelso, Mather, Miller of Fulton, Moore, Morgan, Murray, Nave, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Shannon, Sherrod, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Steele, Tague, Thomas, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, and Zenor—48.

So the section was laid upon the table.

FUTURE AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The Convention then took up for consideration the article reported by the committee on "future amendments to the Constitution," on its second reading. The first section is as follows:

"Whenever two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the General Assembly shall think it necessary to call a Convention to alter or amend this Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors at the next election of members of the General Assembly, to vote for or against a Convention; and if it shall appear that a majority of all the electors of the State voting for Representatives have voted for a Convention, the General Assembly shall, at their next session, call a Convention for the purpose of revising, altering, or amending this Constitution."

The section having been read,

Mr. BASCOM moved to amend in this manner: to strike out the section and insert a substitute to the following effect: That every sixteen years after the adoption of this Constitution, at the general election holden for the election of State officers, a poll shall be opened, at which the qualified electors of the State shall express by vote whether they are in favor of calling a Convention or not; and if a majority are in favor, the Governor shall inform the next General Assembly thereof, whose duty it shall be to provide by law for the election of the members of such Convention, to prescribe the number of said members, and the time and place of the meeting of the Convention.

Mr. MIDROY moved that the proposed substitute be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to,

And the substitute was accordingly laid upon the table.

Mr. CARR of Jackson moved that the section be laid upon the table.

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and, being taken, resulted—yeas 66, nays 55—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Borden, Bourne, Bryant, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Duzan, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hamilton, Helmer, Howe, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Logan, Mather, Mathis, Miller of Fulton, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Shannon, Smiley, Snook, Spann, Steele, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace Walpole, Wiley, Yocum, and Mr. President—66.

YAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Beard, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Butler, Chenowith, Coats, Cole, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Hall, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Lockhart, Maguire, March, May, McClelland, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Owen, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shoup, Sims, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tannehill, Trimble, Watts, Wolfe, Wunderlich, and Zenor—55.

So the section was laid upon the table.

Mr. RARIDEN proposed an additional section, providing that, after 1855, it might be determined by a vote of the people whether the sessions of the Legislature should be changed from biennial to annual.

The question being upon the adoption of the additional section,

On motion by Mr. READ of Clark, it was laid upon the table.

The second section of the article was then read. It is as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in either branch of the General Assembly; and if the same shall be agreed to by two-thirds of all the members elected in each of the two Houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be referred to the next session of the General Assembly, and shall be published at least three months previous to the time of holding the next election for members of the House of Representatives; and if, at the next regular session of the General Assembly after said election, a majority of all the members elected in each branch of the General Assembly shall agree to said amendment or amendments, then it shall be their duty to submit the same to the people at the next general election for their adoption or rejection, in such manner as may be prescribed by law; and if a majority of all the electors voting at said election for members of the House of Representatives shall vote for such amendment or amendments, the same shall become a part of the Constitution. If two or more amendments be submitted, at the same time, they shall be submitted in such manner that the people shall vote for or against each of such amendments separately; and while an amendment or amendments, which has been agreed upon by one General Assembly, is awaiting the action of a succeeding Assembly, or undergoing the final consideration of the people, no additional amendment or amendments shall be proposed."

The question being Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. STEVENSON moved to amend by striking out "two thirds," and inserting "a majority. He would merely observe that all the Constitutions that had been lately adopted by the different States, contained the majority principle. He thought it was the correct principle in all cases. In relation to future amendments to the Constitution, it would be recollected that it requires three years for these amendments to go through the requisite forms, and be perfected, before they become a part of the fundamental law of the land.

Mr. OWEN. I have prepared an amendment I propose to move as a substitute for the section which embodies exactly the same principle as that proposed by the gentleman from Putnam, and it has this additional advantage, that it is not two-thirds as long as the original section.

SEVERAL VOICES. "Read it," "read it."

Mr. OWEN. With the permission of the Convention I will read it. It is as follows:

"Any amendment, or amendments, to this Constitution may be passed in the Senate, or House of Representatives; and if the same shall be agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two Houses, such proposed amendment, or amendments, shall be entered on their Journal, with the ayes and noes thereon, and referred to the Legislature, to be chosen at the next general election, and if in the Legislature so next chosen, such proposed amendment, or amendments, shall be agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each House, then it shall be the duty of the Legislature to submit such amendment, or amendments, to the qualified voters of the State, and if a majority of said electors shall ratify the same, such amendment, or amendments shall become a part of this Constitution."

Several matters of detail which are embraced in the original section, and which seem to me to be unnecessary, are omitted in the amendment I propose.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first on the amendment of the gentleman from Putnam.

Mr. STEVENSON. I accept the proposition of the gentleman from Posey in lieu of the amendment I have offered.

Mr. RITCHEY. As Chairman of the Committee from which the section now before the Convention was reported, it may be proper that I should say a word in support of the proposition that is proposed to be stricken out. It is true, sir, that a majority of the Conventions which have been lately held, have provided that a majority of the members of the Legislature shall be all that is necessary, in order to propose amendments to the Constitution. But, they have not all adopted that principle. The Constitution of Illinois contains a provision similar to that which it is now proposed to strike out.

It provides that before any amendment shall be made in the Constitution of the State, the popular feeling shall be so much in favor of making the amendment that it will produce in the Legislature a vote of two thirds in favor of submitting the proposition to the people. I believe, however, Illinois is the only State, the Constitution of which contains this provision.

The committee thought it might be found rather too easy to obtain a majority of the members of the Legislature in favor of amending the Constitution. We were, therefore, desirous of placing this guard against the too frequent repetition of propositions to amend by requiring two-thirds of the members of the Legislature to vote for such proposition before it was submitted to the popular vote.

After it had been submitted, however, and submitted affirmatively, then it was thought that only a majority of the members of the Legislature should be required to carry it into effect. The provision is only intended as a necessary check upon the too frequent introduction of propositions to change the provisions of the Constitution. If there is anything that should be held sacred, and scrupulously guarded against hasty and inconsiderate changes, it is the fundamental law of the State.

The section which the Convention had laid upon the table is one that is to be found in the Constitution of almost every State in this Union. The committee examined the Constitutions of all the States, and it was found that there was not more than one or two which did not provide for the calling of Conventions as proposed in the first section of this article, and which has just been laid on the table. Every one of them except two or three have made provision for amending their Constitutions by calling Conventions. But this Convention has seen fit to lay the section on the table, and I shall not complain of their having done so, but I would prefer, myself, that the people should have the power to call another Convention to amend the Constitution—though, perhaps, we have put them out of notion of it—perhaps, after the example we have given them, another will not be called, during the present generation, at all events. While I am in favor of that, I am also in favor of submitting isolated propositions to them, so that the Constitution may be amended in such particulars as they desire without subjecting the people to the inconvenience and expense of calling a State Convention.

In reply to the gentleman from Posey, I will say that I think that he is mistaken when he said his section was so much shorter than the one proposed to be stricken out. It is precisely of the same length, with the exception of the one or two provisions which he considers unnecessary, but which I hold to be necessary.

The gentleman wishes to avoid submitting to the people more than one proposition at a time. Suppose the Legislature should determine to submit general amendments; the question is, shall they be submitted to a collective vote, or shall they be submitted separately? The committee by whom the section was reported, thought it better that the vote should be taken on each separately, and I am still of that opinion, whether the Convention think so or not. And, sir, the section proposed to be stricken out contains another provision, which, in the opinion of the committee—and it is my own opinion, too—is of some importance. It is, that, while any particular amendment or amendments were undergoing consideration, either in the Legislature or before the people, no new amendment shall be proposed. By this means the people will not have bundles of amendments thrust upon them at once. Some pass through one stage of progress, and others through another—some before the Legislature for their action, and some before the people for their ratification or rejection. It appears to me that it is better there should be separate consideration given to each amendment that is proposed to be made in the Constitution.

Mr. NEWMAN. The question of future amendments to the Constitution, is one that the people will look upon with some degree of interest. It is one that we should not allow the public mind to be agitated by every year. It should occur only at stated periods. I am for leaving it to the Legislature to recommend certain changes, and to submit those changes to the electors at stated periods, but not every year. I would not have the country agitated with propositions to amend the organic law year after year. For the purpose of testing the sense of the House, I move to amend the amendment by striking it out, and inserting the following:

“The General Assembly may, at its first session after six years from the adoption of this Constitution, and every ten years thereafter, by a vote of three-fifths of each branch thereof, recommend to the electors of the State any alteration or amendment to this Constitution, and provide for submitting any such alteration or amendment to the vote of such electors; and if a majority of such electors vote in favor of such alteration or amendment, the same shall be adopted and form a part of the Constitution.”

The reason why I have fixed the period for commencing to propose such amendments at six years after the adoption of the Constitution, is this: that we may, by possibility, omit to fix something in the Constitution, and in that case ten years should not be allowed to elapse before the omission be supplied. Indeed, I am not sure that it would not be better to say four years instead of six, so that we may have an opportunity of testing the Constitution, and ascertaining whether there be any defects occasioned by omission or mistake, and that we may remedy them without waiting for the lapse of ten years. But, after that, it does seem to me that every ten years will be often enough to agitate the public mind on the subject of amendments to the fundamental law of the land. This will be sufficiently often in order to keep progress with the pace and improvement of the age in the science of government. It will enable the Legislature to call the attention of the people at certain periods to the amendment of the Constitution. Those amendments will be discussed by the Legislature, and then submitted to the people for their adoption or rejection. There will be then, a healthy and matured public opinion on the subject; and when such amendments, thus matured, are adopted, the affairs of the country will progress in a suitable manner; and the country will not be agitated or disturbed in each successive year, with questions about the amendment of the Constitution. It seems to me, therefore, that the better course is to fix stated periods, and have them at least sufficiently wide apart to let such amendments as may be desired, be well matured before they are adopted.

Mr. OWEN. I think, sir, that it is desirable that there should not be too great instability in regard to our Constitution. That is quite true. But now let us see how the gentleman from Wayne proposes to remedy this. He prescribes a certain period of time when—and when alone—amendments shall be submitted. Now, sir, if we have the right to fix those periods at ten years, we have an equal right to fix them at twenty or sixty years apart. We may say that, for sixty years no amendment shall be submitted, no matter what inconveniences may be experienced in regard to some slight blunder that we may have committed here. No matter what may be the result of such blunders, we must wait all that time before it can be altered. Sir, I do not believe that any practical difficulty will result if the matter be left open; if we impose no restrictions in regard to future amendments. I do not think it is too great a check to require that amendments shall be submitted at two Legislatures. I think such a course would operate more favorably than to have certain stated periods for proposing amendments.

Mr. KELSO. If I am to choose between the two propositions, I prefer to vote for that which has been introduced by the gentleman from Posey, because he manifests a better understanding of the necessities of the people than the gentleman from Wayne (Mr. Newman). And, sir, I will undertake to predict that for the first six years, every year the Legislature will be overwhelmed with applications to amend this Constitution which we have had so much pains in framing, if the people ever should adopt it, a thing about which I am not at all certain. And, I wish to say now to those who desire that it should be adopted, that they ought to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Posey, for I believe, and from all the evidences around me, I am strengthened in the belief, that if there be not some easy path pointed out by which the people may have the means afforded of having amendments made to the Constitution, they will, in justice to themselves, and in the exercise of their good sense, and as a rebuke to this Convention, vote the Constitution down. Now, I say, leave the road open; make it clear and plain; make it as smooth and as easy as possible for the people to amend the Constitution, and make it as they wanted us to make it when they sent us here. They may then adopt it. Gentlemen have done too much [Confusion and laughter]. Gentlemen may laugh and chuckle over it, but when they come to tender their services to come back and amend the Constitution again, they will find themselves slightly mistaken. [Cries of "Consent, consent."]

Now, I say, I think the proposition of the gentleman from Posey is the better one of the two, although if the proposition of the chairman of the committee had been carried out, with the amendment he desired to make to it, it would perhaps have been preferable, which, together with the section now offered, would have made the provision complete, and we should have had the action of two successive Legislatures, as well as of the people, in relation to any amendment hereafter to be made in the Constitution.

The question being on the amendment to the amendment—

Mr. NEWMAN. If no other gentleman desires to speak, I have a few words to say in reference to the amendment which I have offered. It proposes that after six years there may be a vote of each branch of the Legislature, recommending an amendment to the Constitution, if the Constitution be adopted; and that every ten years thereafter a like course may be pursued. The object of fixing particular periods for this purpose is this: if you allow the question of amending the Constitution to be agitated every year before the Legislature, you might as well authorize them to call a Convention for the purpose of making amendments, for it would occasion less inconvenience and expense to hold Conventions frequently, than it would to permit the continual agitation of the question before the Legislature.

It will be as certain as the return of the seasons, that propositions for amending the Constitution will consume the time of the Legislature, session after session. The time of the Legislature will be spent, and the public money will be spent in this way, without attaining any good. But if you have stated periods fixed, then you will only have the consumption of time and the attendant agitation at those stated periods. And, after that period has passed by, the public mind will settle down into its accustomed tranquility, and so remain until the arrival of the next stated period for making further amendments. In the mean time, the Legislature will attend to its appropriate duties, without being engaged day after day in agitating the question of amending the Constitution, as they would be if you leave the matter open for them to act upon year after year. It may be that ten years is too long an interval. I think not. The matter, however, is subject to amendment. If ten years be considered too long a period, the words can be stricken out and six years inserted in lieu thereof. We may also adopt a provision that at stated periods the people may call a Convention to revise the whole instrument.

Mr. STEELE. I have a few words to say on this subject, for I view it as being one of the most important subjects which it is the duty of this Convention to consider. The manner in which we have heretofore amended our Constitution, and the proper mode of amending it hereafter, are questions that have been a good deal discussed in my county. My opponent in the canvass took the ground that the gentleman from Wayne has taken in regard to agitating the public mind. I then said, and say now, that I have no inclination whatever to restrict the power of the people to amend the Constitution whenever they may see proper to do so; that is, whenever it may be the clearly expressed will of the majority. I have no fears about the agitation of the public mind. I think it accords with the doctrines of our free government to say that the public mind should always be watchful of the public interest. If the public mind be not competent to take care of the public interest, so far as the supreme law of the land is concerned, this Constitution is not competent. [Cries of "Consent! Consent!"] This being my opinion, I go directly for the proposition of the gentleman from Posey.

All the difference between the views of that gentleman and my own in regard to this matter, is simply this: It will be recollected that I introduced a resolution in the early part of the session, declaring it was proper that it should be in the power of the Legislature, when pe-tioned by a majority of the voters of the State, to propose such amendments to the Constitution as in their wisdom they might deem necessary, and submit them to the people for ratification. We have gone to a considerable length in placing restrictions upon the Legislature, and the people themselves; and if you put in this additional restriction, it will be a determining point with me in governing my vote upon the final adoption of the Constitution. If we should find that there is an imperfection still, after all our efforts to make it perfect, I desire that it shall be within the reach of the people to remedy that imperfection, either by striking out something contained in the Constitution or by inserting something new. Why is it that we should attach so much weight to the idea of the inviolability of our fundamental law? If it contain errors shall we not correct them? If it sanction abuses are we to be prevented from correcting those abuses, through our veneration for established usages? Such a doctrine is not consistent with our theory of government. We live in an age of progress. Have gentlemen so great a reverence for antiquity that every change is to be prohibited? The very purpose for which we were sent here was to make improvements in our system of government, to avail ourselves of all the lights which the experience of other States and of our own furnishes us, in order to make our organic law as perfect as it is possible to make it, and as consistent with the theory and practice of free government as it is in our power to do. But when we have done all this, shall we say that we have arrived at the farthest point in the progress of improvement—that no farther advance can be made—that we have attained perfection—that there will hereafter be no necessity for alteration—that we are to remain stationary and seek no further advance in the science of government? It appears to me that gentlemen are assuming for their work a degree of merit to which it is not, perhaps, fully entitled.

I say, sir, I shall go for the amendment of the gentleman from Posey. It is better adapted to the spirit of our institutions, and far more in consonance with the feelings of the American people than any other.

Mr. PETTIT. I shall not detain the Convention but for a moment. I doubt the propriety of putting any provision of this kind into the Constitution. I hold it is the right of the people, at any time, to assemble in Convention and to make for themselves or alter their fundamental or paramount law. It is idle for us to say that the Constitution shall not be amended, except at certain periods. You may as well say it shall not be amended for fifty years, as to say it shall not be amended for five years. We do not know what exigencies may arise which will require a change in the fundamental law. It is idle for us to attempt to deprive the people of the power to make such changes. We cannot do it; it is not in the nature of things. We may say we will have this rule for our guide, and so long as we choose to abide by it it will be our rule of action, but no longer. So soon as we abrogate or abandon it, just so soon it ceases to be our guide.

But although I oppose putting anything into the Constitution on this subject, and although my views in regard to it may be considered revolutionary, in order that all things may be done "decently and in order," as St. Paul says to Timothy, [laughter, and boisterous applause,] and to comply with public opinion—with the public expectation on this subject—I will propose—if the present proposition be voted down—the following:

"The Legislature may, at its regular session, call a Convention to amend or alter the Constitution."

Now that is all I think we ought to put into the Constitution. I am not one of those who believe that every man in this Convention is to go home disgraced and repudiated—there will, in my opinion, be some exceptions to the rule, at any rate—I believe that the masses of the people will see that we have labored assiduously day after day to put wholesome provisions in the Constitution, to save the State from rash and imprudent legislation, and to secure order and establish the authority of the State. Those who have thus labored, I doubt not, will meet the commendation they deserve; they will have lost nothing by their labor. Nor am I of opinion, sir, that the Convention has become so odious that the people will refuse to call another, or that they will be willing to suffer oppression, or wrong, rather than incur the expense of calling another Convention. Sir, if I believed that such was the feeling of the people of Indiana, I should hold that they were unworthy of an efficient Constitution. What will this Constitution cost the voters of the State? The cost will not exceed fifty cents to each voter—it will not exceed ten cents for every citizen. What is that in comparison with the advantage of the security to persons and property, to be derived from this instrument? Ten cents, sir, in a long round of years! What burthen is it that the people should pay ten cents apiece in order that their liberties and their property may be secured by constitutional laws? They who are reluctant to pay this price for such benefits, ought not to have the advantages of having laws administered, and order preserved, but they ought to return to savage life. If you enjoy the benefits of civilization, you must make a corresponding sacrifice of time and money. Sir, I have no doubt that the Constitution we shall present to the people will be the best Constitution that has been framed by any State in the Union—I believe it will be so regarded by them—and he who thinks to make for himself popularity by opposing it, is digging his own political grave. Yes, sir, it will sink him so low that the hand of resurrection shall never be able to reach him. [Applause.]

Mr. RARIDEN. In regard to amending the fundamental law of the State, I suggest to gentlemen whether it will not better accord with convenience and economy to make provision in the Constitution for amending it if amendment be necessary; in fact, to provide a convenient mode for the expression of public sentiment in regard to the improvements hereafter to be made in the organic law.

I do not think the Constitution we are forming will be entirely free from objections; but it appears to me, it would perhaps occasion inconvenience, that there should be a provision authorizing the people to call a Convention at short intervals. I suggest that when the work of this body comes to be acted upon, and if it should be found to be defective, whether it is not the part of wisdom to provide a mode by which it may be amended, without the expense of calling a Convention. The proposition of any of the gentlemen will answer the purpose as well as the original section. For my part, I should prefer to see the instrument tested from the time of its going into operation until about the year 1855. When we have had five years' experience of its practical working, I would allow amendments to be proposed and every five years thereafter. This would avoid the inconvenience of agitating the subject every year, and it would be the means of making the instrument as perfect as it is possible to make it.

Mr. BRACKEN demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being first taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Wayne,

It was decided in the negative.

So the amendment of the gentleman from Wayne was not adopted.

The question then being upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Putnam, as amended by the proposition of the gentleman from Posey, (Mr. Owen,) and which had been accepted by him,

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken, there were—yeas 78, nays 48—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Frisbie, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warlick, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kinley, Lockhart, Maguire, Mather, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Snook, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—78.

NAYS.—Messrs. Beeson, Barry, Borden, Bracken, Brookbank, Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Colfax, Crawford, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Edmonston, Foley, Garvin, Haddon, Hawkins, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kendall of Wabash, Logan, March, May, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Pettit, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robinson, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Trimby, Watts, Wiley, and Wunderlich—48.

So the amendment of the gentleman from Putnam was adopted.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the section, as amended.

The section, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. KELSO proposed an additional section, to the effect that this article shall be submitted to a separate vote of the people.

I have (said Mr. K.) offered this section in good faith; and I suppose as soon as some other gentlemen get the floor, a motion will be made to lay it on the table, and that it will be laid there. [Cries of "Consent, consent."] But, before it is laid there, I beg the indulgence of the Convention, while I make a few remarks. It has been intimated, by one of the Gods of Indiana, that those who oppose the adoption of this Constitution, are digging their own graves. Sir, some of us may live to see him politically buried yet; it is not at all impossible.

Mr. PETTIT. Yes, sir, it is utterly impossible. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELSO. Now the new Constitution may or may not be adopted by the people; that is a question which we should not be too certain about, in our prophecies. I for one think it ought not to be adopted, and I have so much confidence in the good sense of the people of Indiana, that I think they will not adopt it. But if the Convention will adopt the section I have proposed, and make it a part of the Constitution, so that this article may be submitted to the people as a separate proposition, if they adopt that article, and choose to reject the balance of the Constitution, then the matter will be open for the action of the Legislature, and they may make such amendments as the people desired when they sent us here. They may change the time of meeting of the Legislature from annual to biennial—they may divert the seminary fund, and give it to common schools, and they may make other important amendments; among others, you will find the number of Senators and Representatives reduced.

If they choose, on the contrary, to adopt the Constitution, no harm is done by my proposition. It merely affords an opportunity for the people to pass upon this matter, and do themselves justice—to remove this heap of restrictions that we are trying to impose upon them, and give them an opportunity to amend the Constitution as they wanted to have it amended, but not as we have done it.

Mr. BRACKEN moved that the section be laid upon the table.

Mr. KELSO demanded the yeas and nays.

Pending the question,

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

Mr. BORDEN'S REMARKS

On Banking and Currency.

[The following remarks were delivered on various occasions, and are now published in a collective form.]

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. President, I have no apology to make when I ask the attention of the Convention, while I offer some remarks upon this important subject, differing as I do so materially with one of my colleagues in the views which he has expressed on this floor. I may with justice say, that the question of banking and currency demands at our hands the most mature and deliberate consideration. There is no question more intimately connected with the business and interests of the community than this. Indeed some are, and perhaps very properly, disposed to consider this the great question of the session. I find from those who have come up here from various parts of the State, that our constituents are looking with very deep interest to our proceedings on this subject. It seems that they are expecting from us some action that will for many years settle the policy of Indiana upon the subject of banking and currency. I think, then, that it is our duty, in the treatment of this question, to discard every interested consideration, and to sacrifice our personal preferences and individual views upon the altar of the public good, and endeavor to adopt such a system as will best promote the welfare of the great people who have sent us up here to frame the organic law of the State.

Sir, the question has been asked me frequently, since I have been here, "whether or not I was friendly to banks?" and I have as uniformly replied that I was not only not opposed, but rather favorably inclined to a well regulated and properly restricted system of banking. I am disposed to view banks (when properly regulated) as among the many excellent institutions which so peculiarly characterize modern society and the present order of things, and contrast so favorably with the institutions of an earlier era. For one, I should as soon think of dispensing with our splendid steam boats on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and resorting to the old "broad-horn" flat boats, for the purpose of navigating those waters, as to dispense with banks, and resort to the state of things that existed in Europe before their introduction there.

I presume this Convention will readily excuse me if I trespass upon their patience in giving even a cursory account of the rise and progress of banks, from the first establishment of these institutions in Italy, by the Jews and Lombard merchants, down to the introduction of the new banking system lately adopted in New York, and which many are disposed to consider so perfect that beyond it nothing is to be hoped for or desired. But, suffice it to say, that banking in some shape or form now exists in every civilized country in the world, and will probably, in my opinion, from the very organization of society, continue to exist in our own country also.

Banks, if I understand the matter aright, are of three kinds: banks of deposit, banks of discount, and banks of circulation or issue. Now, sir, the bank of deposit simply is such a bank as the savings' banks which have existed for many years in Europe, particularly in Scotland, and have for some years been established in many cities in the East. I am happy to say that these institutions are constantly on the increase, and I hope to see the time when they will be extensively established in our own State. The object of this kind of banks is simply to receive and invest the savings of the day laborer. Indeed I recollect very well, at the time the arrangement was made with our bondholders, that one of the strongest appeals to our magnanimity and integrity came from one of these institutions in New York, stating that they had received and invested the sum of $175,000 of the savings of the day laborers, and asking us to make provision for the payment of it.

The next kind of banks, sir, are banks of discount. These institutions are usually established by capitalists, men who have acquired property and are disposed to retire from active business, yet who will take stock in banks of this kind as a means of making money, entrusting the management of the concern to younger and more active business men. Banks of this kind usually buy and sell bills of exchange, and discount the paper of business men at short dates. It is necessary to say, however, that banks of deposit and of discount are most usually in this country united in the same institution; they are in fact with us so many trust companies—that is, trust companies for the men of wealth who have invested their capital in these establishments. These banks receive money on deposit, allowing interest on the deposit at a less rate than that for which they discount the paper of merchants, traders, manufacturers, and others.

When I say, sir, that I would desire to see banks established among us, I of course mean banks similar to the "Savings' Banks." I desire to see their introduction into Indiana, because I think they would cultivate among the people, as they have in Scotland and elsewhere, more general habits of economy and frugality. They would tend to bring all the ready money of the country into active use, and thus stimulate industry and add to the real wealth of the State, instead of this capital being permitted to lie dormant and unproductive in the tills and chests of the people.

Nothing, sir, has tended in Scotland to make every dollar of money so active as this system of allowing a small compensation for the money deposited with the banks; and I believe that the introduction of the general banking system into our State will be productive of the same results here as it has been elsewhere.

And, sir, why a general law should not be passed, by which persons might associate as bankers, receive money on deposit, buy and sell bills of exchange, and discount bills and notes, I cannot perceive, unless it be to secure a more perfect monopoly to the State Bank. In my humble opinion, the act passed in January, 1841, conferring the exclusive privilege of banking in this State upon the State Bank, should be repealed. All admit that credit is necessary to commerce; hence, the discounting of the paper of business men, and especially of small traders, is a matter of the greatest importance. Besides, when the business is open alike to all, it creates a healthy competition that must necessarily result to the benefit of the public. But chartered banks, especially State Banks, are too unwieldy, and their rules are too fixed and unalterable, to afford the necessary accommodation to business men of small means. This kind of banks will not alter their rates of interest, nor will they usually change the length of time at which they discount paper to suit the convenience of small traders. But under a general system, individual banks and bankers are, in consequence of the great competition they have to meet, induced to lengthen or shorten their accommodations in order to suit the convenience of their customers, the state of the money market, and the wants of the business men with whom they deal. No one, I suppose, sir, will deny the necessity of the establishment of banks of this kind, as they will not only change the rate of interest to suit the situation of the money market, but will also discount a small note or bill as readily—and perhaps give it the preference—as a large one. One of the great evils resulting from the mode of doing business in the branches of our State Bank, is, that men of small means cannot easily borrow of them; the branches are not disposed generally to engage in business transactions, unless they be to a considerable amount. I am favorably inclined to a general banking system in preference to a State Bank system, because it will not only be productive of more good, but will accommodate a greater number of the community; and it is, therefore, more consistent with my notions of liberty and equality than the present system.

I come now, sir, to speak of another kind of banks, and that is, of banks of circulation—in other words, banks in whom the government confides that great power and delicate trust, of making a currency; in fact, it means not to coin gold and silver to circulate and form a standard of value, but simply to manufacture money out of rags, and to increase or decrease the quantity at their sovereign will and pleasure. It is to this description of banks that I always have been, am now, and no doubt ever will be uncompromisingly opposed. Gentlemen may smile when I speak of banks of circulation as separate from banks of deposit and discount. But allow me to say to them that such banks do exist. I think, sir, it was in 1844, that the currency or issue department of the Bank of England was entirely separated from the discount branch of the establishment. In point of fact there are two banks now established in that country under the name of the Bank of England. The business of manufacturing paper money is united to the mint, and is now entirely under the control of the officers of the government; while the deposit and discount business is vested in the Governor and Directors of the Bank of England. But in this country, we have been so long in the habit of uniting the whole business in the one institution, that most persons seem to think they are one and inseparable, and that one cannot exist without the other. It is full time, however, that the public mind should be taught to consider them as separate and distinct forms of business. But I have not time to dwell on this part of the subject.

I say, sir, I am opposed to banks that are authorized to manufacture and put in circulation paper as money; of my reasons, but one or two have I time now to mention. The first objection I have to the system is for the reason that in my opinion it is an open violation of the Constitution of the United States. I have read the history of my country to no purpose, if it be not found that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution of the United States to fix upon a permanent standard of value, which should be of gold and silver, and forever to forbid the circulation of paper money in the country.

When we recollect the distresses which the use of paper money inflicted upon the country, not only prior to and during the revolutionary war, but up to the formation of the Federal Constitution, should we be surprised at the dislike which those great patriots exhibited to the paper money system? One of the ablest men in the Convention which formed the Constitution of the United States—I allude to the late Chief Justice Ellsworth—when speaking on this subject, used this emphatic language: “Now is the favorable moment to shut and bar the door against paper money.” These great and good men had witnessed the evil influence of paper money, not only upon the business transactions of the community, but what was of much more importance in their view, they saw its dire effect upon the morals of the country. Hence, they expressly provided in the Constitution of the United States, that Congress should never make anything but gold and silver a legal tender, and prohibited the States not only from coining money, but expressly forbade them to issue a paper circulation. To the general government, there is exclusively committed the delicate trust of coining money, and of regulating the value of foreign coins. While the Federal Constitution was under consideration in the several States, they all admitted that this provision was a sovereign cure for the acknowledged evils of paper money. The Father of his Country, in a letter to a friend says: “I do not scruple to declare, that if I had a voice in your council, it would have been given decidedly against a paper circulation, on the general principle of its utility as a representative, and the necessity of it as a medium. To assign the reasons for this, would be as unnecessary as tedious. The ground has been so often trod, that hardly a place remains untouched. In a word, the necessity arising from the want of specie, is represented as greater than it really is. I contend that it is by the substance, and not with the shadow of a thing, that we are to be benefited.”

The celebrated Fisher Ames, who first distinguished himself in the Convention which assembled in Massachusetts in 1788, to ratify or reject the Constitution of the United States, said: “In spite of national beggary, paper money has still its advocates, and probably its martyrs. Never did experience more clearly demonstrate the iniquity of any system, than it has done of this.” He then goes on to say, that in defiance of demonstrations, parties still continue to manufacture paper money.

I could quote volumes of such extracts, to show that the framers of the Constitution resisted the introduction of the paper money system into this country, and it was not until they found that the States were disregarding, as they did, the Constitution of the Union, and were doing indirectly what they were expressly forbidden to do, by incorporating banks, with the power to put in circulation paper to represent money, that they reluctantly consented to establish a national bank, with the vain hope that it would regulate the local banks. The national bank, however, contrary to their anticipations, instead of acting as a restraint, only added fuel to the fire, and tended very much to the multiplication of local banks, and led to those monetary troubles which so much disturbed business transactions, at the close of the last century.

I cannot but think, sir, that our forefathers were disposed to consider banking (I mean, of course, banking properly so called) as a branch of trade which they designed should be left to the States, and with which the general government should have nothing to do. I have no doubt that they designed to leave it open to all, under such restrictions and regulations as the States, in their wisdom, might impose. But it is very evident they considered the subject of currency as an entirely different matter, and intended to commit that subject exclusively to the general government. I am satisfied they never intended that the States themselves, or corporations created by them, or individuals under the laws of the States, should either directly or indirectly interfere with this great question—currency.

Then, sir, constitutional scruples, if no other reasons operated, would deter me from investing the Legislature with the power of authorizing any person or association of persons to put paper in circulation as money. I am willing, however, to give the Legislature power to pass a general law on the subject of banking, provided they shall first submit it to the people for their ratification or rejection. I am induced to do this because the courts have virtually recognized the power in a State to authorize the issue of paper money; and although their reasoning has not satisfied my mind, still if such a bill were sanctioned by a direct vote of the people, I am willing to submit. But, sir, I cannot give a vote here that will directly authorize the Legislature, without the consent of the people, to create a banking system.

But, sir, I am also opposed to the issue of paper money to take the place of specie, for another reason, and that is, that while this power is vested in any man, or set of men, it must and will, from the very nature of things, be abused; and tremendous revulsions in trade and in the financial condition of the country will be the consequence. Sir, we may throw about the exercise of this power what guards and checks and restraints, we please, still the system itself is at fault: and, in my opinion, no legislative enactments will ever be able to restrain it from abuse. Sir, the effort has been made to do it but has failed. Remodel it as often as you please, while the evil principle that confers on individuals, or associations, the right to manufacture and put into circulation, paper for money, remains in the system the same fatal consequences will always follow its introduction into any country. But, sir, let me again repeat that it is against the system of paper circulating for money, and not against a well regulated system of banking that all my objections lie.

It is proper, on the present occasion, that we should recall to our recollection the results of the paper system in our country, for I have not time to notice, even incidentally, its effects in the mother country.

In the year 1817, according to the report of Mr. Crawford, then Secretary of the Treasury, the amount of paper currency in the country was about $110,000,000. In 1822 it was reduced down to $44,000,000, being a reduction of more than one half! I, of course, pass over, without notice, for want of time, several other revulsions of less notoriety, previous and subsequent to that period, and mention this instance in consequence of the well authenticated facts connected with the expansion and contraction of our currency at that time. To portray the evils caused by these monetary revulsions, occurring, too, as they did when the old bank of the United States was in the successful tide of its prosperity, I shall not undertake. It has been done so ably by the greatest of our living statesmen and writers, that I will ask the indulgence of the Convention to be allowed to read a short extract from his speech on that subject. It may be found in Niles' Register, vol. 26, page 378.

"In casting our eyes around us, the most prominent circumstance which fixes our attention, and challenges our regret, is the general distress which pervades the whole country. It is forced upon us by numerous facts, of the most incontestible character. It is indicated by the diminished exports of native produce—by the depressed condition of our foreign navigation—by our diminished commerce—by successive unthreshed crops of grain, perishing in our barns and yards for the want of a market—by the alarming diminution of the circulating medium—by the enormous bankruptcies, not limited to the trading classes, but extending to all orders of society—by the universal complaint of the want of employment and of the consequent reduction of the wages of labor—by the ravenous pursuit after public situations, not for the sake of their honors, and the performance of their public duties, but as a means of private subsistence by the reluctant resort to the perilous use of paper money—by the intervention of legislation in the delicate relations of debtor and creditor, and, above all, by the low and depressed state of almost every description of property in the country, which has, on an average, sunk not less than fifty per cent. within a few years.

The truth is, that no class of society suffers more in the present stagnation of business than the agricultural class. That is the necessary effect of the depression of agriculture, the principal business of the community. The wages of able bodied men vary from five to eight dollars a month; and such has been the want of employment in some parts of the Union, that instances have not been unfrequent of men working for a mere subsistence. If the wages of labor here and in England are compared, they will be found not to be essentially different."

If, sir, there be one axiom in political economy more firmly settled than another, it is that the value of money, whether it consist of specie or paper, is depreciated in exact proportion to the increase of its quantity in any given state of the demand for it. If, for example, the banks in 1837 doubled the quantity of the circulating medium by their successive issues, they thus produced a general degradation in the whole mass of the currency, including gold and silver, proportioned to the redundancy of the issue, independent of the relative depreciation of bank paper at different places, as compared with specie. The argument of the gentleman from Cass (Mr. Biddle) was conclusive, to my mind, that the whole property of the country is affected precisely as the whole quantity of bank notes is increased or decreased. Keeping this idea in view, let us look at the history of banking in our country at another period. I have said that the paper currency of the United States was reduced from $110,000,000, in 1817, down to about $44,000,000, in 1822. Well, sir, the paper currency gradually rose again, until in 1837, it had expanded to the enormous amount of more than $150,000,000, being an increase from 1822, of about a hundred and six to a hundred and ten millions! Now, sir, allowing for the probable increase of the business of the country from 1822 until 1837, all, I think, will admit that the increase of currency was far beyond what the legitimate demands of commerce required in the intervening period. What was the result of this enormous addition to the circulating medium of the country? It was an unnatural rise in the price of property, a spirit of speculation and trading little better than gambling, which has had few parallels in the world's history, and which finally resulted in repudiation by some of the States, and the passage of a general bankrupt law. And yet, sir, this paper circulation which I have stated rose to $150,000,000 in fifteen years, was suddenly reduced down in about seven years, to little over fifty-eight or sixty millions, being a reduction of near a hundred millions. These events, sir, are yet fresh in our recollection; and it is, perhaps, unnecessary that I should further advert to them. But I think that the whole of the circumstances connected with the history of that period have fully justified another of our most distinguished public men in saying, "of all the contrivances for cheating the laboring class of mankind, no one has been more effectual than that which deludes them with paper money. This is the most effectual of inventions to fertilize the rich man's field by the sweat of the poor man's brow. Ordinarily, tyranny, persecution, and excessive taxation bear lightly on the happiness of the community, compared with fraudulent currencies, and the robberies committed by paper issues. Our own history has recorded for our instruction, enough, and more than enough, of the demoralizing tendencies, the injustice, and the intolerable oppression on the virtuous and well disposed, of a degraded paper currency authorized by law, or any way countenanced by government."

Before I leave this subject, I desire, sir, to direct the attention of the Convention to another fact. I hold in my hand "Hunt's Merchant's Magazine," for the month of December, 1850, a work universally respected for its accuracy in statistical information. The writer says that the returns show the following figures as the amount of notes in circulation and specie held by all the banks in Great Britain, France, and the United States, reduced to dollars. I shall not trouble the Convention with the statistics of the French and British Banks, but merely advert to what is said about banks in the United States. He says, in substance, that in all of the banks in this country, there are in round numbers, forty-eight millions of specie; and that their paper in circulation amounts to one hundred and thirty-five millions of dollars. Thus, sir, we can see that there has been a rise in the currency, in, comparatively speaking, a few years, of over seventy millions of dollars; and, in my opinion, sir, the currency will go on increasing for some years to come; but no doubt we will have another revulsion, such as we have twice experienced within the last thirty years. I cannot but think that, in forming any system of banking and currency for the people of this State, we ought to constantly bear these facts in mind.

In the course of the arguments which have taken place upon this subject, it was asked, "inasmuch as all, or nearly all, seem to admit that paper money of some kind will continue to be the chief circulating medium for many years, in this and other States of the Union, why should we not continue the State Bank, or one similar to it; and why should we lay it aside and adopt a general banking system that would be open to all?" Every one must answer this question for himself. So far as I am concerned, I have only to say that, if the power to coin, or rather make money, (for, practically, it is really nothing else,) is to be taken from the General Government—where, I contend, it was wisely placed by our forefathers—and conferred upon individuals, whether united in a corporation or not, then, in the language of an amendment we have already adopted, let it be open alike to all the people of Indiana on the same conditions. For, if banking, as is now contended, including the power to create a currency, be only a branch of trade, then, sir, it surely should cease to be a MONOPOLY. Sir, the banking system in most of the States of this Union—and in none so much as in our own—is a most odious monopoly—a system more in accordance, in my humble opinion, with the spirit and institutions of a monarchy, where monopolies are not only tolerated, but encouraged, than adapted to the requirements of a free people. How can we, after having inserted in our Constitution a provision prohibiting monopolies, and saying that no greater privileges shall be granted to one than shall be granted to another under similar circumstances, then turn immediately around, and in the same breath create a banking system, and invest it, not only with the exclusive power to create a paper currency, and thus increase or decrease the standard of value at their pleasure, but also confer upon them the exclusive monopoly of banking in this State? Can we, with any degree of consistency, extend such great and important privileges to one class of our citizens, and refuse them to others possessing equal claims?

Suppose, Mr. President, for the sake of argument, we admit that the American banking system must be continued, and paper money forever occupy the place of specie, must we necessarily continue the close corporation banking system of this State? The present State Bank is a system that admits of no competition or equality of privileges. I know it has been contended in this debate that, as but few have money to go into banking, under any system that might be adopted, therefore, it must practically result in a monopoly under whatever system we may establish. Let us examine this argument for a moment. It is not every man in Indiana who is able to own a carriage and a pair of carriage horses; riding in a carriage, then, is, according to this argument, a monopoly! If the Legislature should invest some five hundred persons with the exclusive right of riding in their carriages, then there might be some truth in the comparison. But the argument is such a one as does not need a reply. Every one must see that it is not correct in either theory or fact.

I do not, however, wish to be misunderstood. I do not pretend to say that, if you adopt the free banking system, such as has existed in New York, it will prove all that has been contended for it by its friends on this floor. My opinion, however, is, that, compared with our present State Bank, it is much to be preferred. But adopt what system you may, it is a mere choice between evils. I am too well aware, sir, that it is a characteristic feature of banks, under any and all systems, to be partial and exclusive in their operations, dispensing favors, or imposing hardships, as may best promote their interests; and hence, for one, I am not disposed to contend very strenuously for either system. Abuses will be the natural fruit which must spring from the discretionary power that will be invested in the managers, under any kind of regulations that you can adopt. The exercise of this power, and the partiality and favoritism which grows up around all these institutions, would cause it to be felt in every business community in which they are located. If, under even a free banking system, this evil will be felt, how much more does it operate when the business is a perfect monopoly, as it is in the State Bank? The fact is, sir, that the whole banking power is used in most of the branches in our State, for the benefit of the few to the exclusion of the many. No one will deny, I presume, that the tendency of the present system has been to increase the wealth of the favored few who have access to the bank and the means of influencing the directors and officers of the branches. Banks will have their favorites; those who control them are but men, with human sympathies, frailties and partialities. They will first assist their particular friends to the extent of their wants; and they will do this from personal and not from public considerations. And let me observe that it is in this way the monopoly feature of the present system is always odiously manifesting itself, and particularly in time of the greatest need. A public institution, created almost exclusively with the money of the State, should disregard all selfish objects and considerations. It is a fact too well known to be denied, that most of the branches of our State Bank, at the points at which they have been located, have their favorite customers, who are accommodated at all times.

Let me ask whether or not affording every accommodation to a few speculators and refusing it to the regular business merchant or mechanic, does not amount to a corporate monopoly? But even in case they did treat all alike in regard to accommodation, I should still oppose the State Bank system, because, as I have already stated, it is a monopoly. Not only this institution, but all other corporations lie open to the great objection, that the powers granted to them are taken from the mass of the residuary powers properly belonging to all, and are conferred upon a few. The principle of equal rights lies at the foundation of our institutions, and is, in truth, the corner stone of our entire system of government, both State and national.

What is the object of a bank charter? If I understand it correctly, it is to enable men to lend their credit at interest—or in other words to draw interest on what they owe. This is in effect the operation of the system. And, when any government not only grants such extraordinary powers as these, but also invests the persons upon whom these powers are bestowed, with other important privileges which are not enjoyed by the great body of the people, it is a violation of the principles of our government, because it restrains others from pursuing a certain branch of business which it is their natural right to do, and which, in my mind, there can be no excuse for violating. I have never been able to bring myself to believe that any system was correct which shuts out all competition, and creates a sort of nobility among us. No, sir; let banking be left on the same footing as all other mercantile pursuits, let it be left open to a healthy competition. Sir, one of the most profound of thinkers has no less philosophically than beautifully said that, "associated wealth is the dynasty of modern States." When the Legislature incorporates a few individuals as a company with the exclusive right to do the banking business of a million of people, they in fact, create, to the extent it goes, an aristocracy equal to any order of European nobility, and thus in spirit, if not in letter, violate the Constitution of the United States. The tendency of capital to concentrate into a few hands, thereby placing under its control all the elements from which wealth can be produced, is now stronger than ever. The wonderful, the magical progress of the arts and sciences enables the laboring classes to produce more wealth by their daily toil, but this wealth is, by means of a vicious currency, very easily transferred to the non-producers and capitalists of the country, and in their hands it becomes a new instrument to put down the feeble competition which labor endeavors to make against capital. Sir, the statesmen of this age must find some remedy to limit the power of capital over labor, or else the liberties of this people will perish as those of others who have gone before them. Some are disposed to think that the homestead exemption and the land limitation are the proper remedy. But, one thing in my mind is too clear to admit of argument, and it is that a chartered bank monopoly will tend much to heighten the evil which now exists to some extent, and which will be felt still more as our State advances in wealth. And this is another reason why I oppose the present State Bank or any other State Bank. I am satisfied that a paper circulation under any system tends to create great inequality in society and especially where it assumes the character of a chartered monopoly.

Sir, I cannot but think that the time has come when the progress of an enlightened public opinion invites, nay, I may say demands of us a relaxation from the restraints now imposed upon the business of banking in this State. I again repeat that if paper is to be put in circulation as money at all, let the business be left on the same footing with all others in the State—open to all who desire to engage in it—always providing, under proper regulations and restrictions. And, sir, let banking institutions, if we have any, be impartial and general in their operation. Under the present State Bank system, branches of that bank have been placed at points at which they have never been needed, and have been denied at points where they certainly should have been located.

One advantage at all events would be gained over the State Bank system by a general banking system, and it is this: Under the latter system banks could be obtained where a legitimate business existed to require their establishment; for no person having sufficient means to establish a bank, would feel disposed to locate himself at a point where business was dull and inactive, in the mere hope of creating a business by forcing the loan of his money? No, sir; he would be much more likely to obey the requirements of a business already created and demanding the advantages of banking facilities. The tendency of the system, by offering fair and equal terms to borrowers, would no doubt be to reduce the rate of interest, by reason of the competition it would produce among the banks. Under a general banking system equal and impartial justice would, through apprehension of rivalry, be secured to the customers of the banks. If one bank should under this system, make their bank a means of accommodation to a few only, the door of competition being thrown wide open, the evils would speedily correct themselves by the establishment of another bank. But, sir, if this Convention should decide that the present State Bank system shall continue, this evil cannot be corrected.

I have already alluded to the advantages which I think will result from the introduction of this system, by reason of its being likely to establish the custom of allowing interest on deposits, more or less depending on the length of time of the deposit, and thus will prevent the money from lying idle. From the particular description of security that this kind of bank would be required to give, I think we would be authorized in supposing that, in times of pressure and panic, the deposits would not be withdrawn, but would be suffered to remain, and thus enable the bank to continue their accommodation to business men with safety to themselves, and advantage to the public.

Sir, the system of banking now existing in the State of New York, and which it is proposed to introduce here, is mainly planned after the system of joint stock banking by private associations, which has been practiced in Scotland, and which has been in successful operation in that country for a century past, regulated alone on a scale of free competition of demand and supply, without a single failure during the whole of that period. Mr. Watt, of Edinburgh, long connected with the banks of that country, and one of the ablest of those who have written on the science of banking and currency, says: "The system of banking by two or three hundred individuals, on the ordinary principle of a mercantile partnership, whereby each partner becomes liable to the whole extent of his fortune for the debts of the association, had its origin in Scotland, where it has flourished for upwards of a century, and given to that kingdom a circulating medium more valuable than the currency of any kingdom in Europe." Again, he observes, "and when this system was established in Scotland the beneficial effects of so splendid a discovery could not be conjectured." The personal responsibility which this system imposed on each of the partners, it is said, formerly deterred some of the richest individuals from connecting their fortunes with joint stock banking in that country, but after trial, it was found to be so safe and stable, that in modern times the most opulent, and largest land owners are desirous of participating in these associations, and frequently connect themselves with them. The vigilant circumspection which necessarily results from unlimited personal responsibility is a perfect substitute for a legal restraint, as to the amount of their issues. And, besides this, over issues are constantly checked by the active competition of unconnected and independent associations which are continually collecting and throwing back each other's issues for redemption. The same author observes: "The system of mutual espionage and rivalry which exists among banks of this kind is another source of security to the public.

"That this system is enforced," says he, "upon every joint stock bank by their sister banks, who exchange notes and checks with them, must be admitted."

It is in this way, sir, that a safe and sound circulating medium—so far as it is possible to exist where paper constitute a portion of it—is usefully and conveniently supplied to the people of that country, regulated alone like all other merchandize by competition, and by demand and supply, and entirely exempt from those baneful vicissitudes which bank monopolies so frequently generate. The spirit of free competition is so active in those associations that they must necessarily accommodate themselves to the wants of the community, and thus there are no complaints of their being monopolies. I would be glad, sir, to dwell on the history of those institutions, and of their wonderful success in developing the resources of that country, but time will not permit me to do.

Some of the gentlemen who have advocated the cause of the State Bank, contended that banking based upon United States stocks, or stocks of our own State, and requiring them to be deposited with an officer of State, are not a perfect security for the redemption of the circulation. To this position, I most cordially yield my assent. But allow me to ask, is it not a better security than there is under the old system? That is the question we have to decide. It was thought, when the old system of paying in the stock of banks by giving stock notes was abandoned, and the stockholders required to pay in the specie, that a great improvement was made. But, sir, the change was not so important as some seemed to suppose, for a specie capital actually paid in, is no more security, and as far as I can see, makes the people not a whit safer, than if the banks had been allowed to go into operation with stock notes substituted for specie, as the basis. Why? For the reason, that although a specie capital may be actually paid in, still, the property of the bank is subject to whatever disposition the officers of the bank may choose to make of it, and that without any violation of the charter. A great deal has been said here about a specie basis, as contradistinguished from a basis of State or United States bonds, to be deposited with the Auditor of State. Now I would ask, is any one so ignorant as to suppose that the money paid in, to form a basis for a paper circulation, is actually kept there, for the redemption of the issues? When the bank goes into operation, it may and usually does discount for its respective stockholders, their private notes, and thus the stockholders may withdraw their specie, as soon as the bank is fairly under weigh. Such, in fact, is the operation of the system generally. We know that our State Bank, as well as other banks, keep on hand a very small proportion of specie, compared with their whole circulation. The specie now in this institution, according to the report lying on our tables amounts to only $1,197,880 58, whilst its circulation is $3,548,267 50.

Sir, under a general banking law, the banks would be compelled of necessity to keep up the same amount of specie in their vaults, to redeem their circulation, as the State Bank is now compelled to do, and in addition to that they would have United States or State stocks deposited with a public officer, equal to their circulation, to redeem their issues. Thus I look upon the stocks deposited with the State as an additional security, over and above what is now required by the charter of the present State Bank.

However, sir, it is but justice to myself, and due to candor and truth, to say, that although the plan of depositing stocks of the United States or of our own State, as security for the redemption of bank issues, is a decided improvement upon the old system of what was termed a specie basis alone, yet I am far from considering stocks a perfect security. Looking as I do upon the whole banking system of the country as founded on a fallacy, and that it is destined, sooner or later, to a tremendous explosion, I will not, by anything I may say or do here, hold out to the people the idea that stocks can contribute a perfect security in any banking system.

When I say that the American system of banking is the worst in the world, I am sustained in the assertion by the celebrated McCulloch, one of the greatest financiers of the age. I hold in my hand, sir, his great work, the "Commercial Dictionary." He says, at page 778, second volume, "The system of banking in America has recently attracted a great deal of attention in this country (England); and it certainly deserves to be carefully studied and meditated, were it only for the incontestible evidence which it affords, that how flourishing soever in other respects, a country cursed with a vicious banking system may be now and then involved in the greatest difficulties, and reduced almost to a state of bankruptcy." He then speaks of the tremendous revulsions that have been experienced in the monetary affairs of this country, and goes on to remark: "This nameless and apparently inexplicable state of things, is entirely a consequence of the American banking system, which seems to combine within itself everything that can make it an engine of unmixed evil. Had a committee of intelligent men been selected to devise means by which the public might be tempted to engage in all manner of absurd projects, and to be most easily duped and swindled, we do not know that they could have hit upon one half so likely to effect their object, as the existing American banking system. It has no redeeming quality about it, but is, from beginning to end, a compound of the basest quackery and imposture."

Again: on page 780 of the same volume he says:

"But the States have the power to compel all banks which issue notes as money, to give security for their issues. This, though it would not prevent destructive oscillations in the amount and value of the currency, would at all events prevent those ever recurring stoppages and bankruptcies and issues of paper money which render the American banking system one of the severest scourges to which any people was ever subjected. Common sense and experience alike demonstrate the inefficacy of all the regulations enacted by American legislatures to prevent the abuses of banking. It is in vain for them to lay it down that the issue shall never exceed a certain proportion of the capital of the bank, and so forth."

He then goes on to remark that "these regulations do very well as long as the banks are disposed to observe them;" and concludes by saying, "there is no way to avoid the evil but by the State taking security from the issuers." I fully concur, sir, in the views of this author, that there are inherent defects in the whole system, which never can be cured.

I was going to observe that I could very readily conceive of such a state of things as would prevent the United States and State stocks from making a perfect security for the redemption of bills issued upon them. Suppose, for instance, all the States in the Union should gradually fall into this system of banking, and that the whole indebtedness of the States, now amounting to considerably over $200,000,000, which, when added to that of the general government, will make about $300,000,000, should be invested in banking operations, it would of course cause a tremendous expansion of the currency of our country, and the spirit of speculation would probably become as rife as it was in 1837, and the consequences would be about the same as then. We would have a bloated system of credit, and there would follow an universal crash and the suspension of specie payments. Who, then, sir, could for one moment believe that if two or three hundred millions of United States and State stocks should be thrown into the market for the purpose of redeeming the circulation of these banks, purchasers could be obtained for any great part of them? Where could the specie be found to purchase such an amount of stocks? And, sir, would not the inevitable result be a reduction of the bonds to such a price that but little could be obtained for them? Would they not become a mere drug in the market, and consequently furnish but little means to redeem the circulation of the banks? All I contend for is, that whatever they would be worth, be it more or less, they would be so much more additional security for the redemption of the paper than exists at present under your State Bank system. For this reason, as far as the security of the billholder is concerned, I much prefer it as a system of banking, but not for the reason that I believe it is in any sense a perfect security to those who hold the issues of the bank.

There are some other reasons which I should be glad to present to justify the opinions I have expressed, that even with the addition of depositing stocks as a security for the redemption of paper issues, the security would not be as complete and perfect as could be desired; but I have only a short time left to allude to another matter, when I must necessarily close my observations upon the subject of banking. As I have advanced the opinion, sir, that there are great evils existing in the present system of American banking and paper money, I should feel that I had neglected the performance of my duty, if I did not, on the present occasion, throw out some suggestion as to the best means of remedying these evils. One of the greatest evils of our paper money system is that the minor channels of circulation instead of being supplied by specie, are occupied by small notes. As I have already said, one of the admitted evils of our paper currency is its tendency to expansion and contraction, and this is caused, in the opinion of some of our ablest financiers, mainly by our small note circulation. I know it has been contended that if you suppress the circulation of notes of a small denomination, you have not sufficient gold and silver to supply the place of the paper thus withdrawn from circulation. But, sir, it occurs to me that the time has come when men should lay aside such idle fears. For my part I do not believe that an amount of circulation consisting mainly of paper, or partly of paper and partly of the precious metals, can be kept permanently in circulation in a country, beyond the amount of specie which would circulate in said country, if there were no paper currency. It is true that for a short time the excess of paper may enhance prices and give an appearance of a high state of prosperity to the country. But, when the prices of all commodities are raised in such a country, higher than their relative prices, as compared in the other markets of the world, exportation will necessarily cease, heavy importation will commence, and specie will have of necessity, to go abroad to restore the balance of trade. The withdrawal of specie from the vaults of the banks, (and owing to our small note circulation, a great amount of specie is to be found in the vaults of the banks,) induces these institutions to curtail their discounts and issues, and then comes a panic—a falling in the prices of commodities even to below their intrinsic value, as compared with other countries, and then comes one of the tremendous revulsions which have, from time to time, involved so many of our citizens in bankruptcy and ruin.

Engaged as we are in an attempt to establish a banking system for our State, it is well worthy of inquiry, how are these evils to be cured? And, if we cannot entirely remove them, let us at least, make an effort to mitigate them and thus set an example to our sister States of the Union. I believe much can be done towards accomplishing this object, by introducing more specie into circulation; and this can be very easily affected by empowering the Legislature to suppress from time to time, the circulation of small notes. It must be obvious that if more of our currency were specie, the exportation of a small amount of it would not so materially affect the circulating medium of the country as it now does. In France the banks issue no notes of a less denomination than five hundred francs—about ninety three dollars of our money—and their circulation consists of about two-thirds or three-fourths of specie. In England no note of a less denomination than five pounds sterling—about twenty-three dollars of our money—is allowed to circulate, and their circulating medium consists of about one-half of paper and one-half of specie. And this, in the opinion of Gallatin, (whose great experience and learning as a financier and political economist, none will dispute,) is the proper proportion that paper and specie should bear to each other, in any country where it is desired to avoid and prevent those great fluctuations which are incident to the monetary affairs of a country in which the proportion of paper greatly exceeds that of specie. And while the name of that gentleman is in my mind, and least I should forget it, I hope the Convention will excuse me if I read a short extract from an essay of his, written some twenty years since. He remarks: "We cannot con-deal from ourselves that the specie paying banks are not only exposed to extraordinary drains from abroad, but are also controlled by moral causes, the effects of which cannot be always calculated, nor without great skill and discretion be always prevented. These never affect a metallic currency which has an intrinsic value, varying less than any other commodity and not at all depending as paper, upon confidence, fear, conjectures, or any of the fluctuations of public opinion. It is equally evident that extraordinary drains of specie, occasionally inconvenient when the currency is purely or principally metallic, may be fatal to one which consists of bank notes convertible at will into specie. Supposing the currency of the country to consist of a hundred millions, a drain of twenty millions from abroad, would produce great inconvenience, but not beyond that of contracting the metallic currency to that extent until commerce had supplied the deficiency. But if consisting of bank notes sustained by twenty millions of specie in the vaults of the banks, and the base being withdrawn, the whole fabric is at once overthrown and specie payments must be suspended."

In conclusion I shall take the liberty of reading one more brief extract from this same writer, which I think very pertinent to the branch of the subject I have been discussing. After stating the great advantages which accrued to the English people by suppressing the circulation of notes of less value than five pounds sterling, and the fact of raising the metallic currency of that country from one-fourth to one-half, and the effect of the measure in securing the country against fluctuations in its currency, he goes on to speak of our own country and the evils resulting from so great an excess of paper over the precious metals, and quoting the example of Pennsylvania, which has lately passed an act with the view of suppressing the circulation of all notes less than five dollars. He says: "But we should go still further than this, and in order to bring gold and silver more generally into circulation, all notes under the denomination of ten dollars ought to be suppressed."

REMARKS OF MR. MATHER,

In Convention, January 22d, on the subject of Law Reform.

MR. PRESIDENT: The length of time which the discussion of this subject has already occupied admonishes me that I ought not to detain the Convention at any considerable length at this moment. So much of the time of this Convention has been occupied in debate since its commencement, and effected so little good, in my judgment, that I had come to the conclusion not to trouble the Convention with any further remarks of mine. But, having been a member of the committee that reported the section now under consideration, and having advocated a reform in the practice of the law before my constituents, I feel that I ought not, in justice to myself, to record my vote on this subject, without offering a few reasons in explanation of the same.

Sir, I am in favor of "law reform;" but I cannot favor the section as reported by the committee on that subject, or any of the amendments proposed thereto.

While I admit the propriety and necessity of doing away with a great many of the forms and absurdities of our common law practice, I cannot consent to create, by this Constitution, three commissioners, who may hold their offices as long as the Constitution shall last, and who may, for the sake of continuing in so well paid an office, undertake to codify and change the whole of our laws.

In my judgment, such an attempt, whenever or wherever undertaken, will prove unsuccessful. The common law of England, which constitutes the great body of our laws, as well as the practice under it, has grown into a system by the experience of ages.

And, for one, I am opposed to entering upon any mere experiments in this branch of our Government, more than in any other. I believe experimenting in government, beyond such changes and alterations as are clearly dictated to us by experience, is dangerous to the best interests of society, and, in the great majority of instances, must prove destructive in their tendencies. That experience has pointed out to us many things in the practice of the law which ought to be modified, I admit; but, sir, while we entirely abolish the fictions in use in the actions of ejectment and trover, and do away, if you please, "with the distinct forms of actions now in use," I hope we shall be very careful in applying the pruning knife, that we do not cut off the real and substantial matters which are required in pleading, in order that parties may know the nature of the charge brought against them. Gentlemen, in their anxiety to provide a simple form of declaration, so that plaintiffs who have a good cause of action shall not be driven out of court because the action, as brought, has a wrong name, or is deficient in some matter of form, which does not affect or injure the other party, must not forget that there are two parties in court, and that there are other objects to be attained beside providing an easy way by which a man can obtain a judgment against his neighbor. I have seen cases where defendants had rights as well as the plaintiff. And however much gentlemen may desire to see the practice of the law simplified in such a manner that all our citizens may be able to prosecute and defend suits with success in our courts, I, for one, do not wish to see the law so simplified that a plaintiff may be allowed to file his declaration against his neighbor for entering upon his land and destroying his apple trees, and when he fails on the trial of the cause to prove the matters charged in the declaration, that he shall then, without having in any manner notified the defendant of his design, be allowed to introduce in evidence a promissory note, or prove an account for merchandise, and by that means recover a judgment, when, if the defendant had known that such matters were to be charged against him, he could have shown that the note was a forgery, or that the account had been fully paid. And when the defendant, in an action of assumpsit, shall reply to the declaration of the plaintiff that he has paid the note or account charged against him, it would be an act of injustice to the plaintiff to allow the defendant, under such an issue, to prove that the plaintiff had, two years before, committed an assault and battery upon him to his damage of double the amount claimed by the plaintiff; when, had the issue notified the plaintiff of the fact that such a matter was to be inquired of between them, he could have clearly proved that the assault and battery proved was in self-defense.

To allow such rules of proceeding in courts, would at once turn our courts of justice into engines of oppression in the hands of dishonest men. We might as well say that each party should file a piece of blank paper in court, and prove all he could with regard to every kind and nature of action upon the trial. And yet, sir, if we believe these commissioners would carry out the views of some gentlemen on this floor, who desire to take the lead in this question of law reform, and cry down as "Old Hunkers" every man who does not at once fall in with their notions upon this subject, this would be the kind of "law reform" which we should get.

If there are any gentlemen here who believe that the law can be so simplified that every man in the State, without study and without experience, can go into our courts and successfully compete with the man who has spent years of hard toil over his books when they were asleep, they might as well give up that illusion now as at any other time.

If we expect to maintain our present state of civilization, with all the various commercial and other interests of our State, we must expect to be governed by a system of laws which shall be as diversified and intricate as those interests themselves. And to understand and be able to administer justly such laws as are fit to govern a civilized people, will hereafter require, as it heretofore has required, the long and patient study of the best minds in the State. And, sir, I hope I shall not hear it again said upon this floor that lawyers oppose reform because their bread depends upon maintaining an incongruous system of practice. Such is not the fact.

I wish to support the proposition of my colleague from Lagrange, (Mr. Howe,) and shall therefore vote against the section and pending amendments. The section which he proposes accomplishes all which this section proposes directly, and makes it compulsory upon the Legislature to do these things, or provide commissioners to do it.

SPEECH OF MR. SMITH, OF RIPLEY, On Homestead Exemption, delivered in Convention.

The following section being under consideration:

"Sec. —. The privilege of the debtor to enjoy the necessary comforts of life, shall be recognized by wholesome laws, exempting a reasonable amount from seizure or sale for the payment of any debt or liability hereafter contracted."

The pending question being a motion to recommit with instructions,

Mr. SMITH moved to amend the instructions by striking out the words "hereafter contracted," and inserting in their stead, "after the passage of such law."

As this seems (said Mr. S.) to be a matter of criticism, perhaps the Convention will indulge me in a few remarks. It will be recollected, that, during the elaborate discussion on what is called the homestead exemption, I have not submitted a single remark. For this forbearance I claim some credit, and hope, therefore, that the Convention will indulge me for a few moments, at this time.

The amendment offered will strike out the words "hereafter contracted," and insert the words, "after the passage of such laws."

In the first place, I desire to submit a few remarks in regard to the proposition to amend which I propose. If the amendment prevail, it will strike out the words "hereafter contracted." Now it occurs to me that there is a difference between debt and liability to become indebted; and I think the difference will occur to gentlemen of the Convention upon a moment's reflection. I suppose the Convention intends to exempt the debtor from debts already contracted—debts in the common acceptance of the term. But, permit me to inquire whether it is entirely proper and expedient to secure every individual against that liability. Let me suppose an instance. If I understand the meaning of the Convention, it is to grant the Legislature the power to pass a homestead exemption law; and gentlemen have spoken of five hundred dollars as the amount proper to be exempted. Now, the case I desire to present to the Convention, is this: A father has a son, as many have, both profligate and unfortunate. Suppose him to be indicted for some trivial offense, and held to bail in the sum of two hundred dollars. His father, who is worth five hundred dollars only, would not be a suitable security; for he is exempted from "debt or liability," to the amount of all he is worth.

He would not be a good security, and the proper officer would not regard him as such. There are, also, numerous other instances in which the operation of such an exemption would amount to a disqualification of the person exempted. Suppose a man, worth just five hundred dollars, has a sister whose husband dies intestate. The law gives her the first right to administer on his estate, and she may desire to avail herself of that right; a surety, however, becomes a condition, precedent to its exercise. Her brother is, perhaps, the only person who is willing to become her surety; but the Constitution has exempted him from all liabilities "hereafter" to be contracted, to the amount of all he is worth. Of course he is not a competent security. Now when does this "hereafter" commence? Most assuredly at the day when this Constitution shall go into effect.

Well, sir, this provision confers the power upon the Legislature to pass all exemption laws—homestead and others. Suppose that body does not think proper to pass any laws at all on the subject, for five, ten, or a greater number of years. During all this time, be it long or short, debts have been accumulating. At length, after a longer or shorter period, the Legislature sees proper to exercise the power conferred by this section. Will not any law, then passed, have a retrospective operation—running back to the time when this provision, containing the word "hereafter," shall have been adopted and gone into effect? Thus, a man, before the passage of the law, may have contracted debts to the amount of five hundred dollars; and yet he can shelter himself under the operation of that law, from any and all contracts, into which, before that time, he may have entered. This result must inevitably follow. The Legislature will be bound either to pass no law of exemption at all, or to pass such law with the understanding that it will act retrospectively as well as prospectively—on past, present, and future liabilities.

In regard to the whole section, I desire to submit a remark. It confers on the debtor the privilege of enjoying the comforts of life to a reasonable amount. Let us inquire what these comforts are, and what sort of legislation you may expect to have under a constitutional provision of this kind? What are they? A farm—a house? Or will it not be construed to mean necessary provision and wearing apparel? Or could you, under this provision, exempt a farm, a house, and necessary food and clothing, all? If these comforts, then, which you are going to exempt, were left to some men to decide, they might determine that it would be very comfortable to have a little of the "Oh be joyful." But the reasonable amount, when you come to legislate upon this section, must, in the eyes of the Legislature, be construed to mean only the necessary amount of food and clothing to render him comfortable, and that amount must be reasonable.

Mr. President, in regard to this exemption of real estate, what have we done? By this section, it is contended, that we have secured the right of our people to a homestead exemption. Let us inquire into that. What is your constitutional provision?

When you grant a power, it is a whole power. You can not grant powers by halves. You have here granted the whole power in regard to exemptions. Well now, as we have seen, it is to be necessary food and clothing—a reasonable amount. You can not, under this section, go beyond that. I am clearly of opinion, that on a reasonable construction, the exemption cannot be carried beyond what is necessary. Well, then, if this view of the intent and meaning of this section be correct, when the Legislature comes to act upon it, must it not govern the action and define the scope of all exemption laws passed by that body? The exemption must be necessary for the comfort of the debtor, and reasonable in amount. That is a severe restriction to impose upon the Legislature; but it does occur to me as the real predicament in which this section will place it. I may be wrong, however, (for I am no lawyer,) and merely throw out these hints, leaving gentlemen to make such use of them as they may think proper. Some, perhaps, will regard them as hypercritical; but, I ask, why shall we not specify what we mean by the term reasonable? But suppose the Legislature should, at any time, exceed the power, and grant a great deal more than is strictly reasonable, and that the debtor should claim exemption under such a law. The Supreme Court, in such case, would most likely be called upon to determine the constitutionality of the law; and how will they construe the section now before us? It occurs to me that they must take the section as it is, and not as it may have been intended.

What kind of law, permit me to inquire, would the Legislature acting under this section, be most likely to pass, in reference to this matter. It would not be likely to exempt the same amount of property for a single man as for a man of family—at least it ought not. But, is it the intention of this Convention, to make it apply only to the head of families, or is it to the individual that you propose to grant the exemption? Of course it is to the heads of families only. But if so you have left out the necessary words of restriction; because, at the present it applies to all debtors, whether they have families or not. This should be guarded. We ought not to exempt the same amount to the single man, or man with only a wife, that we should to a man with a large family. Well, if it is your object to do a beneficent act, and give it an equal operation on all, you ought not to grant as much to a man with a family of six children, as to one with a larger family—say of eight—and if two of these eight children were blind or idiotic, the exemption ought to be still greater. When you look at the wording of this section, and the kind of legislation to which it points, there is little room to hope for such necessary discrimination.

Gentlemen have declaimed eloquently about the Jewish and Roman laws of debtor and creditor. Indeed, they have said much more of those laws, than of the one we desire to adopt. Those laws may have been good and wise under the circumstances surrounding the people on whom they operated; but the character of our people differs so widely from theirs, our civilization and the great end of our social and civil formations are so entirely unlike theirs, that laws wise and beneficent to them, would be barbarous and cruel for us.

A single word in regard to the source from which this law comes. It is not a translated provision; but a transferred one. It is transferred, word for word, from the Constitution of the State of Wisconsin. Can any gentleman inform me whether there has ever been any legislation under this provision; and if so, what is its character, construction, and operation? On these points I am unadvised; but I doubt whether, if you adopt it, you do not forever foreclose and shut out the idea of a homestead exemption; because you have here granted the whole of the power on that subject, and I affirm that it does not confer on the Legislature any right to pass a law for the exemption of the homestead. What is that boasted power? Why, simply, that you have enabled the Legislature to exempt for the benefit of the debtor, the necessaries of life—a reasonable amount. That is all. Any law, therefore, passed after the adoption of this section, must, in this respect, conform to its provisions—its liberal provisions, for the debtors benefit. Truly, this is stripping the poor debtor of the protection already possessed under the old Constitution; and, under the pretence of giving him a better protection, giving him nothing but the mere mockery of a protection—the shadow of what he now enjoys.

If this construction of the section be right, (and I believe it will be sustained by the ablest jurists here,) surely there is great propriety in re-committing it, as proposed by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Pepper,) and upon a more thorough examination, into what is most likely to be its operation, gentlemen may see the propriety of striking it out altogether, or so amending it as will enable the Legislature to exercise a sound discrimination in the selection of the proper objects of exemption laws, and the time when they shall take effect.

When a man who is worth five hundred dollars, desires to become the surety of his friend, why would you disable him upon a mere technicality? If such a proposition were presented to the comprehension of the people, in its true bearings and effects, their feelings would revolt at it. I say it here, with the least fear of contradiction. They are jealous and proud of their rights—much more so than they are of their property—and they will thank us but little, if by this Constitution, they are abridged of anything that pertains to freeman. The proud and aspiring young Indianian, would repel with merited contempt, the legislator that would tell him, sir, I have exempted you from debt and liability, to the amount of five hundred dollars; and tell him at the same time, that the exemption degraded him into a class incapable of giving or going security. Besides, sir, nearly all the offices of the country are filled by men of small property; and are you willing that by the operation of this section, they shall be rendered incapable of giving or going security, and thereby of holding office! Certainly not. It would outrage every principle of democracy, and every feeling of the American heart.

Suppose you authorize a homestead exemption to the amount of five hundred dollars. Why, it will absorb almost all the property of the State; and you will do well to remember that your provision is directory; and that the Legislature will be bound to follow its directions, or never act on the power it confers.

Mr. President, I think, in the course of my remarks, I have shown that the section under consideration, will, if it passes, be subject to the following objections:

1. It will open the doors for retrospective legislation, and all its unjust consequences.

2. It will disable a vast number of our best citizens from either giving or going security; and by consequence, prevent them from executing private trusts, or the duties of public officers where surety for the faithful discharge of such trusts and duties, is required by law, to be given.

3. Or it will, (under a rigorous construction,) prevent the Legislature from passing any law for the relief of the debtor, by exempting more than a reasonable amount of the necessities of life—of food and clothing—and thereby leave that unfortunate class in a much worse condition than they now are under the old Constitution.

These reasons, Mr. President, are sufficient to induce me to ask for its modification; without which, they will be sufficient to induce me to vote against it on its final passage.

REMARKS OF DR. MILLIGAN,

On the question of the admission of Negroes and Mulattoes.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in reference to the present question. When I came here and beheld the great men of the State of Indiana in Convention assembled, men who might with propriety be compared with the orators of ancient Greece and Rome, I felt well satisfied in my own mind that all things relative to amending the Constitution would be done decently and in order; for I then anticipated that all important propositions which should necessarily come before this body, would be made as plain to the understanding of each member as the noonday sun. I did suppose that the voice of reason, the convincing power of logic, and the thunder and blaze of eloquence that would flow from them, would remove all doubts which might exist in the mind of any member relative to the propriety or impropriety of any proposition demanding our consideration. Under this conviction I felt very comfortable, and intended to give a silent vote on all questions after they had been duly and truly prepared by those persons whose experience and information doubly qualify them to perform that important and momentous task. In truth, I had permitted myself to view this Convention almost as a unit, with such lights blazing in our midst.

But, sir, I have to acknowledge that I was very much mistaken. My anticipations have not been realized, for I find that those great men differ almost on every question. Their views appear to be as different as the views of other men. Their arguments and conclusions are as opposite as the poles.

Why is this? Error must exist somewhere. And it being indelicate to say that it exists in those men, I have thought peradventure that it might exist in the logic.

To follow men under such circumstances, is impossible. We cannot tend to the four cardinal points of the compass at the same time.

Differ with some of them we must, for they are antipodes. And, sir, we all know how unpleasant it is to differ with friends. To me it is grievous; and, therefore, I desire to give my reasons for the vote I am about to give on this subject.

Heretofore I have not consumed much of the time of this Convention, and would not now did I not think it due to myself and the people whom I represent in this Convention, to give my reasons in brief for the course which every consideration of humanity demands that I shall pursue. And, sir, under the circumstances, I feel myself somewhat embarrassed. Not because I have any doubts of the justice or propriety of my course, but because I am under the necessity of differing with some men who are recognized as bright stars in our political galaxy. And for another reason: that is, I am now subjecting myself to the mortification of hereafter beholding, and knowing that others will behold my remarks, in the great book of nonsense and foolishness that we are now making to destroy many of us, without the hope of a resurrection.

Mr. President, I look on this subject in one particular, as many others who have spoken before me; as one of importance in many respects, and therefore as worthy of our candid and serious consideration.

The future dignity of the State of Indiana depends much on the disposition we may make of the present section, and the honesty and humanity of this Convention will be calculated by it. I am much pleased to see this Convention disposed to give each member an opportunity to make such remarks upon it as he may think proper and right.

All agree in reference to its importance, and surely we should act as becomes men acting in a representative capacity in a Constitutional Convention for a just, honest, and patriotic constituency.

All questions relative to negroes have been, now are, and will continue to be exciting matters, until reason and justice prevail over passion and oppression; and men will differ concerning them until all are actuated by the same motives, and propelled to action by the same impulses. This is verified daily; and it is verified in reference to this subject. There are some here who are in favor of extending citizenship to the negro, and who, I suppose, are willing to receive them into our midst upon a political and social equality with the whites; others there are who would prefer to exterminate them rather than receive them into the State as they have been heretofore received under our Constitution and laws; and strange to tell, all talk loud and long about their humanity, as though it should be the only standard used in the settlement of this much vexed question. The gentleman from Wayne, (Mr. Rariden,) in the remarks which he made on this subject some days since, talked much about his humanity, and he informed us that the negroes are a poor, down trodden people. He informed us, too, that Kentucky has, and many other States will, by constitutional provision, make the presence of a free negro within the State a crime, punished by imprisonment and slavery. He insisted that we should act similarly, for that if we left the door open we would be bound to receive them on the score of humanity. He informed us that he would roll every one of them back to their respective States; knowing, at the same time, that they would thereby be (according to his own argument) enslaved or imprisoned; and he further added, as though he was determined to make known to this Convention and to mankind generally, the magnitude of his humanity, "that he speaks in all sincerity and without any hard feelings towards them, would kill them off at once if we cannot get rid of them any other way." This, sir, may be very good policy, and the arguments of that gentleman may be very good logic; but, sir, with your permission, the permission of this Convention, and the permission of the Christian world generally, I unhesitatingly say, d—n such humanity. If such sentiments and conduct constitute him a man of humanity, I would ask what would constitute him a barbarian? I admire the frankness of the man; but while I do that, in the name of all that is sacred I do object to the use of the word humanity, in connection with sentiments and conduct that would make a decent devil blush. [Much laughter.] The gentleman from Monroe, (Mr. Foster,) in his eloquent address delivered a few days since on this subject, advocated the same doctrine, but said nothing about his humanity. Neither need he if his views of the origin of the whites and blacks are correct. In that eloquent address he informed the Convention that the blacks are the descendants of the Ourang Outang; but most unfortunately for that gentleman in the same connection he said, or hinted very plainly, that the whites are the descendants of the Ape. The former he looks on as brutes, or "varmin," (I use his own words,) and is in favor of treating them as such; whilst, according to his own theory, he is somewhat their inferior. Now, sir, I appeal to all impartial judges, and ask, might not the blacks, under these circumstances, anticipate better and kinder treatment than he awards to them, from their apish relatives?

But, sir, let us be serious. Such sentiments and doctrines might tickle the ear of a heathen poet, and excite the approbation of a wild American savage, but surely cannot receive anything but the contempt of an intelligent, free American citizen. I was very much astonished to hear such sentiments from a man of such high attainments, on a subject of such importance; but I would be doing him much injustice to suppose that he would teach doctrines which he does not himself believe. Therefore, for his benefit, I will admit that he has full confidence in the truth of every word and sentiment he uttered. Nevertheless, all respectable authority on zoology, physiology, and divinity agree, in reference to the unity of origin of the white and black man. They are the same in organization and governed by the same laws of organization. They are subject to the same disease—they have the same mental faculties—they possess the same sympathies and instinct. With different species it is not so. Each species has its own peculiarities, corresponding to the sphere it was designed to occupy. But, sir, while I am constrained to admit the unity of the origin of the white and black man, I cannot feel the same respect for the black that I do for the white population. The presence of the blacks and their appearance are unpleasant to me. I do not desire them as associates, but I am constrained to have pity on, and extend charity, to them. I cannot love them with the same love that I most cordially extend to those of my own complexion. This may depend on prejudice or former associations. It is nevertheless true. I desire not the blacks amongst us—I would rejoice to see the two races separate—each in their own country—enjoying all the blessings of civil and religious liberty; and I am fully persuaded that my sentiments and desires respecting the subjects of the present section, are the sentiments and desires of nine-tenths of the people, whom I have the honor to represent in the Convention. But, while these are the views and desires of my constituents, they neither desire nor expect me to perjure myself to accomplish their triumph. No, sir, my constituents have honest hearts, and are disposed to be reasonable in all things. Hence, although I desire to see the two races separate as much as any member of this body, I, nevertheless, will not violate the solemn oath I have taken in order to effect that desirable object. No, never. But, sir, must we not do so, in voting for the section now under discussion? Others may not, but under my present convictions, I most certainly would.

The Constitution which we are sworn to support, contains a section in these words: "The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of the several States." Do not all admit that entering a State, buying and holding property therein, are some of the privileges intended to be secured by that section, to each citizen of each State? I so understand it. New York and Massachusetts have extended citizenship to their black population respectively; and, sir, are they not citizens of those States; and, as such, are they not entitled to the privileges secured to the citizen by that clause of the Constitution? Surely they are; at least I so understand it. If so, no action of ours can change the privileges secured to them by the Constitution of the United States of America. And, sir, does not the section now under discussion, propose to do so? Is it not the intention of the advocates of this proposition to prevent the black citizen of Massachusetts and New York from enjoying the privileges and immunities secured to each citizen of each State, by the law of laws of this confederacy? Surely the black or mulatto citizen of Massachusetts is to be affected, excluded, and punished by this law as well as the worn out black of the south. There is no difference whatever. All persons having negro blood in their veins are made criminals by entering the State. When this child of humanity was first presented to us by the committee, I did suppose that the Convention would wash and dress it, [Laughter,] so as to make it look at least respectable. For that purpose, I offered an amendment in the words of the Constitution, (heretofore quoted,) as a garment for it; but it was immediately voted down. Others have also offered garments to hide its filthiness; but they have been laid on the table without any consideration. The subject was finally sent to a committee with the hope that it would clothe it with justice if not with mercy, and it is now returned to the Convention in all its filthiness. It is no better than it was at the time of its reference. We have to take it as it is, or not at all. And, sir, I for one, will not accept the unclean thing. I am not an abolitionist. The people whom I represent know that I am not. But while I am not, I cannot vote for a section adverse to justice, mercy, humanity, and the Constitution of the United States of America.

If I understand the advocates of this measure correctly, they do not advocate it on the ground of justice, mercy, or humanity, but they admit that the law is harsh and cruel. They favor its passage, however, hoping that good may be produced from it, and that Kentucky and other slave States will be under the necessity of liberating their slaves if Indiana shuts them up in those States until they become overcharged with them. They are willing to do evil that good may come. Paul, in speaking of such men, saith: "their damnation is just."

If my object was to prevent negroes from entering the State of Indiana, I would still be opposed to this section; because it cannot and will not answer that purpose. If the object of the friends of this proposition be to build a wall of penalties round about the State of Indiana, so high that no person having negro blood in his veins can enter the State, this one will not answer their purpose. For Kentucky, with her present Constitution, is more barbarous than Indiana will be with the present section. Consequently negroes will still come to our State, though they be punished for so doing, in order to avoid the more severe penalties of Kentucky. Negroes are like other men; they will make choice of the lesser evil. It will not answer. To make this wall sufficient, you must stake and ride it with the murderous penalty proposed by the gentleman from Wayne (Mr. Rariden). Death must be the penalty. Nothing less will suffice. Pass the present section, incorporate it in the Constitution, let it be adopted by the people, and become the law of the land; and then, sir, we may behold men, women, and children coming, and entering the State as now. Yes, sir; they may be seen, of all colors, from the white Caucasian, down in regular gradation to the black African, coming and settling in this State as heretofore. And whose duty shall it be to ascertain their blood or parentage? Shall it be the duty of the honorable members from Monroe, Wayne, or all those who advocate the passage of this section? Let it be so. And then, I ask, what shall be the modus operandi by which they will distinguish the blacks and those having some of the negro blood in them, from the whites? They surely cannot do it by the complexion in all cases; for if they will but take the trouble to visit the black church in this city, they may see persons there with as white a skin and as good a countenance as either of themselves, who will admit that they have African blood in their veins.

Here is a difficulty of no small magnitude, and there are many others; but these are sufficient for me. I am, therefore, ready to vote against it now, and forever—at least until a thorough change in the hitherto harmonious order of the moral universe is effected, and cruelty shall be clothed with charms more winning than mercy, and justice shall abandon the human heart to injustice, outrage, and terror. But while mercy smiles on the children of men, I will not consent to an act compared to which the "ordeal" was wise, and the trial by "fattel" merciful and just.

THURSDAY, JAN. 30, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. BADGER.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The committees were called for reports.

The committee on revision being called,

Mr. OWEN. It is probably within the recollection of the Convention, that a rule has been passed prescribing the mode according to which the committee on revision shall perform the duties which devolve upon them. Under that rule we are required to have the sections printed as referred to us, and side by side with these to place the sections as they will stand after revision.

I will state to the Convention that a report from the committee on revision will be ready to be laid upon the tables of members this afternoon, and further reports will be made in a few days. And I wish further to state, that inasmuch as there is a chance that in the transferring of the sections that have been passed by the Convention, first from the Secretary to the committee, afterwards from the committee to the printer, and back again to the committee, and then to be laid before the Convention, inasmuch, I say, as amid all these transfers and necessary changes there may be something omitted by mistake, and as some sections of the old Constitution have to be transferred, I shall feel under an obligation if the gentlemen belonging to the committee will take the trouble to point out any omissions that they may discover.

Mr. BORDEN. I desire to submit a motion to re-consider the section that was introduced by the gentleman from St. Joseph, which is usually called the "compromise section." At the time the question was taken on the passage of that section I voted with the majority, with the avowed intention—and I expressed that intention to several gentlemen near me—to move afterwards to re-consider, in order to enable me to submit some reasons in opposition to it. I had desired to give my views on the question of banking generally at that time, but finding the Convention exhausted by debate, it occurred to me that perhaps a little while after they would feel more disposed to tolerate debate on the subject; but as we are approaching the close of the session and have so many other matters to occupy our attention, it would be presumption in me now to ask the attention of the Convention while I attempted any extended discussion of the subject.

I look upon the entire American banking system, as the worst possible system in the world; and I look upon the system that is proposed by this section, as one of the worst systems that could be established. I think it is one that is fraught with the worst consequences to the people of the State. I fear that after it is put in operation we shall have another expansion of the currency, and the consequent disarrangement of the whole business of the country. And if our trust funds should be placed in the bank, as contemplated by this section, I fear they would be entirely lost.

While I have always expressed my willingness to go for a well regulated system of banking, a system to be conducted under proper restrictions, I look upon the system of banking as it now exists in most of the States of the Union, as containing within itself the elements of its own dissolution; and that much sooner than any of us now anticipate, a suspension of all the banks in the United States may be expected.

The PRESIDENT. What section is it that the gentleman proposes to re-consider?

Mr. BORDEN. It is the section that was introduced by the gentleman from St. Joseph, (Mr. Colfax,) usually called the "compromise section on banking."

Mr. KELSO. Will the gentleman inform us whether that section was passed under the operation of the previous question?

Mr. MAGUIRE suggested that the gentleman have leave to change his vote.

Mr. HAMILTON. I do not think there is any necessity for re-considering the vote.

Mr. BORDEN. But, sir, my position may be mistaken on the question.

Mr. HAMILTON. The gentleman can move for leave to change his vote; that will show precisely where he stands in regard to this question.

Mr. PETTIT. I rise to a question of order. This section was passed under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. HAMILTON. I have no disposition to debate the question.

Mr. CARTER. I would inquire whether a motion to allow the gentleman from Allen to change his vote would not be in order, although the section may have passed under the operation of the previous question? It will not change the result, but merely place the gentleman right upon the record.

Mr. DOBSON. I was not present when this compromise was made. I wish to say that I am with the gentleman from Allen in his opposition to the section, and if an opportunity were afforded I would vote against it; but I am opposed to the re-consideration, because I am convinced it is useless to contend about it.

The question being on the motion to re-consider,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and ordered; and, being taken, there were yeas 28, nays 96, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bascom, Borden, Bowers, Carter, Cookerly, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Haddon, Hendricks, Holman, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kilgore, McFarland, Milligan, Milroy, Nave, Nofsinger, Ritchey, Smith of Ripley, Tague, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, and Wolfe—28.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dunn of Jefferson, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, Miller of Gibson, Moore, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimby, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—96.

So the motion to re-consider was decided in the negative.

Mr. BADGER. I have a favor to ask of the Convention. I have been necessarily absent on business, and desire to record my vote upon the motion to lay upon the table the section in relation to women's rights. I want to vote in the affirmative.

Leave was not granted.

REMOVAL OF OFFICERS.

The section which provides that all State officers shall be liable to be removed from office by impeachment by the House of Representatives, to be tried by the Senate, for every crime or misdemeanor, was taken up on its third reading.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

Mr. BORDEN moved to re-commit the section, with instructions to amend by adding at the end of the section these words: "All impeachments shall be tried by the Senate; and when sitting for that purpose, the Senators shall be upon oath or affirmation to do justice, according to the law and the evidence. And no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of a majority of all the Senators elected."

It will be observed (said Mr. B.) that the old Constitution provided that the Senators should be required to act under oath when trying cases of impeachment, and it appears to me the same provision ought to be incorporated in the new Constitution.

It may be said that the Legislature will regulate this matter. Sir, they may, or they may not. It may possibly suit their convenience not to be under oath when trying an officer. It should be obligatory; and I think the safest course would be, to insert it in the Constitution. Sir, there is a serious objection to the section as reported by the committee. It is this: As the section stood in the old Constitution, it required a majority of all the Senators elected to condemn and remove an officer. Now, sir, I submit whether it is right and proper to say that one of the judges, for instance, of your Supreme Court, who may feel compelled by a sense of duty to decide a law enacted by the Legislature to be unconstitutional, should be liable to be removed by a mere majority of a quorum of the Senate. Suppose your Senate should consist of forty-five members, thirty under the Constitution would be a quorum, and sixteen Senators might remove a judge from office for merely doing his duty. [Cries of "No! No! No!"] How, sir, under such a provision, can your judiciary be considered, in any sense of the word, an independent department of your government? Will it be sufficiently independent to protect the rights of the citizen against the arbitrary acts of the other departments of the government, and preserve each of said departments in its proper sphere? Sir, I fear that in the hurry and confusion of closing up our business we are omitting many very salutary provisions which are in the old Constitution, and which ought to find a place in the new. We should not permit our anxiety to close up our business and leave this place, to hurry us into inconsiderate action.

I observe that members do not feel much disposed to give attention to the subject; but, sir, I could not sit in my seat and permit this section to pass by without calling the notice of the Convention to it.

Mr. KILGORE moved to amend the instructions, so as to strike out the words "or misdemeanor."

Mr. KELSO. That is the more important amendment of the two. I cannot imagine that the committee intended that a State officer should be removed from his office for shooting a squirrel on the Sabbath; yet that is a misdemeanor. [Laughter.]

The question being on the amendment to the instructions,

Mr. RARIDEN. I take it that the word "impeachment" is a technical term, and is perfectly understood throughout the entire civilized world, and the manner which an impeachment is to be tried before the Senate of the State, is just as well understood by making the case triable before the Senate as if the whole detail of the mode of operation were set forth. It is for that reason, and on that account, that the section has been drawn up in the manner in which it now stands. It is of importance that we should enumerate the offenses for which high officers of the State shall be impeachable. It is drawn up in this form for the reason that before the officer shall be considered unworthy to fill the high place which he has occupied, the matter of which he shall be accused is to be referred to a legal tribunal appointed for that purpose: there can be no danger in it. The impeachment, the charge of official misconduct, must first be made by the representatives of the people. There must be such form and substance as to satisfy them of the propriety of the act of dismissal. They must be such as will justify the highest legal tribunal in the State in acting upon the impeachment. It is not at all necessary that the details of the mode of trial should be recommended, or set forth in the Constitution; the Legislature will act as a court of justice on such occasions. It would occupy too much space in the Constitution if we were to point out the particular manner in which proceedings were to be conducted. They will be in no respect different from those of a court of justice. Indeed it would be a great outrage on our part, if we were to undertake to point out how they were to proceed, or in what manner the trial should be managed. I take it that the article, as reported, is quite as good as any that can be substituted for it.

Mr. DOBSON moved to add to the instructions the following: "When the Governor is tried, one of the judges of the Supreme Court shall preside."

Mr. KELSO. In the old Constitution the words "high crimes or misdemeanors" were used, but in this section we have employed different phraseology. The word "misdemeanor" is a technical word, just as much as the word "impeachment" is. I believe the word misdemeanor ought to be stricken out.

Mr. DOBSON. One word in regard to the amendment I have offered: That is, that in case the Governor should be impeached, one of the judges of the Supreme Court shall preside at the trial. The reason is this: in case the Governor should be removed from office, the Lieutenant Governor would become the Governor; therefore he is directly interested in the removal, and might act partially. I prefer that at least the presiding officer of the court should not be directly interested in the result. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment,

And it was decided in the negative.

So the amendment to the amendment was not adopted.

The question was then taken on the motion of the gentleman from Delaware to strike out the words "or misdemeanor."

The motion was decided in the negative.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question being then upon the re-commitment of the section, with the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Allen, to add these words: "And when the Senate shall sit as a court for the trial of impeachments, the Senators shall be upon oath or affirmation to do justice, according to the law and the evidence; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of a majority of the Senators elected;"

The question was decided in the negative.

So the Convention refused to re-commit, with instructions.

The question then being on the passage of the section,

On motion,

The rules which require the yeas and nays to be taken on the passage of a section, was suspended,

And the section was, by consent, passed, and referred to the committee on revision.

OFFICIAL INCAPACITY AND NEGLIGENCE.

The section which provides that any State officer may be removed from office by a joint resolution of the General Assembly, for incapacity or general negligence of the duties of office, two-thirds of the members elect of each branch voting therefor, was read a third time.

The rule requiring the yeas and nays was suspended, and the section was passed, and referred to the committee on revision.

The section which declares that the General Assembly shall pass laws regulating proceedings for the removal from office, of State, county, and township officers, pursuant to the foregoing provisions, was read a third time.

On motion,

The rule requiring the yeas and nays was suspended,

And the section was passed, and referred to the committee on revision.

PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.

The article reported from the committee on "public institutions" of the State was taken up on its third reading, and the following sections were read consecutively; and the rule requiring the yeas and nays being suspended, the sections were passed, and referred to the committee on revision:

"SEC. —. It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to provide by law for the support of institutions for the education of the deaf and dumb, of the blind, and for the treatment of the insane.

"SEC. —. The General Assembly shall have the power to provide houses of refuge for the correction and reformation of juvenile offenders.

"SEC. —. The county boards shall have the power to provide farms to be an asylum for those persons who, by reason of age, infirmity, or other misfortunes, may have a claim upon the sympathies and aid of society."

TRIBUNALS OF CONCILIATION.

The following article, reported by the committee on criminal law, was read a third time:

"SEC. 1. Tribunals of conciliation may be established with such powers and duties as shall be prescribed by law, or the powers and duties of such tribunals may be conferred upon any of the other courts of this State; but such tribunals and other courts when sitting as such tribunals, shall have no power to render judgment to be obligatory on the parties, except they voluntarily submit their matters in difference, and agree to abide the judgment, or assent thereto in the presence of such tribunal or court, in such cases as shall be prescribed by law."

The question being upon the passage of the section,

Mr. NAVE moved to re-commit the section, with instructions to amend by striking out all after the word "courts" and inserting the following: "which judgment shall be final between the parties."

I know (said Mr. N.) that it is almost invain for any man to attempt to make an argument before the Convention at this time; but I insist that if we do organize such a court, we should organize it with a view exclusively to its effects in the future. That is, that if men agree to submit their matters of difference to the arbitration of this tribunal, its decisions shall be final between the parties. If we do not make such provision we shall not, by the creation of this court, confer any advantage upon litigants in future; but on the contrary, we shall open up a door for continual litigation, growing out of cases that are carried before this tribunal. If we would make the erection of this court a blessing to the country, it is necessary that we should make its decision final between the parties, and not allow the cases submitted to it to be open to subsequent litigation.

Mr. KENT demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being taken upon the motion to re-commit, with instructions,

It was decided in the negative.

So the section was not re-committed.

The question then being upon the passage of the section,

The yeas and nays were then taken under the rule, and resulted—yeas 77, nays 43—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Badger, Ballingall,

Baseom, Beach, Besson, Berry, Bowers, Bracken, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Coffax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Garvin, Gootee, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hitt, Hogin, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Kinley, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Zenor—77.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Beard, Biddle, Blythe, Bright, Carter, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Crawford, Edmonston, Frisbie, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Harbolt, Helmer, Hendricks, Holman, Hovey, Kelso, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Pettit, Rariden, Ritchey, Robinson, Shannon, Sims, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Stevenson, Thomas, Watts, and Mr. President—43.

So the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

FUTURE AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The section in relation to future amendments to the Constitution, as amended on yesterday on the motion of the gentleman from Putnam, (Mr. Stevenson,) was read a third time.

The question being, "Shall the section pass?"

MR. PETTIT. Sir, I am clearly of the opinion that we are encumbering our records too much with these propositions for amendment. All experience shows us that the people of the several States of the Union will amend the Constitutions of their States whenever and in whatever mode they see fit. Thirty years ago our fathers formed a Constitution in which they inserted a provision that it might be amended in such a mode, and in no other manner. Yet, here we are proposing to violate that very provision.

I move to re-commit, with instructions to strike out the section and insert the following:

"No amendment shall be made to the Constitution unless the same shall have been called for and approved of by a majority of all the voters of the State."

MR. HOWE moved to amend the instructions so that the people may vote for a call of a convention every twelve years, but at no other time.

The gentleman from Tippecanoe (said Mr. Howe) has stated that in the old Constitution there is a prohibitory clause preventing amendment or alteration of the Constitution unless it be made in the manner set forth therein. I think he is a little mistaken, however, as to the text. The Constitution prescribes the manner in which it shall be done, but it does not deny, or prevent by injunction, the making of amendments in any other way. It is for that reason I propose to add the words, that no convention for the purpose of amending the Constitution shall be called at any other time than once in twelve years. I wish to exclude a conclusion by declaring that amendments shall not be made in any other manner than herein prescribed. Now it has become a maxim at this day, and I am sorry to see it, that it is impossible for a people to bind themselves by restrictions. Sir, the doctrine is contrary to the fundamental principles of liberty, and if carried out to its extreme conclusion we should have no settled foundation for liberty, but on the contrary a despotism and nothing more, because a despotism is nothing more than undefined power in the sovereign. I say, then, if there be any maxim which ought to be adhered to, and which I would desire to see engraven on our State seal, and placed in golden letters over our halls of legislation, it is this: "Politically conservative, and socially progressive." This is what I would like to see inscribed—this is the maxim which we should sustain if we would retain our liberties. We shall go down like every other republic unless we put up our hands and stay the progress of such sentiments as are avowed here.

MR. OWEN. I agree with the gentleman from La Grange, (Mr. Howe,) that the gentleman from Tippecanoe has taken an incorrect view of this subject. He has declared that we are here in direct violation of a provision of the old Constitution. The gentleman from La Grange has well shown that there was no prohibition in regard to the matter. It was well said, that the question of amendment should be submitted every twelve years; but it was not said that the people might not, or that the Legislature might not pass a law at other periods, calling a Convention to amend the Constitution.

Now the gentleman from La Grange proposes that there shall be in the Constitution an absolute prohibition in regard to this matter. There are some things, sir, that it is in vain to do in legislation. We must never, in legislation, attempt impossibilities. The gentleman is attempting an impossibility now; he is attempting that which he has no right, which this Constitution has no right to do—which no power on earth has any right to do. [Applause.] If we have a right to say that the Legislature shall not, in twelve years, pass a law calling a Convention, we have an equal right to say that they shall not call a Convention in twenty years, or in fifty years. We have an equal right to say that there shall be no Convention held within our own time, or within that of our children. Shall we, by a section to be inserted in our Constitution, declare that we are infallible, and that what we now enact shall not be changed?

Now I am not, on the other hand, willing to go so far as the gentleman from Tippecanoe. I am not willing to leave this matter without having some reasonable check thrown around it. By adopting the proposition of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, the matter will stand thus: The Legislature may at any time when so directed by the vote of a majority of the electors of the State, pass a law calling a Convention. Now this is running into the opposite extreme. I think we had better take a little more time. I am not prepared to say as to how far the abstract right of the Legislature tends in regard to submitting to the popular vote propositions of amendment; nor am I prepared to say, that as a matter of abstract right, they may not do so whenever they think it proper and expedient. But I say if you insert such a provision as this, placing no greater check than that of requiring two successive Legislatures to act affirmatively upon the question before it shall be submitted to the people, I am convinced that it will be entirely satisfactory. It is very well known that I am not conservative in my opinions. I believe in progress and advancement in the science of government as well as all other sciences, physical and moral. But while I am willing that changes and amendments should from time to time be made, yet I would not have them made without due consideration. I would have at least the meeting of one Legislature intervening between the time of the first proposing of an amendment and the time of its final adoption. I believe if we adopt the section as it stands, we will have a just medium between the proposition of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, which I hold does not interpose a sufficient check, and the proposition of the gentleman from Lagrange, which I think wholly impracticable.

Mr. RARIDEN. It strikes me that there may be just as much impediment in the way of making amendments to the Constitution as in making the Constitution itself. It strikes me that it is possible, however wise or well intended the propositions of gentlemen may be, many palpable errors may find their way into the Constitution. The diversity of views entertained by the delegates here assembled, in regard to the proper method of making future amendments to the Constitution, is, I suppose, a tolerably correct criterion of the sentiments that will prevail throughout the entire State. I am inclined to believe that the experience which the people have had in calling this Convention, will have the effect of inducing them to submit to much inconvenience rather than undertake to make other amendments, where the mode of making amendments is so troublesome.

Now I will suggest that at any time after the year eighteen hundred and fifty-five, if the Legislature propose a change and the people, at the general election, give their assent to such change, it should be incorporated in the Constitution. I agree with the gentleman that the time for making the changes should be periodical. Let it be once in five years. If changes be required, let the representatives of the people suggest them, point them out, and let the public voice be heard on the subject; thus you will have as great security as is necessary against inconsiderate and hasty changes. Men will be elected in the different counties of the State with a view expressly to such questions of change and amendment. And I repeat, that to my mind it is infinitely preferable to assemble a Convention to amend the Constitution, than to amend it in any other way. We see how hard it is for us here to agree upon any one principle. Five years will be long enough, it appears to me, to live under a Constitution if it be defective. At the end of five years we may become satisfied that we were mistaken in many particulars; if my own mind does not change, I shall think better of myself than than I do now.

Now the provision that I would suggest, would be to let this instrument stand until eighteen hundred and fifty-five; at that time, if the Legislature should see proper to propose a change, let such proposed change be submitted to the people, and let them elect representatives with a view to making the proposed change, if they approve of it. If they sanction the proposition, if they believe it would be an improvement, they will elect men who will carry out the changes which they desire to have made. This, it appears to me, is the most practicable mode of amending the Constitution, and it is the one which I would like to see agreed upon.

Mr. HAMILTON demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question being seconded,

The main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on the amendment to the instructions,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and ordered; and, being taken, there were—yeas 12, nays 109—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Beard, Clark of Tippecanoe, Davis of Madison, Gregg, Hall, Howe, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Robinson, Thomas, and Watts—12.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Harbolt, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—109.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question being upon the proposition of the gentleman from Tippecanoe to re-commit, with instructions,

Mr. PETTIT demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and, being taken, there were—yeas 27, nays 93—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Bracken, Bryant, Carr, Coats, Foley, Foster, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helmer, Kendall of Wabash, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Robinson, Shoup, Smith of Scott, Walpole, Watts, and Mr. President—27.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Bascom, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Zenor—93.

So the section was not re-committed.

The question being on the passage of the section,

The yeas and nays were taken, according to the rules, and there were—yeas 77, nays 45—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Biddle, Bourne, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Frisbie, Garvin, Gordon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Helmer, Hendicks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kinley, Lockhart, Maguire, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Milligan, Milroy, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Walpole, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—77.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Beeson, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Colfax, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Foley, Gootee, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hawkins, Howe, Johnson of Orange, Kendall of Wabash, Logan, March, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Newman, Pettit, Prather, Ritchey, Robinson, Shoup, Smith of Scott, Spann, Thomas, Watts, Wiley, and Wunderlich—45.

So the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

Mr. HAMILTON. It is important that a resolution should be passed to enable the committee on revision to proceed properly with the duty entrusted to them: it is, that they have leave of absence during the sitting of the Convention, and that they be authorized to employ a clerk.

I move, therefore, that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of enabling me to introduce such a resolution.

The rules were suspended, and a resolution to the effect as suggested was adopted.

Mr. HAMILTON moved that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of enabling him to introduce another resolution, to the effect to authorize the chairman of the committee to employ a clerk to enroll the Constitution, &c.

Mr. COOKERLY remarked that there were secretaries enough at present to do that work. He thought there was no necessity for employing another clerk.

The question being put on the motion of the gentleman from Allen,

The rules were not suspended.

SCHOOL FUND.

The section which provides that the principal of the common school fund shall be inviolable, and shall never be diverted to any other object than that to which it is now applied, was read a third time.

On motion,

The rules which require the yeas and nays to be taken on the final passage of a section was suspended, and the section was passed, and referred to the committee on revision.

The section which provides for the investment of common school funds not already invested for the use of such schools, was read a third time.

The rule requiring the taking of the yeas and nays on the final passage of a section was suspended, and the section was passed, and referred to the committee on revision.

FUTURE AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION.

The consideration of the additional section offered by the gentleman from Switzerland, (Mr. Kelso,) which provides that the article in relation to future amendments of the Constitution shall be submitted to a separate vote of the people, was resumed.

The pending question being upon the motion to lay the section upon the table,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 100, nays 23—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Borden, Bourne, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Harbolt, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—100.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Beard, Bowers, Clements, Colfax, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hogin, Howe, Kelso, Maguire, Milligan, Morgan, Murray, Stevenson, Wallace, Walpole, and Watts—23.

So the additional section was laid upon the table.

MR. WATTS. I move to take up the notice that I gave on a former day, relative to rescinding the rule which requires the yeas and nays to be taken on the passage of a section.

MR. PETTIT (in his seat). I think we are getting along rather too fast now, without rescinding that rule.

SEVERAL VOICES. Let it stand as it is for the present.

MR. WATTS. Well, sir, I submit.

MR. RITCHEY offered an additional section to the fifty-third article, that if two or more amendments to the Constitution be submitted at the same time, they shall be voted upon separately; and while one amendment proposed by the General Assembly is under consideration, and before its adoption or rejection, no additional amendment shall be proposed.

The question being taken on the adoption of the proposed additional section,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MR. HELMER. Is it still in order to offer an additional section?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly.

MR. HELMER. Then I offer the following additional section:

It provides that a vote of the people shall be taken every ten years upon the question to call a Convention to amend the Constitution; and if decided affirmatively, the delegates shall consist of one from each senatorial district.

MR. GORDON moved that the section be laid upon the table.

MR. WALPOLE demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and, being taken, there were—yeas 82, nays 37—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Beach, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bright, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Helm, Hendricks, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, Mathis, May, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Murray, Nave, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Zenor—82.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Beard, Beeson, Borden, Bracken, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Frisbie, Garvin, Hall, Hawkins, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Howe, Kendall of Wabash, Maguire, McClelland, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Morgan, Mowrer, Newman, Ritchey, Robinson, Stevenson, Thomas, Walpole, Watts, and Mr. President—37.

So the section was laid on the table.

MR. MORGAN offered an additional section, providing that whenever an amendment is proposed by the Legislature the whole Constitution shall be published, with the statutes, &c., for the information of the people.

MR. KENT moved that the proposed section be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

So the section was accordingly laid upon the table.

NEW COUNTIES.

The section reported from the committee on miscellaneous provisions, which provides "That whenever a portion of the citizens of the counties of Perry and Spencer shall deem it expedient to form a new county of the contiguous territory of said counties, it shall be the duty of those interested in the organization of said new county to lay off, by proper metes and bounds, (of equal portions as near as practicable of the territory of said counties,) said proposed new county; which proposition shall be submitted to the voters of said counties at a general election, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. And if a majority of all the votes given at said election shall be given in favor of the organization of said new county, it shall be the duty of the Legislature to organize a new county out of the territory thus designated," was taken up on its second reading.

The question being on ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading,

Mr. MILROY moved to strike out "the counties of Perry and Spencer," and insert "any two contiguous counties of the State."

Mr. SHERROD demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Carroll,

It was decided in the negative.

So the amendment was not adopted.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. KELSO offered an additional section, that the citizens of Dearborn, Ohio, Switzerland, Delaware, Grant, and Blackford counties, may alter their boundaries, on petition to the Legislature.

Mr. WATTS moved to amend the section, so that Ohio and Dearborn may be consolidated in case a majority of the people of those counties vote in favor of it.

Mr. FOLEY moved that the section and amendment be laid upon the table.

Mr. KELSO. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion for a moment, that I may have the privilege of saying a word.

Mr. FOLEY. Inasmuch as the gentleman has not had an opportunity to speak during the session, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. KELSO. The gentleman may be as ironical as he pleases; I claim the privilege of saying a word in relation to this matter. The proposition of the gentleman from Dearborn is, for him, extremely liberal. There is the county of Dearborn, with three thousand voters, against the county of Ohio, which has but nine hundred and forty votes, and he asks that a majority of the people of both counties together, shall control the matter as to the consolidation of the two counties. Now if I were to make a motion of that description, I should be ashamed to go into the county of Ohio again; and I do not know but he may be ashamed before he is done with it. Now this is a question that is to affect two counties. If a majority of the citizens of those two counties should think proper to make the change, then the Legislature shall have power to do it. Is that asking too much? I mean a majority of each county. If a majority of each county petition the Legislature to have the change made, then the Legislature shall have power to make it; that is all I ask.

Now I can, with safety, refer to members of this Convention who have but a day or two ago returned from a visit to their respective counties, where they have heard conversations in regard to the action of this body, to show that the general complaint is that we have placed too many restrictions upon the people. If it be right that two counties in the south should have the power to change their county lines, I ask if it be not equally just and right that the same power should be extended to other counties, where they are divided by crooked streams? I ask if one is not as reasonable as the other? I ask, if privileges should be granted to Perry and Spencer counties which are denied to other counties similarly situated? I hold that if a majority of the citizens of contiguous counties desire to change their boundaries, that majority should control the matter. And now it is proposed to lay upon the table a proposition as reasonable as that which has been adopted in reference to other counties. If one is proper the other is also. Is there to be no such thing as equal justice? Are we to make fish of one and flesh of another? Is one case to be provided for to the exclusion of all others? If we are to grant the privilege in one case, we should extend it to all others when it is demanded.

Mr. PETTIT (in his seat). The gentleman is right for once.

Mr. WATTS. My friend from Switzerland says that if he had offered such an amendment he would be ashamed to go into Ohio county. Now, sir, if I possessed the extreme modesty that my friend from Switzerland does, it is possible I should have such feelings; but not possessing such extreme modesty, I think I could venture to go through the county of Ohio, notwithstanding that I have offered this amendment.

Mr. President, I have been acquainted with Ohio county and have lived in the territory composing it for about thirty years; a part of my family resides in that county now. It is a county which contains a great many citizens that I entertain a great regard for. At the time of its organization I was here in Indianapolis; I was not a member of the Legislature, however, but I recollect it was represented to the Legislature that there was an excess in the county of Dearborn over the constitutional limit, of about seventeen square miles, and that it would be highly proper that a new county should be formed out of that excess. As soon as the new county was organized and officered, it was said that it would be a violation of the Constitution to take away part of one county and give it to another. Yet, ever since the county of Ohio has been organized, efforts have been made year after year to clip from Dearborn one slice after another, and add them to Ohio. I am tired of it. I want the matter settled. If this Convention have the power, and should determine to give to Ohio four-fifths of the county of Dearborn, and let the matter forever be set at rest, I should have no objection; but I am tired of having it agitated year after year. I hope the Convention will either suffer those counties to be consolidated, or else compel them to remain as they are. I want to have the matter definitely settled.

Mr. FOLEY renewed his motion to lay the section and amendment on the table.

Mr. KELSO demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and, being taken, there were—yeas 74, nays 27—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Ballingall, Beeson, Bourne, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Dick, Dobson, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Foley, Frisbie, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hamilton, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Logan, Maguire, March, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Newman, Owen, Prather, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wanderlich, Zenor, and Mr. President—74.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bascom, Beach, Borden, Bright, Brookbank, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Gootee, Hall, Hawkins, Hovey, Howe, Kelso, Lockhart, McClelland, Milligan, Milroy, Morrison of Marion, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Trimble, Walpole, and Yocum—27.

So the section and amendment were laid upon the table.

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The PRESIDENT. The Convention will resume the consideration of the orders of the day, the first thing in order being the first section of Article 55, on its second reading.

The Secretary read the section as follows:

SECTION 1. The powers of the government of Indiana shall be divided into three distinct departments, and each of them be confided to a separate body or magistracy, to-wit: Those which are legislative to one; those which are executive to another; and those which are judiciary to another. And no person or collection of persons, being of one of those departments, shall exercise any power properly attached to either of the others, except in the instances herein expressly permitted.

The section, by unanimous consent, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

CORPORATION CHARTERS.

The second section of Article 55 next came up on its second reading, as follows:

SECTION 2. From and after the first day of January, in the year 1880, the General Assembly shall have the power to revoke the charters of all corporations whose charters shall not have expired previous to that time, and no corporation hereafter to be created, shall ever endure for a longer term than twenty-five years, except those which are political or municipal.

Mr. MILROY. I move to amend the section by striking out "1880" and inserting "1860," and by inserting after the word "created" the words "by special enactment," and by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "ten."

Mr. MOWRER. I move to lay the section and the amendment on the table.

A division of the question was called for.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first taken upon laying the amendment to the section upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question is now upon laying the section upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALPOLE. I now move to take the section up from the table, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken, with the following result—yeas 53, nays 51:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Borden, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenoweth, Coats, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foster, Gordon, Haddon, Helmer, Hitt, Holman, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Logan, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Ritchey, Shoup, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Thornton, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Mr. President—53.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beard, Bowers, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gregg, Hall, Hawkins, Hogin, Hovey, Jones, Kilgore, Lockhart, Maguire, Mather, May, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Morgan, Mowrer, Nave, Niles, Pepper of Crawford, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Stevenson, Thomas, Trimble, Watts, Wunderlich, and Zenor—51.

So the section was taken up from the table.

Mr. WALPOLE. I believe that it is now in order to make a few remarks in explanation of this section.

This section was reported by the committee on miscellaneous provisions, of which I am chairman, and guarantees the rights of all corporations in the State, with a reservation of a power given to the Legislature to revoke them after a certain period. The committee thought it wise to put a limitation upon the various existing charters, they therefore guaranteed the existence of the present corporations until the year 1880, after which period the Legislature should have power to revoke their charters, or place them under a general law.

I think, sir, with the gentleman from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit,) that a change of Constitution, as it is proposed to make now, is equivalent to a revolution in the form of government; and that therefore, with reference to charters granted under an outgoing government, the incoming government should have the power to revoke, alter, or amend, as they might think proper. We also provided that no charters hereafter granted should ever endure for a longer term than twenty-five years, except those which were political or social, believing that we should render them as amenable to the people as possible. Already is this State checker-boarded over with corporations, and therefore it was that the committee believed it to be necessary for the good of the people that power should be given the Legislature to revoke these charters after the year 1880. At this day one-half of your railroads are mortgaged to foreign capitalists, as are also the profits of these railroads; and the day may come when all these railroads may fall entirely into the hands of foreigners, and the public good of this State may then require that the charters should be repealed. All these corporations also have the right to fix their own toll in carrying passengers and freight, and the Legislature have no right to restrain its amount; and I think that a restriction of the kind proposed is requisite; we have, too, the example of other States in regard to it. This section is taken from the new State Constitution of Louisiana. I trust the Convention will agree to ingraft this section into the new Constitution.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. The sentiment just advanced by the gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole) would be a startling one to the people of this State if they thought it was seriously entertained in this Convention. At the time they called this Convention and elected their Delegates, it was the farthest possible from their expectations that they were engaged in a revolutionary movement, and that their rights of person and property would be at the mercy of this body. I shall not stop to seriously controvert so ridiculous an idea.

The section under consideration proposes to give to the Legislature, from and after the first day of January, 1880, the right to revoke all charters now existing that shall not have then expired.

This would be a revolutionary movement indeed. The charter of a railroad company, for instance, is in the nature of a contract between the State and the corporators. Being so, the Legislature has no power to revoke it, and this Convention can delegate no such power to the Legislature, for the Constitution of the United States declares that "no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts." That is "the higher law" that will effectually restrain any such measures as are contemplated by the section under consideration. But, sir, if there were no constitutional provision on this subject, the moral law which requires that we should preserve inviolate our public faith, should prevent the adoption of this section. It is a proposition to give to the Legislature the power to confiscate private property. It would present us to the world in the attitude of a State that has held out to capitalists inducements to invest their money in railroads, plank roads, and other public improvements, and after they have done so, relying upon our good faith, we claim the right to take advantage of their misplaced confidence and sacrifice their property as we may please. Many of those improvements are in an unfinished state, and cannot be completed without borrowing money. How can money be obtained for their completion when capitalists discover a disposition here, on the part of the State, to act in bad faith? I shall steadily oppose anything calculated to embarrass the progress of these great thoroughfares of trade. They are adding every year millions to the value of our lands. They afford the farmers a ready access to the markets, increase the price of all our surplus productions, and stimulate every branch of industry. Believing that this section, if adopted, would tend to embarrass all these improvements, and to retard the prosperity of the State, I move its indefinite postponement.

Mr. PETTIT. I hope this section will not be indefinitely postponed. The section, sir, is not as strong as I would wish to have it; for I would be glad to see a section contained in the Constitution reserving the power to annul all charters at any time; but I shall sustain this section at any rate.

The gentleman from Jefferson says that we have the legal power to frame this law, but that there is a moral power above all law which should prevent us from adopting it. Now I maintain that this section is confirmed and sustained by the moral law. Sir, I ask where are the good morals of a sovereign power, or the Legislature of a State, in surrendering to a few that which belongs to the many—to all? By this rule you take away from the mass certain rights, and confer them upon others. Can that be a moral principle which requires that the few shall exercise a tyrannical power to the injury of the many? I took occasion to say once before, as I now say, that the only vested right that ought to be recognized in a free State is that one paramount to all others, the vested right of the people, of every freeman in Indiana, to be equal as regards political privileges with every other man. That is the only vested right. If, for instance, the Madison railroad, in which some gentlemen seem to take a great interest, is of such vast importance to the community, and its blessings are scattered broadcast through the State, and it is a benefit to the people, is there any probability that the Legislature will ever repeal its charter? Will not the farmers of this State be so much benefited by it as that they will send up their representatives instructed to continue its charter, and not repeal it? Is there any danger of their laying ruthless hands upon that or any corporation which is for their general benefit? None whatever. But, sir, if it shall be found that that and other corporations is working lasting injury and certain wrong upon the whole community, I ask if the Legislature should not have power to repeal their charters? It seems to me no man can dispute that proposition. Twenty-five or thirty years is a long time for a corporation to hold a franchise from the body of the people, which is mainly for the benefit of the corporation alone. I have no disposition to detain the Convention any longer; I only trust that the section may be passed, and not indefinitely postponed.

Mr. NAVE. So far as I am concerned, Mr. President; I must say that I am not very partial to corporations; but here I am called upon to act in favor of a section that I am satisfied proposes to violate the Constitution of the United States, and being satisfied of this fact, I shall be compelled, from a sense of duty, to vote for the indefinite postponement of this section. How, sir, do I come to this conclusion? I come to it in no other way than from the fact that every charter granting a right to a company to construct a railroad, is a private contract according to law, and it has so been decided in the courts of this confederacy. Yes, sir, I take the position that the grant of a charter to a railroad or bank, or any other corporation, is a private contract between the State and the citizens of the State; and how do I prove this position? Why, sir, by the highest authority in this country. In 2 vol. Kent's Commentaries, it is said: "That a bank, whose stock is owned by private persons, is a private corporation, and that the same thing may be said of insurance, canal, bridge, turnpike, plank, and railroad companies." And the same was held to be the law in the case of the United States Bank vs. the Planters' Bank, by Chief Justice Marshall. See 9 vol. Wheaton, page 907. Kent also says that a public corporation instituted for purposes connected with the administration of the government may be controlled by the Legislature, because such a corporation is not a contract within the purview of the Constitution of the United States. See 2 vol. Kent, page 305. Same book and page, Kent says, that a private corporation is a contract between the government and the corporators.

Now let us turn our attention to what is said in the Constitution of the United States in regard to the violation of contracts. Look at the tenth section of the first article of that Constitution and you will find it reads as follows:

"No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation; grant letters of marque and reprisal; emit bills of credit; make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts; pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility."

Now, sir, I ask by what possibility the last clause of this section can be so construed as to authorize the Legislature of this State to violate contracts, which I have proven the charters I have referred to to be. Here we see that it is expressly declared that no State shall pass any ex post facto law impairing the obligation of contracts; and yet by the present section the Legislature is authorized, after the year 1880, to violate the contracts this State has entered into with the Madison railroad, and with every other corporation in the State, thus violating the provision of the Constitution of the United States on the subject.

But, sir, let us refer to other authorities on this point. In the case of Dartmouth College vs. Woodward, Story, Chief Justice, held that the Legislature cannot repeal, impair, or alter the rights and privileges conferred by the charter, against the consent and without the default of the corporation judicially ascertained and declared. See 4 vol. Wheaton, page 697; and the same had been previously settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the following cases, viz.: "The State of New Jersey vs. Wilson, and Fletcher vs. Beck, and Terret vs. Taylor, and also the Town of Parolet vs. Clark."

Thus, sir, the question has been settled by the highest authority in the Union, the Supreme Court of the United States, that in the cases of the charter of these corporations, no Legislature shall ever pass laws impairing or violating them. In conclusion, I simply ask gentlemen if by this provision now before us we are not asked directly to violate the Constitution of the United States, and whether they are prepared to do it?

Mr. PEPPER of Crawford. I move the previous question.

Upon a division—ayes 49, noes 38—the motion was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The PRESIDENT. The main question is, Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading?

The yeas and nays upon this question were demanded and ordered, and taken, with the following result—yeas 55, nays 63:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Bracken, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenoweth, Coats, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foster, Gootee, Haddon, Holman, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Keat, Kinley, Logan, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Ritchey, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Mr. President—55.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Bryant, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hegin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Lockhart, Maguire, Mather, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Snook, Stevenson, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wunderlich, and Zenor—63.

So the section was not engrossed.

Mr. KILGORE. I move a re-consideration of the vote just taken.

Mr. WALPOLE. I move a call of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first taken upon the adoption of the motion for a call of the Convention.

Upon this motion the yeas and nays were demanded, and, having been ordered, were taken, with the following result—yeas 46, nays 71:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bracken, Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Elliott, Haddon, Johnson of Orange, Lockhart, March, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Ritchey, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Scott, Tague, Wallace, Walpole, and Yocum—41.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hegin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Logan, Maguire, May, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Zenor, and Mr. President—76.

So the motion for a call of the Convention did not prevail.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the motion to re-consider.

Upon this question the yeas and nays were demanded, and, having been ordered, were taken, with the following result—yeas 48, nays 74:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bracken, Chapman, Chenoweth, Coats, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Foster, Haddon, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kinley, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Ritchey, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Tague, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Mr. President—48.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hegin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mather, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Niles, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Snook, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, Wunderlich, and Zenor—74.

So the vote was not re-considered.

Mr. PETTIT. I offer the following additional section:

"All charters hereafter granted shall be subject to repeal, but the interests of all parties interested shall be justly protected when such charters are repealed."

This section, sir, simply says that all charters hereafter granted shall be subject to repeal, but that the interests of all parties shall be protected when any such charter is repealed. It therefore applies to all charters hereafter made, and not to any heretofore made.

Mr. RARIDEN. I do not know, nor can I perceive, that any great injury will result from the adoption of the section proposed by the gentleman from Tippecanoe. But it strikes me on the first view of it, that it will lay down a principle of instability in legislation. Now I do not believe a word in this doctrine put forth, that a change in State government is a revolution; but on the contrary, I maintain that the State lives forever. It is a mere change in her mode of action—she remains the same political being. Now these corporations are nothing more than artificial persons, upon whom are bestowed such rights and privileges such as the law-making power sees proper to bestow upon them. This provision, sir, is denying to future Legislatures the privilege which that body has heretofore exercised. I believe the better policy is not to restrict the action of Legislatures in the future, but leave it for them as the representatives of the people to settle this matter.

By this provision, also, the Legislature may terminate the existence of corporations at pleasure, and as this will deter individuals from forming corporations for useful purposes, I can see no use in it.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the section by inserting the word "bank" before the word "charters."

The amendment was not adopted.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon the adoption of the section.

Upon this question the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and taken, with the following result—yeas 76, nays 44.

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Garvin, Gordon, Haddon, Holman, Hovey, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kilgore, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—76.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bourne, Carr, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Frisbie, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Howe, Huff, Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Maguire, March, Mather, Morgan, Murray, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Sims, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Thomas, and Wallace—44.

So the section was adopted.

The PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. COLFAX. I move to amend by adding at the end of the section the words "by a two-thirds vote of each branch of the Legislature."

I consider, sir, if charters are to be subject to repeal they should be by a vote of two-thirds of each branch of the General Assembly. This vote will indicate whether the repeal of a charter is in accordance with the wishes of a majority of the people of the State.

Mr. WALPOLE. This, sir, is a popular government under which we are controlled by the will of the majority, and we have already passed a section to that effect; I therefore move to lay the amendment of the gentleman from St. Joseph on the table.

Mr. MORRISON of Marion. I move the previous question.

The call for the previous question having been seconded by the Convention, the main question was ordered to be put;

And the main question being upon the engrossment of the section, it was engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. RITCHEY. I move an additional section to this article, as follows:

"No private corporations hereafter chartered shall endure for a longer period than thirty years."

The question was put upon the adoption of the section, and it was decided in the negative.

TERM OF OFFICES.

The section providing that "when the duration of any office is not provided for by this Constitution, it may be declared by law, and if not so declared by law, such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment," came up on its second reading.

Mr. WALPOLE. I would simply remark in relation to this section that there are hundreds of offices the duration of which is not provided for by the Constitution, such as township trustees, treasures, and collectors. This section leaves the matter with the Legislature where it properly belongs.

The section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

CENSUS.

The next section, requiring that "the number of the inhabitants of the several counties of this State, together with the agricultural, manufacturing, and other general statistics thereof, shall be taken in the year 1856, and every ten years thereafter, in such manner as may be prescribed by law," came up on its second reading.

Mr. WALPOLE. The general government, sir, has provided for the taking of the census every ten years. The last time it was taken was in the year 1850; the next census will be taken in 1860, and so on every ten years thereafter. This section provides for the taking of a census by the State in the year 1855, and every ten years thereafter, so that by this system, in connection with the present system of the general government, we will have all the statistics of the State laid before us every five years. The section was framed in accordance with instructions given by the Convention.

Mr. EDMONSTON. I certainly do not think this section should be adopted, for the reason that it will involve the State in an expense equal to that incurred by the general government for taking the census every ten years. Besides, sir, I think the census taken by the general government is sufficient for all useful purposes, and that an additional enumeration is entirely unnecessary. I therefore move to lay the section on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

BANKING PRIVILEGES.

The section declaring that "the Legislature shall have power, whenever it may deem the public good requiring it, to repeal all banking charters or laws granting banking privileges of any kind," next came up on its second reading.

Mr. BERRY moved to amend by striking out the words "granting banking privileges."

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LOCKHART moved to lay the section upon the table.

Upon this motion the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 51, nays 68:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Foley, Frisbie, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hoggins, Hovey, Huff, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mather, Miller of Fulton, Morgan, Murray, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, and Watts—51.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Coats, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foster, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Holman, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Logan, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Ritchey, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Spann, Steele, Tague, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—68.

So the section was not laid on the table.

Mr. MILROY offered the following amendment:

Insert after the word "to" the words "amend or."

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading?

Upon this question, the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken, the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 76, nays 47:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Coats, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Hendricks, Holman, Howe, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Kinley, Logan, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Ritchey, Schoonover, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—76.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Brookbank, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Foley, Frisbie, Gootee, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hoggins, Hovey, Huff, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mather, Morgan, Murray, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Shannon, Sims, Thomas, Wallace, Watts, and Zenor—47.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Convention then proceeded to the consideration of article 56, on its second reading. The article reads as follows:

First. That no inconvenience may arise from the change in the Constitution of this State, and in order to carry the same into complete operation, it is hereby declared and ordained that—

Second. All laws and parts of laws now in force and not inconsistent with this Constitution, shall continue and remain in full force until they expire or be repealed.

Third. The Governor, Secretary, Auditor, and Treasurer of State, shall severally reside, and keep the public records, books, and papers, in any manner relating to their respective offices, at the seat of government.

Fourth. All writs, actions, causes of actions, prosecutions, contracts, claims, and rights of individuals, bodies corporate, and of the State, shall continue, and all indictments which shall have been found, or which may hereafter be found, for any crime or offense committed before the adoption of this Constitution, may be proceeded upon as if no change had taken place in the organic law of the State.

Fifth. Every person who shall be elected or appointed to any office under this Constitution, or any law made in pursuance thereof, shall, before entering on the duties thereof, take an oath to support the Constitution of this State and of the United States, and an oath of office.

The above sections of the article were severally ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. MORRISON of Marion offered an additional section, providing that the Governor shall fill such vacancies as may occur in the offices of Judges, Auditors, Treasurers, Secretaries, and all other offices not provided for in the Constitution, who should hold their respective offices until their successors are duly elected. Mr. M. said that he would merely remark that section twenty of the executive report provided for the filling of vacancies under certain emergencies, and this section provided for the balance of those emergencies not provided for in the section already passed.

The additional section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

SALARIES.

Section 1 of article 57 next came up on its second reading. It was read by the Secretary, as follows:

Sec. 1. The following officers of government shall be allowed as their annual salaries not less than the following sums, viz. :

The Governor, one thousand five hundred dollars.

The Secretary, Auditor, and Treasurer of State, one thousand dollars each, with such perquisites as the Legislature shall from time to time allow.

The Judges of the Supreme Court, one thousand five hundred dollars each.

The Judges of the Circuit Court one thousand two hundred dollars each.

The members of the General Assembly, three dollars per day each, and three dollars for every twenty-five miles travel on the most direct route in going to and returning from the seat of government.

No law shall be passed to increase the pay of members of the General Assembly until after the close of the session at which such law shall be passed.

Mr. GORDON moved to lay the section upon the table.

Upon this motion the yeas and nays were demanded, ordered, and taken, with the following result—yeas 73, nays 48:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Barbour, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Bowers, Bracken, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Vermillion, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliot, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hogin, Holman, Huff, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kinley, Logan, Mathis, May, McClelland, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Rariden, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimby, Watts, Wolfe, and Zenor—73.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Beach, Blythe, Bourne, Bright, Bryant, Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Frisbie, Garvin, Graham of Miami, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hitt, Hovey, Howe, Kent, Kilgore, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mather, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Morrison of Marion, Murray, Nave, Pettit, Robinson, Steele, Wallace, Walpole, Wiley, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—48.

So the section was laid upon the table.

Mr. DOBSON. I offer the following additional section, to-wit: "The Legislature shall have power to fix the salaries of all judicial and State officers, and the pay of the members of the General Assembly."

Mr. KILGORE moved to lay the section upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon the adoption of the section.

Mr. DOBSON. I do not think, Mr. President, that this section should have been laid upon the table. It was reported after mature deliberation on the part of the committee on salaries, tenure, and compensation of office; and if the salaries were too much, they could have been reduced by amendments. If, however, the Convention does not see fit to take the responsibility of fixing the salaries of the officers of government, and of the members of the General Assembly, let us leave the whole matter with the Legislature, and they can fix it; certainly if we expect to have officers discharge their duty, they must get paid for their services.

I would remark, in addition, that the pay of the members of the General Assembly heretofore has been fixed in the Constitution, in regard to their traveling expenses, for the most usual route in traveling to and fro; but by the section just laid on the table the most direct route has been fixed; there is also a provision embraced in the section, requiring that the General Assembly shall not pass a bill to increase their own pay, which shall take effect during the same session at which it is passed.

Mr. PETTIT. The Convention certainly has the right to fix the amount of these salaries; and I think it has done exceedingly wrong in laying the section, fixing their amount, upon the table. Sir, if you want honest and competent men to fill office, you must pay them for their offices, and I believe you should pay them well. Of all things that we shall do, in my judgment, we should fix a minimum of salary for all these officers, below which the Legislature may not reduce them. If you reduce the salaries of these offices, only wealthy men, or such as desire to use office for their own corrupt and selfish purposes, will accept of them. Men of capacity and integrity cannot fill these offices without adequate compensation. I trust the gentleman from Owen (Mr. Dobson) will withdraw the section he has offered as a substitute, and that some gentleman will make a motion to take up the section just laid upon the table. I cannot make the motion, as I voted against laying on the table.

Mr. DOBSON. I will withdraw the section I have offered.

Mr. TANNEHILL. I move to take up the section just laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon taking from the table the section just laid there.

Mr. WATTS. All the arguments I have heard on the subject of reform in courts of justice, and everything of that kind, bases the qualifications of the individuals who hold offices in these courts and in the other departments of government entirely upon money. Now, sir, I assert that qualifications and compensation ought to go together. But it has been said, and I am willing to admit the truth of the assertion to some extent, that the salaries paid to our Governors, Judges, and other officers, have been very low, and perhaps lower than they ought to be. Notwithstanding the fact of the smallness of the salary of our Governor, for instance, I believe that, in qualifications, the Governors hitherto elected by either of the political parties in our State, can compare with the Governors of any other State in the Union; and, sir, the decisions of our judges of the Supreme Court and other courts have been looked to as good authority throughout the United States. And so with our other State officers; in point of qualification, they are behind the officers of no other State government in the Union.

Sir, I consider the time will come, when it will become necessary to give these State officers a much higher salary than is even named in the bill, and therefore I believe that it is impolitic to fix in the Constitution, at the present time, the compensation of these officers. I believe, therefore, that the matter of compensation should be left entirely with the Legislature, and, as they deem it necessary, they can decrease or increase them.

The question upon taking up from the table article 57, was then put, and, upon a division—ayes 43, noes 63—decided in the negative.

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

FRIDAY, JAN. 31, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. LANG.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. READ of Monroe, from the committee on "corporations other than banking," reported in accordance with instructions, a section providing that dues from corporations not possessing banking powers, shall be secured by such individual liabilities as may be prescribed by law.

The question being on the passage of the section,

The yeas and nays were taken, under the rule, and resulted thus—yeas 85, nays 36:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Beard, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Brookbank, Butler, Chenoweth, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Hendricks, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Moore, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Tannehill, Watts, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—85.

NAYS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Bright, Bryant, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Crawford, Davis of Vermillion, Fisher, Helmer, Kendall of Wabash, Kilgore, Kinley, Logan, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Morgan, Nave, Nofsinger, Pettit, Robinson, Shannon, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Walpole, Wiley, and Wolfe—36.

So the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

TIPPECANOE BATTLE GROUND.

Mr. BRYANT, from the committee on the public institutions of the State, made a report in relation to the donation to the State of the Tippecanoe Battle Ground by the late General John Tipton, accompanied by the following section, to-wit:

"It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to provide for the permanent inclosure and preservation of the Tippecanoe Battle Ground."

The section was read a first time, and was passed to a second reading.

Mr. HOWE moved a suspension of the rules in order to enable him to introduce the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the order of business be so changed that the first thing in the orders of the day shall be sections reported back from the committee on revision; and that the President be authorized to employ an enrolling clerk to enroll said sections as fast as they are acted upon by the Convention."

The rules were suspended, and the resolution having been read,

Mr. COOKERLY moved to amend the same by striking out the word "President," and inserting the words "principal Secretary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. In connection with this matter, I will make one remark to the Convention. I do not know, and the Secretary does not know, whether it is the intention of the Convention that two copies of the Constitution shall be enrolled; one for the office of the Secretary of State, and the other for the State Library. If it be the intention to have two copies made, the Secretary ought to be so informed now, because there is considerable labor attending it. The matter ought to be decided one way or the other.

Mr. PETTIT. The law under which we act settles this matter; it says that we shall deposit our draft of the Constitution, together with the journal of our proceedings, in the office of the Secretary of State. It does not contemplate the making of two enrollments.

Mr. BORDEN. There were two copies of the Constitution of 1816 enrolled, one for the office of the Secretary of State, and the other for the State Library, so that if one would be lost or destroyed, there would be another remaining. It is true the law requires but one; but I suggest whether it would not be better to have two.

Mr. HOWE. I have offered this resolution in order that the Convention may determine whether there shall be one copy or two. I have no particular preference myself one way or the other.

Mr. OWEN. For the purpose of bringing the Convention to a vote upon the question, whether there shall be two copies or one enrolled, I move to amend the resolution by inserting the words "two copies." I will say to the Convention that the additional expense will be a mere trifle, and that the two copies can be enrolled as expeditiously as one; at least both copies can be completed before our final adjournment.

Mr. WATTS. I believe the law under which we are acting only makes provision for one copy, and the appropriation for the expense of the additional copy will have to be made by the Legislature. I believe from the indications of the feeling existing at present in that quarter, they are not over disposed to make appropriations to pay even the unavoidable expenses of the Convention, and therefore, I am opposed to employing an additional officer, or authorizing the enrolling of an additional copy of the Constitution, unless we can first control the means to meet the necessary expense attendant on it.

Mr. OWEN. Every five minutes that we consume in talking about it, costs more than the entire expense of enrolling the instrument.

Mr. BASCOM. I rise to a question of order. The resolution proposes to change the manner of doing business. I ask if it does not necessarily lie over one day?

A MEMBER. The rules have been suspended.

The PRESIDENT. The rule does not refer to resolutions of this character.

The question was taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Posey, (Mr. Owen,) to insert the words "two copies;"

And it was, on a division, ayes 44, noes 44—not agreed to.

Mr. KILGORE. It does seem to me that the adoption of this resolution at this time would be premature. If we contemplate the enrolling of the Constitution, we had better wait I think until we are through with it. I understand that there will be additional sections ingrafted upon almost every article, and if you commence the enrollment too soon you may have to do the work over again. I do not see how we can with propriety commence the enrollment until we have the Constitution completed.

Mr. BORDEN. The gentleman, I think, is laboring under a misapprehension. The proposition is not that the Secretary shall proceed forthwith to have the Constitution enrolled; it merely declares that the Constitution shall be enrolled.

SEVERAL VOICES. All right—all right.

Mr. KILGORE. I am still not satisfied in regard to this matter. When the Convention shall have resolved that they will take up no further business, or adopt no further amendments, then it will be proper to pass such a resolution, but we have not as yet even completed the Bill of Rights; alterations may still be made. I move that the resolution be laid on the table for the present. [Cries of "no! no!"] The motion to lay on the table was withdrawn.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution,

Mr. PETTIT. It does appear to me that the Convention is certainly premature in regard to this matter. I certainly for once, agree with the "Delaware Chief." [Laughter.] What is it that you are proposing to do? You have not yet come to the conclusion of your work. You may yet put half a dozen new sections into the bill of rights. You may add new sections to the article on the subject of the judiciary, or article on the executive department, and so with regard to all the other articles. Until the Convention determine that they will pass no more sections, the committee on revision will not know how to report; they cannot tell how the sections ought to be arranged until the Convention have acted upon all the propositions that they intend to act upon. Because, otherwise, the committee might introduce a section in the wrong place. When we have finished our work and determined that we will pass no more sections, then the committee will be enabled to report, and we shall then have a vote upon concurring in their report; and the last section we pass may go up to the head, or next to the head, as boys do at school. [Laughter.] Sir, it is useless to pass this resolution at present; you cannot act under it; it is utterly impossible. I hope the resolution will not pass.

Mr. MATHER. I hope the resolution will pass. I cannot see the force of the argument of the gentleman from Delaware, and of the gentleman from Tippecanoe. If their argument is worth anything at all, we must wait here until we have acted upon every proposition that is to be inserted in the new Constitution before we take any steps for the enrollment of the instrument which we have been so long laboring to form. Now when the committee on revision make their report, according to the mode of procedure advocated by the gentlemen, what is the question that will be proposed? The question is, "Shall the amended Constitution be enrolled?" That question being decided affirmatively, we must necessarily wait here in idleness, until the work of enrollment is completed. Why not let it be in progress? I think there is no necessity in waiting until we are ready to adjourn sine die before the enrollment is commenced.

Mr. SPANN. This proposition contemplates making no new office; and no matter whether it is adopted or not, the work must be done.

The only question is, whether this enrollment shall be commenced to-morrow or deferred a week. I can see no reason why it should be deferred; on the contrary, if we are to adjourn on the tenth, I think it ought to be commenced at once. If I understood the remarks of the gentleman from Posey (Mr. Owen) the other day, when he proposed to introduce a new section, he seemed to be of the opinion that it would be the last section that would be introduced. So far as the ordering of this work to be done is concerned, it seems to me that it is as appropriate to order it to be done now as at any other time.

Mr. GORDON demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being upon the adoption of the resolution,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

The PRESIDENT. Before the Convention proceeds to any other business, the Secretary desires to know whether it is the pleasure of the Convention that the new Constitution shall be enrolled upon parchment.

SEVERAL VOICES. Certainly: let it be enrolled upon parchment.

It was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN moved that the rules be suspended, to enable him to take from the table a resolution that was introduced on Saturday by the gentleman from Johnson, in order that it might be referred to the committee on miscellaneous provisions.

The rules were suspended, and the resolution was taken up and referred to the committee on miscellaneous provisions.

The PRESIDENT. The Convention will now proceed to the consideration of the

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The PRESIDENT. The first thing in the orders of the day is the section of article number fifty-three, relative to any future amendments to the Constitution being voted upon separately, &c.

Mr. PETTIT. It seems to me that the resolution we have passed this morning, makes it necessary to pass another. In order that I may offer the following resolution, I will move a suspension of the order of business:

"Resolved, That after Tuesday next no new section shall be offered, nor shall any motion be made to re-consider the vote upon the engrossment or final passage of any act."

The order of business was not suspended.

The section above referred to, is to the following effect: If two or more amendments be submitted to the people at the same time, a separate vote shall be taken on each; and while one set of amendments is in progress before the Legislature, or awaiting the vote of the people, no new amendment or set of amendments shall be proposed.

Mr. KELSO. It seems to me there is more in this section than is necessary. I cannot see any good reason why, if there should be an amendment to the Constitution submitted to the people for their action, other amendments might not, previous to the action of the people on the first, be proposed in the Legislature, and the same course taken in regard to them as was taken in regard to the amendment first proposed. There can be no difficulty attending such a course, provided one amendment do not conflict with the other. I do not think there is any necessity for adopting this section.

Mr. RITCHEY. Our Legislature will meet but once in two years, and if one amendment be proposed by one General Assembly and be submitted to the people, and then another amendment be proposed by the next General Assembly, and various propositions in this way be in progress at the same time, the danger is that there will be confusion. I think we ought to provide that not more than one amendment to the Constitution should be mooted at one time.

Now it appears to me that, under the provisions of this section, it will not be permissible while one set of amendments are in progress to introduce a new set of amendments. My opinion is, that no new set of amendments should be introduced until the first set is disposed of; and by that means we will avoid much confusion. There are three stages through which all amendments must pass in their progress, before they finally become a part of the Constitution. Suppose the Legislature that meets in eighteen hundred and fifty-two should propose one set of amendments, and the Legislature that meets in eighteen hundred and fifty-four should propose another, and the Legislature that meets in eighteen hundred and fifty-six should propose a new batch, there would then be a whole string of amendments; some in their inception, and some ready for final action. All these questions being agitated at the one time, it appears to me must produce confusion.

Mr. McFARLAND. I hope the section will not be adopted. I hope the Convention will agree upon some easy mode of amending the Constitution the next time that it is necessary to amend it; and such a mode, I think, may be adopted without the proposition of the gentleman from Johnson. I hope that the citizens of Indiana will hereafter be able to make all necessary changes in their fundamental law without calling another Convention. I believe there is sufficient sterling good sense among the people to restrain them from any hasty or intemperate action. I do not apprehend that any danger will arise from an over-anxiety to make changes in your organic law.

Mr. KELSO. I say, in all candor, that it is my fixed belief if the new Constitution be adopted by the people at all, the credit of its adoption will be entirely attributable to the article that this section is to form a part of. If it were not for the facilities afforded to the people of Indiana for amending the Constitution by the section that has already been adopted, I feel safe in saying that not one-third of the people would support it. The only reason why they will support it at all is, because they will have the means hereafter of making the Constitution what it ought to be. But if we put this provision in the article, it will operate against the adoption of the Constitution to a great extent, without any corresponding good resulting from it. The provision that we have already adopted on the subject, is sufficient without this. And, if no other gentleman desires to address the Convention in regard to it, I move that the section be laid upon the table.

Mr. RITCHEY. I would like to have the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. KELSO. In order that we may have a direct vote on the section, I will withdraw the motion to lay upon the table.

So the motion to lay on the table was withdrawn.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. It strikes me that this section is not so objectionable as the gentleman from Switzerland seems to suppose. The principal object of the proposition is to prevent two or more sets of amendments being in progress at the same time, and by that means prevent the possibility of objectionable amendments being passed, through the medium of the combination of parties. I think the section ought to be adopted.

Mr. MOWRER. I demand the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was, on a division—ayes 46, noes 34—seconded.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

The yeas and nays were taken, under the rule, and resulted thus—yeas 100, nays 24—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Holman, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kilgore, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thornton, Trimby, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, and Zenor—100.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Barbour, Carr, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crumbacker, Graham of Warrick, Hogan, Hovey, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Nave, Rariden, Stevenson, Thomas, and Yocum—24.

So the section was passed, and referred to the committee on revision.

COUNTIES.

The section which empowers the Legislature to authorize a union of the counties of Spencer and Perry, provided the same be demanded by a majority of the voters in said counties, was taken up on its third reading.

Mr. FRISBIE moved that the section be re-committed, with certain instructions. [The reporter has not been furnished with a copy of the instructions proposed.]

The motion of the gentleman from Perry prevailed.

So the section was re-committed.

POWERS OF THE GOVERNMENT.

THE PRESIDENT. The next thing in order is the article reported from the committee on miscellaneous provisions, in relation to the powers of government.

The first section of said article was read, as follows:

"The powers of the government of Indiana shall be divided into three distinct departments, and each of them to be confided to a separate body or magistracy, to-wit: Those which are legislative to one; those which are executive to another; and those which are judiciary to another. And no person or collection of persons, being of one of those departments, shall exercise any power properly attached to either of the others, except in the instances herein expressly permitted."

The question being, "Shall the section pass?"

On motion,

The rule requiring the yeas and nays to be taken on the final passage of a section, was suspended.

The section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

The following section was then read a third time:

"When the duration of any office is not provided for by this Constitution, it may be declared by law, and if not so declared by law, such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment."

The question being, "Shall the section pass?"

On motion,

The rules were suspended requiring the yeas and nays, &c.

The section was passed, and referred to the committee on revision.

The following section was then read a third time:

"The Legislature shall have power, whenever it may deem the public good requiring it, to repeal all banking charters or laws granting banking privileges of any kind."

The question being, "Shall the section pass?"

Mr. KELSO. I move that the section be indefinitely postponed. That is a motion, sir, that will not cut off debate, and it is one that will try the merits of the question. I now beg leave to say, very briefly, that if this section be passed, it is tantamount to declaring that there shall never be a State Bank established in Indiana. Now, when the Legislature grants a charter it will be their duty—and I suppose the Legislature may reasonably be expected to do their duty—to limit the duration of that charter; for we have already provided that the operations of banking corporations hereafter established shall be limited to twenty years; and I understand an attempt has been made to fix a limit in regard to all other charters. Now if we leave it to the Legislature to fix a limit to the duration of bank charters, I think it is giving them enough without giving them the power to repeal them at any time.

Mr. CHAPMAN (in his seat.) The Legislature have never attempted to exercise such a power.

Mr. KELSO. Well, that is not saying that they never will. I am myself willing to vote for a limitation to all charters. Let them, for instance, be limited to twenty years duration. But, to say that after the people have invested their means under a charter granted by the Legislature, the Legislature shall have power to turn round and repeal the charter, and thus annul the contract that they have made, seems to me to be going further than the people desire or the interests of the State require that we should go. Certainly no good can result from it.

Mr. BORDEN said, he trusted the motion for indefinite postponement would not prevail. I had hoped (continued Mr. B.) that the committee would not recede from the position it had assumed yesterday, which was, that laws incorporating banks and authorizing banking associations should always be subject to modification, and if necessary, in case of flagrant violation of their charters, to be repealed.

Sir, it was said in debate on yesterday, that if this section passed no capitalist would ever invest his means in the business of banking in this State. Now I look upon this as an idle threat. Let me ask gentlemen what State in this Union has the greatest amount of banking capital invested, in proportion to its population and business? Why, unquestionably, sir, the great State of New York, and she has incorporated in her Constitution a section very similar to this. I hope the Convention will excuse me for reading it.

SEVERAL VOICES. Read—read it.

Mr. BORDEN. It is as follows:

“All general laws and special acts passed in pursuance of this section, may be altered from time to time, or repealed.”

By turning to the book—which lies upon our desks—containing the constitutions of all the States in the Union, gentlemen will find that it is a part of the first section of the eighth article of the Constitution of the State of New York, and has reference to the creating of banks under the provisions of the Constitution of that State.

Now, sir, why should we not insert this in our Constitution also? Are we going to create a whole brood of Banks here, and to refuse to confer upon the Legislature the power to modify their charters from time to time in order to secure the people of this State against their frauds? But, say gentlemen, “Oh, it is entirely unnecessary, because the Legislature will necessarily have that power; that it is an admitted principle that one Legislature cannot tie up the hands of another, and that any subsequent Legislature may repeal any general law authorizing banking associations which has been passed by a previous one. If, therefore, the General Assembly desire at any time to amend or repeal any general banking law, they can do it without our authorizing them to do it.” But, sir, I know that some very strong conservatives are disposed to dispute this position; and perhaps even some of those who now admit the correctness of it, will, if it is not expressly reserved in the Constitution, when that instrument has gone into operation, deny the authority of the Legislature to do it—to repeal these charters, &c.

Sir, I have endeavored to have the kind of security which the Auditor of State shall be authorized to receive under this general banking law named in the Constitution. But the union openly consummated here, in the face of the Convention, between the friends of a State Bank and the Free Bankers, has effectually prevented anything of the kind, and they have refused to permit the kind of security to be given to be changed; all that we can have is, that it is to be ample and readily convertible. Yes, sir, it must be ample; but what might appear to be ample to one man might appear to be very insufficient to another. Suppose you should hereafter pass a law by which Banks might carry on their operations on mortgages upon land, to be taken under the supervision of the Auditor of State as a security for the redemption of their paper, and after a while it should be found that there was not sufficient security, why, sir, then it would be strenuously contended by the friends of those institutions—and they always seem, by “hook or crook,” to have enough of them—that the quantity of the security was fixed; and they will refuse, perhaps, to comply with any law that may be passed, requiring them to give additional and better securities. Why, sir, had not the Legislature of New York this power, and exercised it, too, of requiring from Banks transacting business under the general banking law, to give this additional security; in fact, sir, requiring them to deposit the stocks of the State or of the United States, annually to redeem their circulation, there could have been no doubt that their banking system would long since have exploded.

Sir, the first thing that we shall know after the system has gone fairly into operation, supposing the security to be predicated upon mortgages, is, that it for the most part consists of water lots or Georgia lands. [A Voice.—“And soap factories.”] Yes, sir, and soap factories.

I do hope we shall retain the power in the hands of the Legislature to repeal these charters; and although I believe they would have the entire right whether we make such provision or not, yet, as the question is made, let us insert the provision so that the power may be expressly granted; and then, sir, those who undertake to bank under a State Bank charter, or who go into banking under a general law to be passed by the Legislature, will understand the matter, and govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. HAMILTON. It seems to be my misfortune to differ, on almost every occasion, with my honorable colleague; but I must tell the gentleman, in the first place, that he knows nothing about banking, and I must be permitted to say that I think he knows very little about the common monetary operations of the country.

Now, I undertake to say, that if you pass this section as it now stands, you cannot have a State Bank established, and I doubt very much if you will have any other.

I take different ground entirely from that taken by my colleague. I will meet him before our constituents upon the question. I hope the section will not pass.

Mr. COLFAX. I happen, unfortunately, to differ, and widely, too, from my friend who sits near me (Mr. Borden)—a difference that shall be frankly expressed here, and now. He was understood, when canvassing for the seat he now occupies, to be friendly to free Banking.

Mr. BORDEN (interposing). I will settle that with my constituents.

Mr. COLFAX (resuming). Certainly; but if he had heard the sentence out, he would have seen that I intended to charge upon him no violation of pledges, no matter what I may think of his course on the currency question. I alluded to that point to state, most explicitly, that when he, understood as he is here and elsewhere, to be a Free Banker, intimates, directly or indirectly, that "Georgia lands and water lots" might be considered, or claimed, or received, by Free Bank men themselves, as sufficient securities to guarantee the redemption of circulation, he intimates that which is not endorsed by any friend of a General Banking Law in this Convention that I am acquainted with, and I think that I know them all, or by any other friend of Free Banks in this State. I do not wish to have such an intimation go forth in our Debates, as spoken by a Free Bank delegate here, without declaring most emphatically, for other Free Bank members, that no such security, or any thing like it, is expected, desired, or contemplated by them. [Cries of "that's it."]

Mr. BORDEN (interposing.) How do we know that such security will not be considered sufficient by the Legislature?

Mr. COLFAX. We "know" it because we have declared in the Banking section we have adopted, that the security shall be amply sufficient for the redemption of the bills in specie.
We "know" it, because Free Bankers themselves, after that section passed, asked the privilege of making it still more stringent, and unanimously declared in a section since passed, that those securities should not only be "ample," but also "readily convertible into specie."
I think, with all kindness to my friend near me, that our acts and votes here are sufficient answer to the intimation, from any quarter, whether it comes from a supposed friend, or foe, that the advocates of a General Banking Law would even permit, if they had uncontrolled power, that "Georgia lands and water lots" should be received as security for their issues.

But a few words now as to the general question. The section proposes that any charter or law granting Banking privileges may be repeal-able by the Legislature. Such a provision would, of course, put it in the power of State Bankers and No Bankers to join together to repeal a General Banking Law—and, as a matter of necessity, for Free Bankers and No Bankers, in turn, to repeal a charter for a State Bank.
I have no doubt but that our No Bank friends here would have but little objection to such a provision, so obviously to their interest.

But, even if such should not be the result, I am not in favor of the provision for other reasons, going more directly to the correctness and justice of the proposition itself. Let us see how it would work in social or in business life, and I will use an illustration not entirely original with me. I make a contract with a man to clear and break twenty acres of land. He goes on to make all the necessary preparations.
He hires his hands, draws in his means from other pursuits, purchases his breaking team, builds his shanty, lays in his provisions, has his axes and every thing ready for the performance of his contract. But, just at that time, I step in and inform him that, without any cause but my own caprice, I have concluded to repeal my contract. What would be thought of such justice? And in what does it differ, on the principles of right, from authorizing Banks, and then, after the stockholders have withdrawn their capital from other business to take stock in them, have built their Banking houses, procured their steel-plates and bills, and organized their corps of officers, for the State to step in and say, "Stop; we revoke our contract." But, in the first case I have cited, the injured party has his right of redress. The doors of the courts are open, and they will award to him the damages he has incurred: while, in the latter case, there is no remedy, no redress. The State could not be sued, under this section, for revoking the privileges they have granted.

I desire to be fully understood. I do believe that any Legislature, in granting Banking or other corporate powers, should reserve to themselves the right to repeal, when those powers are abused, when the charter is violated, when the franchises are improperly used. But they should not reserve unlimited power of repeal, which may be exercised without cause. And it was certainly a wise provision, the one introduced by my friend from Jefferson, (Mr. Dunn,) so unanimously adopted, that Bank charters should not be granted for a longer term than twenty years, and that Banks, organized under a General Banking Law, should wind up their business at the end of the same term, and take from thence an entirely new start if they are authorized to continue.

But, if this Convention is determined to provide that Banking privileges shall be repealable at will by the Legislature—at least, save them from the caprice of a mere majority. With such a power existing as a Constitutional right, and with repeated attacks, session after session, upon them in the Legislature by interested or designing demagogues, what stockholder in any Bank would feel that his investment was safe?
Who would desire to place his means where they would be so insecure? And who, when he remembers the proverbial fickleness of Indiana legislation, would feel at all assured, if one Legislature rejected the repealing law, that the next one, under the influence of a few prominent men, enemies to the system, or perhaps incensed at being refused some accommodations, might not pass it by a decisive majority.

At any rate, if such a section must be adopted, I do hope that it will require something more than a bare majority vote to pass such repealing laws. If the power is not to be limited to cases where cause is shown, where the parties shall be notified of the wrongs charged, and opportunity given to defend themselves, there should at least be the security of a two-thirds vote required for the adoption of such laws. Better than all things else, however, would be to leave our Constitution silent on this subject. Let us give to our constituents a liberal instrument. Let it not seem to have written on it, "Hostility to Banks and all other Corporations." Let us leave to the Legislature the responsibility of deciding for what reasons and by what vote they will reserve to themselves this potent, this important power of repeal; and our constituents will, I doubt not, feel better satisfied than if we load down the Constitution and the Banking systems that are authorized by it, with restrictions that they do not desire, and which may seriously impair their practical and beneficial operations. I would not prohibit the Legislature from reserving this power of revoking; but we can safely leave it to them, knowing full well that they will guard the powers that they grant with all suitable restrictions.

Mr. COOKERLY (without rising from his seat). If you are going to leave everything to the Legislature, what is the use of a Constitution at all?

Mr. COLFAX. To settle general principles, and to leave details to the Legislature, as they should be.

Mr. BORDEN. The gentleman from St. Joseph (Mr. Colfax) says that he is a friend of free banking, and he repudiates the idea that any such securities as I have spoken of will ever be permitted by the Legislature to be taken for the redemption of bank issues. Well, sir, I hope so too. But is it not prudent to be prepared, always, for the worst? Can we now say what a legislature operated upon from without, by what has been so frequently here termed the "outside pressure," may do in time to come?

The gentleman says that I came here, the professed friend of free banks, but he, as a real friend of the free banking system, desires to be saved from such friends as I am. Sir, let me say to him that I am the exponent of the views of my constituents, and whether I truly carry out their views, or misrepresent them in this Convention, no man has a right to call me to account. The course that I marked out for myself, at home, I shall continue to pursue here. If the Convention should decide that there shall be banks of circulation in the State, I will then go for a well regulated banking system, so guarded, however, as in all instances to secure the bill holders. But I never did and never will promise to go for the mongrel system that this Convention has cooked up here. Now, sir, let me ask the gentleman if the security required by the general banking law, is to be so safe and secure as never to require any further action on the part of the Legislature, after this system is once put in operation? Why do the friends of the compromise banking section constantly refuse to designate the stock of the United States and of this State, as the only security which shall be received for their issues?

Sir, every day convinces me more and more of the all controlling influence of our State Bank; and of the powerful influence of these banking institutions when once put in operation will have over the destinies of the State, and the necessity there is for retaining in the hands of the representatives of the people, the power to restrain them from abuses.

Mr. HALL. I supposed that this banking question had been settled. This certainly bears the general impression, and I regret that an attempt has been made to interfere with the compromise that has been so amicably agreed upon. It seems to me that the Convention ought to dispose of the two sections in relation to this subject, by indefinite postponement. The one is striking at the very root of all banking, and the other militates against any general banking law that may be passed by the Legislature. It is useless to take up the time of the Convention in discussing questions of this nature, for they have already been fully discussed, and as I suppose the free banking men have the majority, they will never listen to the arguments of those opposed to all banks; they are sincere, no doubt. The free bank men and the State bank men have come to what they consider an honorable compromise. It seems improper, therefore, to interfere with the basis upon which that compromise has been effected. But a proposition is here introduced that is not called for by public sentiment.

Mr. PETTIT. This section I will take the liberty of reading in the ear of the Convention:

"The Legislature shall have power, whenever it may deem the public good requires it, to repeal all banking charters, or laws granting banking privileges of any kind."

"When they may deem the public good requires it." The Legislature of the State is by necessity the guardian of the public good, and they are to make and administer laws—they are to make and unmake laws when they deem the public good requires it. I will not say that the Legislature will capriciously and without cause change and modify the laws; but all laws that affect the people of Indiana, ought to be subject to repeal and modification whenever the Legislature deem that the public good requires it. Who is there here that is willing to say, "we have withheld this power from the Legislature—that we have grasped it from the masses, and taken it to ourselves, and although the public good may demand it, we will not surrender this power up—that we hold back these rights, despite the public good." That is what you ask, and that is what the gentleman from St. Joseph (Mr. Colfax) asks. When the public good demand it, let the pruning knife be put to it. Let the law fall—though a few fall, others will go up. If there must be an inequality, let the few go down while the millions prosper.

Sir, are you not willing to trust these matters to the Legislature? Is not the making of laws on all subjects entrusted to them now? And, sir, is it not expected that they will act for the public good, and not from private caprice—that they will not make a change in the laws to suit the views of a few, but will only do so when the public good requires it? Are you not willing that the Legislature shall have power to repeal all laws? I think they should have such power. Is there any danger that the Legislature will act capriciously in regard to this matter, if your banking corporations are good, if they furnish the community with a sufficient circulation, if they are not like leeches on the body politic, that cannot be removed without pulling off their heads, which ought to be pulled off? But if they are doing good, and the community demands their continuance, there is no danger that they will be put down under the operation of this section.

Sir, I hope the section will not be indefinitely postponed, but that it will be adopted, and I shall at least ask for the yeas and nays upon all questions relating to this subject.

Mr. BRACKEN demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. Would it be in order to move to lay the section on the table?

Mr. KELSO. That motion is in order at any time before the main question is ordered to be put.

Mr. BORDEN. Upon the question of indefinite postponement I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. COOKERLY. The previous question cuts off the motion to indefinite postponement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr McFarland being in the Chair). The President of the Convention has so decided.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being upon according to the ruling of the Chair upon the passage of the section.

The yeas and nays were taken, under the rule, and resulted, yeas 51, nays 73.

Mr. NILES' name being called, he said—

Mr. President. May I say one word in explanation of my vote? [Cries of "Consent."] I vote against this section on the ground that I understand the subject to have been compromised by requiring all banking institutions to be wound up in twenty years. I vote No.

The yeas and nays are as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bracken, Carter, Chapman, Coats, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Ritchey, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, and Yocum—51.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Jones, Kelso, Kilgore, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Niles, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Snook, Spann, Stevenson, Thomas, Thornton, Watts, and Zenor—73.

So the section was not passed.

The section which provides that the charters hereafter granted may be repealed, but the rights of all interested shall be protected, was read a third time.

Mr. BRIGHT moved that the section be re-committed, with instructions to amend so that special charters, or those granted under general laws, may be repealed by a two-thirds vote of the legislature.

Mr. PRATHER moved that the section, together with the instructions, be laid upon the table.

The question being on the motion of the gentleman from Jennings,

Mr. PETTIT demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, and being taken were, yeas 67, nays 61:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Barbour, Beard, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kelso, Kilgore, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mather, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Murray, Nave, Niles, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Shannon, Snook, Spann, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Watts, and Zenor—67.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bracken, Bright, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of

Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Garvin, Graham of Warrick, Harbolt, Hendricks, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Ritchey, Schoonover, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Thornton, Trimby, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, and Wunderlich—61.

So the section, together with the instructions, were laid upon the table.

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES.

Mr. WATTS moved a suspension of the order of business, that he might be enabled in pursuance of a notice given by him on a former day, to move to rescind the rule which requires the yeas and nays to be taken on the final passage of a section.

The order of business was suspended by consent.

The question being upon the adoption of the resolution to rescind the rule,

It was, upon a division—ayes 52, noes 57—decided in the negative.

The PRESIDENT. The next thing in order is the first section of the No. 56 article, reported from the committee on miscellaneous provisions, on its third reading.

The section is as follows:

"That no inconvenience may arise from the change in the Constitution of this State, and in order to carry the same into complete operation it is hereby declared and ordained—

That all laws or parts of laws now in force and not inconsistent with this Constitution, shall continue and remain in full force until they expire or be repealed."

The section was read a third time.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

The rules were suspended, and the section was passed and referred to the committee on revision.

The section which provides that the Governor, Secretary, Treasurer, and Auditor of State, shall severally reside and keep the public records, books and papers, in any manner relating to their several offices, at the seat of government, was read a third time.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

The rules being suspended, the section passed and was referred to the committee on revision.

The section which provides that all writs, causes of action, prosecutions, contracts, claims, and rights of individuals, bodies corporate, and of the State, shall continue, and all indictments which shall have been found, or which may hereafter be found, for any crime or offense committed before the adoption of this Constitution, may be proceeded upon as if no change had taken place in the organic law of the State, having been read a third time,

Mr. WALPOLE moved that it be re-committed with certain instructions, which he sent to the Chair.

Mr. KELSO raised the question whether the same in substance had not been voted down.

The PRESIDENT remarked that the same matter had in effect been voted down, and ruled the instructions out of order.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

The rules requiring the yeas and nays to be taken upon the final passage of a section being suspended,

The section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

The section which provides that "Every person who shall be elected or appointed to any office under this Constitution, or any law made in pursuance thereof, shall, before entering on the duties thereof, take an oath to support the Constitution of this State and of the United States, and an oath of office," was taken up on its third reading.

The section having been read a third time,

The question was, Shall the section pass?

The rule requiring the yeas and nays, &c., was suspended, and the section passed and was referred to the committee on revision.

RIGHT TO ACQUIRE REAL ESTATE.

The section which provides that "Resident aliens shall have power to acquire real estate in this State the same as citizens, and shall also have power to dispose of their property, whether real or personal, within the jurisdiction of said State, by testament, donation, or otherwise; and when a person dies intestate whose heirs or representatives are aliens, such representatives shall succeed to personal property the same as if they were not aliens, and the heirs, legatees, and distributees of any such intestate, shall succeed to all rights and privileges as such heirs, legatees, or distributees, the same as if they were citizens of the United States: Provided, That if aliens residing in foreign countries become the owners of real estate in this State by devise or descent, such aliens shall be allowed ten years to sell and dispose of the same, or to become citizens of the United States; and in default thereof, such real estate shall escheat to the State of Indiana for the use of common schools in the county where such real estate is situate," was taken up on its second reading.

The question being, Shall the section be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading?

The section, on motion, was laid upon the table.

Mr. FOSTER moved to take from the table the section which fixes the minimum of the salaries of Governor, Supreme Court Judges, and other officers.

On this section the yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken there were—yeas 48, nays 68—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Beach, Biddle, Blythe, Brookbank, Bryant, Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Foster, Garvin, Gibson, Hawkins, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Hovey, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Kelso, Kent, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mather, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Murray, Nave, Niles, Pettit, Ritchey, Robinson, Steele, Tannehill, Thornton, Walpole, and Wunderlich—48.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beard, Berry, Bowers, Bracken, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Crawford, Dick, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Helm, Hogin, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Logan, Mathis, May, McClelland, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Trimble, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, and Zenor—66.

So the Convention refused to take the section from the table.

The section which provides that any person of good moral character, and having the right of suffrage, may practice the law in any of the courts in this State, was taken up on its second reading.

The section was read a second time;

And the question being, Shall it be engrossed for a third reading?

The section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. WOLFE offered an additional section limiting the time to fifteen years within which an action to recover real estate may be brought.

The question being upon the adoption of the section,

It was decided in the negative.

Mr. WALPOLE moved to re-consider the vote by which the section offered by the gentleman from Sullivan had been rejected.

The motion was, upon a division—ayes 56, noes 48—decided in the affirmative.

So the vote was re-considered.

The question then being, Shall the section be adopted?

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and being taken there were yeas 51, nays 63.

So the additional section was not adopted.

Mr. MILROY offered an additional section providing that the Governor shall never receive a salary of less than $1,500 per annum, and Supreme and Circuit Judges less than a thousand dollars per annum.

Mr. SMITH of Scott offered an amendment, to the effect that the salaries of all officers other than county officers shall be regulated by law.

On motion by Mr. GORDON, the section and amendment were laid upon the table.

The section which provides that all officers, both civil and military, shall continue in office until superseded by officers elected under this Constitution, was read a second time.

The section was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The section which provides that, "the present incumbents, in the offices continued by the Constitution, (and who are elected by the people,) may exercise the duties of their respective offices until the expiration of the time for which they were elected; provided no incumbent shall continue in such office, by virtue of this section, for a longer period of time than the term of time prescribed by this Constitution to such office, was read a second time.

Mr. FOLEY moved that the section be laid upon the table.

Upon this motion the yeas and nays were demanded and were ordered, and being taken there were—yeas 16, nays 97—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Beeson, Bracken, Carr, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Fisher, Foley, Holman, Johnson of Dearborn, Kent, Milroy, Moore, Mowrer, Nave, Smith of Ripley, and Mr. President—16.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helmer, Hendricks, Hitt, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wallace, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Zenor—97.

So the section was not laid on the table.

Mr. COLFAX moved to amend so that the incumbent may continue in office, after the adaptation of the Constitution, a full term, as prescribed in the new Constitution, if his term, under the previous election, has not expired.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment,

It was decided in the affirmative.

The question recurred upon ordering the section as amended to be engrossed for a third reading.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

So the section was ordered to be engrossed.

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The PRESIDENT. The Convention will resume the consideration of the orders of the day, the first thing in order being article fifty-eight, on its second reading.

The Secretary read the article, as follows:

"SECTION 1. Resident aliens shall have power to acquire real estate in this State the same as citizens, and shall also have power to dispose of their property, whether real or personal within the jurisdiction of said State, by testament, donation, or otherwise; and when a person dies intestate whose heirs or representatives are aliens, such representatives shall succeed to personal property the same as if they were not aliens, and the heirs, legatees, and distributees of any such intestate, shall succeed to all rights and privileges as such heirs, legatees, or distributees, the same as if they were citizens of the United States: Provided, That if aliens residing in foreign countries become the owners of real estate in this State by testament or descent, such aliens shall be allowed ten years to sell and dispose of the same, or to become citizens of the United States; and in default thereof, such real estate shall escheat to the State of Indiana for the use of common schools in the county where such real estate is situate."

Mr. HENDRICKS. As this article seems to be a matter purely legislative in its character, I move to lay it upon the table.

This motion, upon a division—ayes 38, noes 25—was decided in the affirmative.

So the section was laid upon the table.

QUALIFICATIONS TO PRACTICE LAW.

Article fifty-nine, providing that any person of good moral character, and possessing the right of suffrage, shall be entitled to admission to practice in all the Courts of this State, next came up on its second reading.

Mr. SMILEY. I move to amend the section, by striking out the words "shall be entitled" and inserting the words "have a right."

Mr. FRISBIE. I move to lay the section and the amendment upon the table.

A division of the question was called for.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first taken upon laying the amendment on the table.

The question was put, and decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is, upon laying the section upon the table.

The question was put, and decided in the negative.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

REAL ESTATE.

Mr. WOLFE offered an additional section, requiring the Legislature to make provision limiting the right of action to recover real estate to fifteen years.

Mr. W. I desire to say a word or two upon this proposition. We have been here now four months, and have done nothing having particular reference to the interests of the farming community. The peace and prosperity, sir, of our State, depends upon the settled titles of those owning real estate within her borders to their estates. Much difficulty has arisen in other States upon this subject, and in some of them they have limited the right of action to recover real estate, to seven years. Sir, I think that a farming community, such as is Indiana, should be protected in its rights of property; their interests should be attended to as well as the interests of other classes and professions. It is impossible for a farming community to keep perfect their titles for fifty or a hundred years, so that there should be some reasonable limit to the extent of the title under which recovery might be claimed; and I think fifteen years amply sufficient for that purpose. In one of the counties the records of titles were consumed by fire, through accident, so that it would be almost impossible to restore those titles; this I give as an example in point. There have been cases, also, in my own county, where government lands, given under patents, that have been held in occupancy for thirty or forty years, have been recovered by the government because of broken titles. I trust the Convention will unanimously adopt this measure.

The question upon the adoption of the section having been put, upon a division—ayes 30, noes 41—it was rejected.

Mr. WALPOLE. I voted in the majority by which this section was laid upon the table, for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Sullivan to have an opportunity of calling for the yeas and nays upon the question. This is a matter in which not only Sullivan county but every other county in the State is interested in having settled, undisputable titles to real estate. I move, sir, that the vote just taken upon the section under consideration, be re-considered.

Upon this question the yeas and nays were demanded, and ordered; and were taken, with the following result—yeas 66, nays 48.

YEAS.—Messrs. Balingall, Bascom, Beach, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Holman, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Kinley, Logan, Maguire, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Pettit, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Schoonover, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Tague, Thornton, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—66.

YAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Brookbank, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Dick, Duzan, Edmonston, Garvin, Hendricks, Hitt, Hovey, Jones, Kelsa, Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Match, May, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Nave, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Schoonover, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Steele, Stevenson, Thomas, Wallace, Wheeler, and Wiley—48.

So the vote rejecting the section was reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the adoption of the section.

Upon this question the yeas and nays were demanded, and ordered; and, being taken, the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 51, nays 63.

YEAS.—Messrs. Beach, Beard, Bowers, Bracken, Butler, Carr, Chenoweth, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Helm, Hitt, Holman, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Logan, Mathis, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Tague, Tannehill, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, and Yocum—51.

YAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Bascom, Beeson, Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Edmonston, Foster, Garvin, Hawkins, Helmer, Hendricks, Hovey, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kelsa, Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Maguire, March, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Nave, Newman, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Steele, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Wiley, Wunderlich, Zenor, and Mr. President—63.

So the section was not adopted.

Mr. MILROY offered a section providing that the Governor should never receive a salary less than fifteen hundred dollars per year, and the Supreme and Circuit judges less than one thousand per year.

Mr. SMITH of Scott offered the following amendment to the section: "That all officers other than county or township officers, and members of the General Assembly, shall receive for their services such compensation as shall be prescribed by law, and no increase or diminution shall take effect during the terms for which they shall be severally elected."

A MEMBER. I move to lay the amendment upon the table.

Mr. SMITH. I believe, Mr. President, I have the floor, and I am not disposed to yield it to gratify the wish of any gentleman, without first explaining the object of my amendment. It is plain to be seen what class of gentlemen are so sensitive upon this subject. Yes, sir, these gentlemen are here claiming the privilege of raising the salaries of the different officers of the State; but I would advise the Convention to be careful upon this subject; we should, by no means, take such a responsibility. It should be recollected that the Convention of eighteen hundred and sixteen, which assembled to frame our present Constitution, took upon itself no such responsibility; and I should think, also, that this Convention had taken upon itself a sufficient amount of responsibility already, without increasing it by the adoption of the section before us. We have already given the General Assembly power to increase the present number of Supreme judges to five, and also a reporter, which is equal to an increase of three officers in the Supreme Court; and now who supposes the people will be willing to increase the salaries of those Supreme judges, as asked for in the section? But this does not yet satisfy these worthy gentlemen. They ask that Circuit judges may be better paid, in order to support their dignity, and the Governor and Treasurer, Auditor and Secretary, and all. All have some peculiar kind of dignity which gentlemen seem to be extremely anxious to sustain. Now let me say to these gentlemen, that I look at the tax-payer on his farm, or in his shop, or store, as possessing as much dignity as any person whom they may choose to give these offices to. And I verily believe that the people, who are the employers, will be willing to pay the employee a sum sufficient to support their dignity equally as well as their own is supported, and that should satisfy them; if not, they can resign. Now, sir, I know of no salary but what is of a fair amount, and a good compensation for the services rendered; however, let us leave the matter of increase or diminution of salaries, to be determined by the Legislature.

It is said that the Legislature will not do this; that we must take the responsibility. The gist of that argument is simply this: they refuse to take the responsibility in their individual capacity to raise the salaries of individual officers, but this Convention may take that responsibility. Now, sir, if the General Assembly, fresh from the people, have refused to increase these salaries from year to year, with nothing but their individual reputation at stake, I think, sir, we should be cautious about acting in the matter. After having gone to the expense we have to prepare a Constitution to present to the people, we should keep from it everything that will encumber it.

The amendment which I have offered, I think, should satisfy every gentleman here; for it leaves to the people, through their representatives, the settlement of this entire subject of compensation of office. It is a conservative measure. If suitable officers cannot be procured for the present amount of pay, which will probably be agreed upon by the Legislature, why they can easily be increased; but I think the present compensation is sufficient.

I do not believe in the suggestion thrown out that we must give higher salaries than we are now giving, in order to secure suitable and talented officers. I ask gentlemen, in all sincerity, if they expect, by giving higher salaries, to get more talented State officers than we now have? Can we obtain a better array of talents on the judicial bench, a better Governor, Secretary, Auditor, and Treasurer of State, than we now have? I do not believe that any gentleman will say so.

MR. KELSO. Yes ———

MR. SMITH. The gentleman from Switzerland says "yes," and confirms it with language which I cannot consent to pollute my lips by repeating.

Now, sir, the same assertion was made the other day by the gentleman from Allen, (Mr. Borden,) and the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. Kilgore). But what do the facts demonstrate? Why, sir, it is simply this: when the salary of judges was one thousand dollars per year, both the gentleman from Allen and the gentleman from Delaware were elected to that highly dignified office, and before the expiration of their term of service the salary of Circuit judges was cut down to eight hundred dollars. At the expiration of their term, what did those talented judges? Why, sir, the gentleman from Allen came here and asked the General Assembly to re-elect him, which they did; and as for the gentleman from Delaware, he seems to have been equally anxious for re-election; but, less fortunate than his worthy friend from Allen, was unsuccessful, and in his anger and wrath declares that salaries were too low to secure the best talents. [Laughter.] So much for the testimony of these gentlemen.

This amendment further provides that the salaries of these officers shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they are elected. This was drawn up so as to prevent officers from having the opportunity of increasing their own salaries while holding office, or rather of exerting their influence to secure that object.

It will be noticed, further, that county and township officers and members of the General Assembly, have been exempted in this amendment. This exception was made on account of a section we have already adopted, section seventeen, which provides for their compensation. I trust my amendment will be adopted.

MR. GORDON. I move to lay the section and pending amendment upon the table.

A division of the question was called for.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first upon laying the amendment of the gentleman from Scott (Mr. Smith) upon the table.

Upon this motion the yeas and nays were demanded, and ordered, and taken, with the following result—yeas 43, nays 73:

YEAS.—Messrs. Biddle, Blythe, Bourne, Brookbank, Butler, Carr, Clark of H., Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gordon, Gregg, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helmer, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Logan, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Nave, Niles, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Robinson, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, and Mr. President—43.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Bryant, Chapman, Chenoweth, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foley, Gootee, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Helm, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steels, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Trimby, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Zenor—73.

So the amendment was not laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon laying the additional section offered by the gentleman from Carroll upon the table.

The question was put, and decided in the affirmative.

MR. WATTS. Do I understand, Mr. President, that by laying this amendment upon the table the section goes with it?

The PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

The following section came up on its second reading:

"The General Assembly shall provide by law for empowering boards of canvassers in each county to hear and determine all contested elections, for the offices of members of the General Assembly, and for all county offices; and a mode by which appeals may be taken from the decisions of such boards to the Circuit Courts, and for empowering such boards and courts, when justice cannot otherwise be done, to refer contested elections back to the people."

Mr. PEPPER of Crawford. I believe that this is more appropriately a statutory provision. I therefore move to lay it upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

BOUNDARIES AND OFFICES.

Article 61 next came up upon its second reading.

It is as follows :

SECTION 1. In order that the boundaries of the State of Indiana may more certainly be known and established, it is hereby ordained and declared that the following shall be and forever remain the boundaries of said State, to-wit: Bounded on the east by the meridian line which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio; on the south by the Ohio river from the mouth of the Great Miami river to the mouth of the river Wabash; on the west by a line drawn along the middle of the Wabash river from its mouth to a point where a due north line drawn from the town of Vincennes would last touch the north-western shore of the said Wabash river; and from thence by a due north line until the same shall intersect an east and west line drawn through a point ten miles north of the southern extreme of Lake Michigan; on the north by the said east and west line until the same shall intersect the first mentioned meridian line which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio.

SECTION 2. The State of Indiana shall possess jurisdiction and sovereignty co-extensive with the boundaries as declared in the preceding section, and have concurrent jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases with the State of Kentucky on the Ohio river, and with the State of Illinois on the river Wabash so far as said rivers form the common boundary between this State and said States respectively.

SECTION 3. All officers, both civil and military, shall continue in the exercise of the duties of their respective offices until said officers are superseded under the authority of this Constitution.

SECTION 4. The present incumbents in the offices continued by this Constitution, (and who were elected by the people,) may exercise the duties of their respective offices until the expiration of the time for which they were elected: Provided, No incumbent shall continue in such office by virtue of this section for a longer period of time than the term of time prescribed by this Constitution to such office.

Mr. LOCKHART moved to lay the first and second sections of this article upon the table.

He said that if the chairman of the committee who reported these sections was here, he would make the same motion, inasmuch as a report upon the subject of boundaries was now ready prepared by a select committee who had charge of the subject.

Sections one and two were accordingly laid upon the table.

Section three, relative to the tenure of military and civil offices, was then read a second time and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Section four, relating to the present incumbents in office, was then read a second time.

Mr. FOLEY moved to lay the section upon the table.

Upon this motion the yeas and nays were demanded, ordered, and taken, with the following result : yeas 16, nays 97.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

Mr. COLFAX moved to amend by striking out and inserting, that the incumbent may continue in office after the adoption of the Constitution a full term, as prescribed in the new Constitution, if his term under the previous election, has not expired.

The amendment was concurred in.

The section, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Article No. 62 then came up on its second reading.

The Secretary read it, as follows :

SECTION 1. In order that the boundaries of the State of Indiana may be known and established, it is hereby ordained and declared that the State of Indiana is bounded on the east by the meridian line which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio; on the south by the Ohio river from the mouth of the Great Miami to the mouth of the river Wabash; on the west by a line drawn along the middle of the Wabash from its mouth to a point where a due north line drawn from the town of Vincennes would last touch the northwest shore of said Wabash river, and from thence by a due north line until the same shall intersect an east and west line drawn through a point ten miles north of the southern extreme of Lake Michigan; on the north by said east and west line until the same shall intersect the first mentioned meridian line which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio.

SEC. 2. In order that the southern boundary of this State may be better known and established than is declared in the preceding section, it is hereby ordained and declared that the boundary of this State upon the Ohio river extends to the centre of the Ohio river, and that Indiana has concurrent jurisdiction with the State of Kentucky on said river between the mouth of the Great Miami river and the mouth of the Wabash river, and that all the counties of this State bound by the Ohio river, shall have and exercise such original and concurrent jurisdiction fronting said counties.

Mr. PETTIT. I think the committee has made a mistake in the second section of this article. That section declares a usurpation, in my judgment, upon the rights of the State of Kentucky, which, if the members of this confederacy were separate nations, might be a cause of war between us and Kentucky. It is always a most flagrant offense, and has been the occasion of war between neighboring nations for one nation to assert jurisdiction over the territory of another. This section declares that our territory extends beyond where it really does extend; and it is an encroachment which I do not think the State of Kentucky will submit to. If in like manner the States of Kentucky and Illinois were to usurp dominion over the soil of Indiana, we would not be likely to submit to it. The territory of Indiana, on its southern boundary, goes to the low-water mark of the Ohio river and no further, in my judgment. That assertion is predicated on the deed of cession given by Virginia to the United States, of the territory, out of a portion of which was formed this State. That deed of cession gave to the United States all the territory northwest of the Ohio river; mark the language—northwest of the Ohio river; and it has been judicially decided that the territory extends no further.

The learned gentleman of the law who has reported this section may be able to convince me that I am in error upon this subject. I desire to hear from him. But, sir, I hold, with the light I have at present upon the subject, that our territory goes no further than low water mark on the Ohio River, and to extend it beyond that line, is, in my opinion, a plain usurpation of the territory of Kentucky, an infringement upon her rights. The boundary of the State of Ohio only extends to low water mark on the Ohio River. If I am in error I trust the gentleman of the committee that framed this section will correct me.

Mr. LOCKHART. I am fully prepared to satisfy not only the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit) but the most skeptical mind upon the subject that we have an undoubted right not only to the territory extending to the borders of the Ohio river on our side, but to the centre of the stream; but, as I have some geographical statistics to present, I trust the further consideration of the subject may be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. PETTIT. I hope the subject will be postponed until to-morrow, as it is one of vital importance and we should have further light in regard to it.

The further consideration of the Article 62, was accordingly postponed until to-morrow.

On motion, the Convention adjourned.

SATURDAY, FEB. 1, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. MILLS.

The journal of yesterday was read, and approved.

BOUNDARY OF THE STATE.

The PRESIDENT. The Convention will take up article sixty-two, the consideration of which was postponed until this morning.

Mr. PETTIT. I rise to ask a question in relation to this matter. I was not aware that this article was made the special order.

The PRESIDENT. The consideration of the article was postponed until this morning. It is, consequently, the first thing in order.

Mr. LOCKHART. I am again under the necessity of asking the indulgence of the Convention to make a further postponement of this subject until Monday. I desire to make some remarks in relation to it, and I am now laboring under a severe cold.

The consideration of the article was postponed, by unanimous consent.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAWKINS, from the committee on miscellaneous provisions, reported a section declaring the present Constitution superseded by the new, &c.

The section was read a first time, and was passed to a second reading.

Mr. OWEN, from the committee on revision, reported the first article of the new Constitution, revised and arranged, and ready for final adoption.

Mr. PETTIT inquired of the Chair whether the sections reported were subject to amendment, seriatim, as they were read.

The PRESIDENT. It will be for the Convention to determine its mode of action in regard to them. The Chair would, however, suggest the propriety of allowing the article to be read through.

The article having been read by the Secretary.

Mr. RARIDEN. I should be glad to know whether the report is susceptible of amendment at this time.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that the only amendments in order will be amendments in relation to the arrangement which the committee on revision have made.

Mr. EDMONSTON. I will move that the Convention take up the article, section by section, and pass upon it.

Mr. BORDEN. I would inquire if this is not to be treated like every other report, to be taken up for the action of the Convention in its proper order?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark, in reply to the gentleman from Allen, that the Convention adopted a resolution yesterday, to the effect that they would take up and act upon the reports from the committee on revision in preference to any others.

Mr. PETTIT. I will move that the report of the committee on revision be concurred in.

Mr. NILES. I should be sorry to see the entire report thrown open so that every section could, in effect, be re-considered; but, whenever the committee have changed even the phraseology, it does seem to me that the Convention should take time to consider the changes thoroughly before adopting them.

It is evidently impossible for any man, on merely hearing the report once read, to say whether he would concur in all the changes or not. Many changes would not affect the sense, but, in some instances, a mere verbal alteration in a section may give an entirely different meaning from that intended by the Convention. I, for one, have had no opportunity to compare the report with the sections as referred to the Committee; but I notice a change, which I deem an unfortunate one, in the preamble. The sentence is made longer, less forcible, and more unmeaning. I can see no object in such an alteration. It would look as if it was made from the mere love of change. I hope that the motion to approve the report entire, will not be passed through at the present moment.

Mr. OWEN. I should imagine that it would be more satisfactory to the Convention to take up the report section by section.

Mr. PETTIT. There can be no other alternative but that this report must be rejected as a whole or sustained as a whole. If you open up the matter again to a direct vote upon each proposition, why the things that we have debated longest and contended most about, may be changed, and the whole thing will again have to go back to the committee on revision; and it will be impossible to say when our work may be completed. The only question is this: is there any substantial difference between the sections as passed by the Convention and as reported back by the committee? There is a difference, it is true, in the very outset—in the first section—but it is a difference arising from transposition, and is not a difference in substance. There is nothing, sir, that even cavil could find fault with in the alteration that has been made by the committee, and if you undertake to say that the whole matter is again open to amendment, section by section, when on earth are you to get through? If you are going to reverse now, when the attendance of members is thin, what you have done when the Convention was full, our time will have been spent in vain. Sir, there are sections that I do not approve of, yet I do not ask that they shall be re-considered. The question must necessarily be now, Will the Convention concur in the report of the committee?

Mr. BADGER. The gentleman from Tippecanoe has said that we must either concur in the report of this committee of revision or reject it. Now, sir, I would like to know if we have not the power still to amend this report? We certainly have. And, sir, rather than be compelled to accept the report of this committee without the power to amend it, I am willing that it should be rejected.

We have here an important change made in the preamble; a change that I can by no means sanction. Sir, the sentiment is not only changed, but the preamble, as reported by the committee, is not true. It expresses our gratitude to Almighty God, for what? For the free exercise of the right to choose our own form of government. Now this, I say, is in part untrue; for we have only a right to establish a government which, in all its relations to its sister States, will conform to the requirements of the Federal Constitution. Now, sir, were we disposed to form any other sort of government, we have not the freedom to do it and comply with our oath of office, which is to support the Constitution of the United States.

I have no disposition to charge the committee with doing wrong intentionally, but being human, they too may err. Now, sir, I suggest to the Convention the propriety of postponing any further action upon this report until Monday next. Let us take up the sections which are yet to pass their third reading; dispose of them to-day, and we shall have nothing to do next week but to canvass the reports of this revisionary committee. I notice several changes in sections referred to this committee, and I desire an opportunity so to amend, as that they shall appear in the most unexceptionable form possible. I hope the Convention may act in conformity with this suggestion.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark to the gentleman from Putnam, that his suggestion cannot be carried out. There is an established rule of the Convention which requires one day's notice to be given of any amendment to the rules.

Mr. NILES. I would inquire whether it would be in order to amend the motion of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, so that we may concur in all that part of the report in which there is no change of phraseology, leaving the other portions for consideration afterwards?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not. The motion of the gentleman from Tippecanoe is simply to concur in the report of the committee. The Chair would further remark to the gentleman from Laporte, that if the Convention do not concur in the report, he can accomplish his object by making the motion he proposes to make.

Mr. NILES. Then, sir, ———

Mr. READ of Clark. I move the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Laporte has the floor.

Mr. READ of Clark. I think this is the second time the gentleman has spoken on this question.

The PRESIDENT. If no other gentleman desires to speak, the gentleman from Laporte (Mr. Niles) has a right to speak a second time.

Mr. NILES. Then, sir, as we have no opportunity to see what changes have been made, we must vote in the dark; I therefore move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Tippecanoe.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has just remarked that such a motion would not be in order.

Mr. NILES. I would inquire if it were not in order to concur in the report, with an amendment?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir, not under the present circumstances. The gentleman from Tippecanoe has moved that the report be concurred in as it stands.

Mr. NILES. Were it in order I would move an amendment substituting the form of the preamble as adopted by the Convention, instead of that reported by the committee; and though it may be a matter of small practical importance, I think it worthy of a moment's consideration. The preamble, as adopted by the Convention, was brief, terse, and classical. "We, the people of the State of Indiana, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom," is a sentence for fullness, force, and beauty, hardly surpassed in the English language. In point of style, it is worthy of the Declaration of Independence. But the committee change its whole effect when they substitute for the one word "freedom" the words that they use: "for the free exercise of the right to choose our own form of government." Indeed, sir, the preamble reported by the committee is not strictly true. We have not the right to choose our own form of government. We are confined, by the Constitution of the United States, to a republican form of government; and could not, if we would, choose a monarchy. The word "freedom" includes our civil and religious liberty. It is a fine old household word. I have the highest respect for the committee, but I do think that the change is unworthy of a school boy. Without this change we should have a preamble shorter and more appropriate than could be found to any other written constitution in the world. The one sentence, "We, the people of the State of Indiana, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, do ordain this Constitution," would convey a full recognition of the Divine Providence in human affairs, and of our obligations of gratitude for the blessings which are secured by good government. It would produce a wholesome impression upon the mind of every person who should ever read it; and would, of itself, secure something of respect for the Constitution, even if it had not one other redeeming feature.

Mr. BORDEN. I wish to call the attention of the Convention to a single fact. Without designing to throw any censure upon the sub-committee, I will state that this article was referred to the full committee and it was concurred in by them. The sub-committee have chosen to make an alteration, and I am not prepared to say whether or not I shall concur in the report of the sub-committee. I was under the impression that this committee had been instructed by a resolution, to lay their reports on the tables of members one day at least, before we were called upon to act on them. Now there are two material points in which this article has been varied from the shape in which it stood when passed by the Convention. I trust that the report will be allowed to lie over for examination.

Mr. OWEN. In explanation, I will say that we supposed we had submitted to every member of the Convention the alteration in the phraseology that was proposed to be made. It is a mere transposition; there is no alteration in substance whatever.

But a word in reply to the gentleman from Laporte. Now I not only hold that the report of the committee is as good as the article referred to the committee, but I believe that it is a good deal better. Now the gentleman says that we restrict the matter by saying that "we are grateful to Almighty God for the free exercise of the right to choose our own form of government." I ask him why not say that we are grateful for a thousand other things; for our prosperity, for the peace that prevails, &c.? Why not say we are grateful for everything we enjoy, and why not specify everything that we are grateful for? No, sir; but here we are about to choose our own form of government, and the appropriate thankfulness to God is, that we are free to choose our own form of government. We might go on and say, we are thankful for health, for life, and for all the blessings attendant on our existence. But while we are about, in this solemn manner, to thank God for what we enjoy, we should make that expression of thankfulness correspond with the particular work in which we are engaged. It is peculiarly appropriate for us to say in this Convention, while we are establishing a form of government, that we are grateful to Almighty God for the right to establish a form of government for ourselves. That is precisely what we are going to do. And as to what is said by the gentleman from Putnam about our right to change or alter what we have already done, have we not that right? Certainly. We have a right to change or alter the Constitution in any particular. Nothing is more certain than that we have the right to alter or change the form of our government, and no expression can be more appropriate, in a restrictive sense, than this: that being about to change our form of government, we are thankful for the right to do it.

Mr. CRUMBACKER. In order that gentlemen may have time to examine this report and make up their minds with reference to the changes that have been made by the committee on arrangement and phraseology, I move that it be made the special order for to-day at two o'clock, P. M.

Mr. KELSO. I wish to suggest a point of order. The printing of the sections, as passed by the Convention and as reported by the committee on revision, arrangement, and phraseology, and placing them side by side, was authorized and directed by a resolution of the Convention; and that resolution, if my recollection is correct, declared that they should be printed and laid upon the tables of members at least one day before we should be required to vote upon them. Now, however, when the first report is made, we are called upon instantaneously to vote upon it. Now some important changes have been made, which I am not prepared to vote upon at this time. My point of order is, that the report should be laid upon our tables one day before we be required to vote upon it.

I ask that the resolution be read. If I am right in regard to this matter, it will be out of order to act upon this report at present.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs the Chair that the resolution that was passed upon this subject, is in the hands of the printer; it consequently cannot be referred to at this moment.

Mr. KELSO. I will appeal to the recollection of every gentleman in this body.

The question was taken on the motion to postpone the consideration of the report until 2 o'clock P. M. this day.

The question was, on a division, ayes 52, noes 38—decided in the affirmative.

So the consideration of the report was postponed until 2 o'clock, P. M.

TAXATION OF CORPORATE STOCK.

Mr. WALPOLE, from the committee on miscellaneous provisions, reported a section to the effect that the capital stock in plank road, railroad, and moneyed corporations, upon which a profit may be derived, shall be subject to the like State and county tax, as the property of individuals; the county tax shall be equal to the State tax, which tax shall be paid into the State treasury—the county tax to be appropriated to the several counties for the use of common schools.

The section was read a first time, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. WALPOLE, from the same committee, also reported a section, that the Constitution shall be submitted to the people for adoption on the first Monday in June—the vote to be by ballot—the article in relation to negro exclusion to be submitted at the same time—the vote to be also taken by ballot—the ballots in favor of exclusion to contain—“For the Exclusion of Negroes and Mulattoes and their Colonization.”

Those opposed to contain the words, “Against the Negro and Mulatto Article.” A majority of votes to carry the Constitution, and a majority to carry the separate article, and which is to form a part of the Constitution, whether the main Constitution is adopted or not. Should the Constitution be adopted, an election is to take place on the second Tuesday in October, 1851, for the election of three Judges of the Supreme Court, a Judge and Prosecutor for each Judicial Circuit, Auditor, Treasurer, and Secretary of State, Representatives to Congress, Clerk of the Supreme Court, and all other State and county officers, whose election would have taken place on the 1st Monday of August had there been no change in the Constitution of the State.

The section was read a first time, and was passed to a second reading.

Mr. KELSO, from the same committee, reported a section providing for a division of the State into three Supreme Court districts, and designating the counties in each district.

The section was read a first time and passed to a second reading.

Mr. KELSO, from the same committee, reported back a section amended according to the instructions of the Convention, allowing the counties of Perry and Spencer to form a new county whenever a majority of the citizens in said counties shall so decide.

The question being “Shall the section pass?”

Mr. COOKERLY moved that the rule requiring the yeas and nays to be taken on the passage of a section be suspended.

The question on suspending the rule was, upon a division—ayes 79, noes 22—decided in the affirmative.

So the rule was suspended and the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision, arrangement, and phraseology.

Mr. KELSO, from the same committee, reported a section allowing Dearborn, Ohio, Switzerland, Blackford, and Wells to retain their present mode of doing township business, if permitted by the Legislature.

Mr. KELSO, on making this report, remarked that the committee had sent a resolution expressly directing the committee to report such a section as this one. There was, he added, nothing wrong in the provisions of the section.

The section was read a first time and passed to a second reading.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETTIT, in pursuance of notice previously given, offered for adoption the following resolution:

“After Tuesday next, no new section shall be introduced, and no motion shall be entertained to re-consider the vote on the passage of any section.”

Mr. COLFAX. It is doubtful to me if we are not tying up our hands too much by adopting such a resolution as this. I suggest to the gentleman to insert a provision to this effect: "without the consent of two-thirds of the members."

Mr. PETTIT. I am willing to say three-fourths.

Mr. WALPOLE. I will suggest to the gentleman to add to his resolution the words "unless the committee on revision, arrangement, and phraseology propose any new matter."

Mr. PETTIT. We must, if we are going to adjourn on the tenth inst., pass a peremptory resolution prohibiting the introduction of any new proposition from any quarter.

Mr. WALPOLE. Well, sir, I give it up. The question being upon the adoption of the resolution,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. HITT. I desire to introduce a resolution in this form:

"Resolved, That hereafter no delegate shall speak more than five minutes at a time."

Mr. LOCKHART moved that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question then being on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. McFARLAND. It is well known that there is a question pending, and one of very considerable importance, too, upon which the gentleman from Vanderburg (Mr. Lockhart) desires to address the Convention, and that that question has been postponed until Monday next. I hope, therefore, that this resolution will not be now adopted.

Mr. KELSO. Now I do not know but that I may want to say a word before the end of the session upon some question, and if I do, and if it should be a matter of sufficient importance to detain the Convention in speaking upon it, I may take ten or fifteen minutes in doing so, and I believe I have not detained the Convention fifteen minutes at any one time for the last ten days. Whenever there is a subject before the body that is worthy of its attention, I do not hesitate to say that the man who will not express his views in regard to it, is recreant to his duty, to his constituents. Now, I do not want to speak for over fifteen or twenty minutes at any time. But there are many important matters yet to be acted upon, and I ask if this resolution is offered for the purpose of closing our mouths when the sections reported by the smoothing iron committee come up for consideration? If that be the object, I hope the Convention will make a summary disposition of it, by voting it down. I think we have been sufficiently gagged throughout the session. I ask if there has been a single important measure that has not been passed under the lash of the previous question? And I ask, too, if it would not much better have satisfied the people at home if that restriction on free discussion had not been imposed? And now, forsooth, when we come to the last and most important stage of our proceedings, the most important not only to us, but to the interests of the people of the whole State, we are to be cut off by a five minutes rule, scarcely affording time for a respectable exordium, much less for an argument. I say, for one, that such a resolution ought not, for a moment, to receive the favorable consideration of this Convention.

Mr. SHERROD demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was, on a division—ayes 53, noes not counted—seconded,

And the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being upon the adoption of the resolution,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BADGER offered the following resolution.

"Resolved, That the Convention now take up the orders of the day."

The resolution was not agreed to.

Mr. EDMONSTON offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That all the committees except the committee on revision and the committee on accounts, be discharged, &c., &c."

The question being on the adoption of the resolution,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution discharging the committees, &c., &c., was adopted.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. President, I hold in my hand two resolutions, which I desire to submit to the Convention for their adoption; and which I presume, when explained, will meet with little or no opposition. When we assembled here last fall to commence the work of revising the Constitution, some of the members, through curiosity to examine the venerable instrument, applied to the Secretary of State to see the original copy of the present Constitution. It could not then be found, and it was not until diligent search was made that it was accidentally discovered in a corner of a room filled up with old papers and a variety of rubbish. And, although the tenth section of the sixth article of the Revised Statutes enjoins that the Secretary of State shall have the charge of, and carefully preserve, the enrolled copy of the Constitution of the State of Indiana, yet it seems it was mislaid, and for a time was thought to be lost. My object in offering one of these resolutions is, that hereafter a suitable case shall be provided, and both the old Constitution and the new one deposited in it for safe keeping, and that the case shall be carefully preserved among the archives of the State; and also that the duplicate copy which we ordered on yesterday shall be preserved in the same manner in the State Library, so that in the event of any accident by fire or other casualty, if one of the copies shall be lost the other may be preserved.

One of the resolutions also directs the Secretary of this Convention to have the manuscript journal which he has copied to be neatly bound in one or more volumes, as circumstances may require, and to be deposited as the law convoking this assembly directs, with the Secretary of State.

As to the original papers of this body, the law by which it was called into being makes no provision as to the manner in which they shall be disposed of; but it will be recollected that it is made the duty of the State Legislature, by law, to take into its custody and safely keep the papers on the file of the two Houses of the General Assembly at the end of each of their sessions; and this resolution proposes to pursue the same course with the original papers of this Convention. I hope that the resolution will be adopted.

The question being upon the adoption of the resolution,

It was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. WILEY submitted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the committee on revision, &c., be instructed to insert after the word "oath," wherever it occurs, the words "or affirmation."

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BROOKBANK offered a resolution to the effect that members be furnished with one copy each of the Debates, in book form. He remarked that he had omitted to state that the copies to be furnished should be bound, and he did so for this reason: it would be remembered by every member of the Convention that there had been already two or three efforts made to have the Debates bound and they had failed. It was plain, he thought, that the Convention was indisposed to order the binding.

Mr. BASCOM remarked that he understood from very good authority, the matter had been before the Legislature, and that provision had been made by them for the necessary expense of binding the Debates. It appeared to him that unless the Debates were bound so as to be preserved, the expense of publishing them in a book form would to a great extent be thrown away.

Mr. PETTIT. I would like to be informed by some gentleman who may happen to know, whether an Index to the Debates has been prepared?

THE PRESIDENT. I am informed that the Secretary is authorized to prepare an Index.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, and others, that there is an Index being prepared by the Stenographer. It is essentially necessary, it appears to me, that the Debates should be bound, otherwise they will not be in a proper state for preservation.

Mr. KELSO. If the gentleman from Union will withdraw his resolution, I have one here that I will offer in the place of it.

Mr. BROOKBANK withdrew his proposition.

Mr. KELSO offered for adoption the following resolution:

"Resolved, That there be printed and bound seven hundred and fifty copies of the Journal of Debates, and the same number of the Legislative Journal, and that each member and officer of this Convention be entitled to one copy of each of said Journals; that there be three copies of each deposited in the offices of the Clerks of the Circuit Courts of this State for the use of the public; and that the Stenographer be authorized to furnish a complete Index to the Journal of Debates."

Mr. KELSO. I will remark that the Stenographer informs me that there is an Index already prepared for the first volume, and that he will proceed and complete the Index for the second if it be the pleasure of the Convention to order the work to be done.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WATTS offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the names of the Delegates to this Convention be prefixed to the Constitution, and that said Constitution be signed by the President, and attested by the Principal and Assistant Secretaries."

Mr. BORDEN. I would merely remark that if the intention be to sign the Constitution by way of attestation, there can be no objection to it, but if it be the purpose of the mover of the resolution that members will be obliged to sign it as an expression of their entire approval, it occurs to me there may be many gentlemen who will not be willing to attach their signatures with that understanding.

Mr. PETTIT. It seems to me that we are about to pass a resolution which it will be utterly impossible to carry out. Members will not all be here when the instrument shall have been enrolled upon parchment. Many will be gone, many are now gone, not to return; and how are their names to be affixed? The customary mode is, that the instrument be signed by the officers of the Convention. The President and principal Secretary will sign it in their official capacity, in the same way that a bill passed by the Legislature is signed by the Speaker and Secretary; and it appears to me the resolution should be drawn up to that effect.

If it be required that the instrument be signed by members, you will not have it signed by one-half of the Delegates in this Convention. The Constitution of the United States was signed by Washington, as President of the Convention by which it was formed, and not by the members of that body. The present Constitution of this State was signed by Mr. Jennings, as President of the Convention.

A VOICE. It was signed by all the members.

Mr. PETTIT. I think not. I am not sure about that, however, but in this case many of the members will have gone home and their names will not be attached to the instrument.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. I understand the purpose of the resolution is that the attaching of the signatures shall be a mere matter of form, in obedience to the order of the Convention that the names of members may go out with the instrument, but not as certifying their approval of it.

A VOICE. That is the idea.

Mr. SMITH. Well then may not the names be appended without the formality of signing?

Mr. PETTIT. What is the use of affixing the signatures of members?

Mr. SMITH. It may be proper enough to show who the delegates are.

Mr. PETTIT. The journals will show that.

Mr. SMITH. That is true enough, and therefore there is no actual necessity for signing the Constitution. I think perhaps the better way would be to direct that it be certified by the President and Secretary.

Mr. DOBSON. I am not particular about this matter myself, but I am satisfied that it was contemplated when this Convention was called, that the Constitution formed by it should be signed by every member of the Convention. I am convinced of this from conversations I have had with men who were members of the Legislature at the time the act calling the Convention was passed. And, in addition to that, from the reading of the law, it is clear to me, that the delegates to the Convention should sign the Constitution, and I believe it is a thing that has been customary in all the States where Conventions have been held.

In regard to those who have gone home, it is a matter of no importance whether they sign the Constitution or not.

Mr. KELSO. I apprehend that if the President of the Convention and the principal Secretary, sign the Constitution, it will be sufficient. So far as I am concerned, I will never put my name to a document that I would not vote for.

[Cries of "Consent! You shall be excused!"]

Mr. SPANN. I desire to say a single word in relation to this question. It is not a matter of such importance, and whatever importance attaches to it, arises from the fact of its connection with the ordinary mode of transacting business in bodies of this character. I have examined the Constitutions of several of the States—some of them I have seen on manuscript—and I have observed that in most cases the names of the framers of these instruments have been appended, together with the names of the counties represented by them. Now in this view of the question, it is not important whether members personally attach their signatures to the document, or whether they be appended by the Secretary; it is a mere matter of form. The appending of the names is merely to show who were the delegates, and what counties they represented. Gentlemen who do not approve of the Constitution as finally adopted, as in the case of the gentleman from Switzerland and others, may withhold their names if they please. Those gentlemen have fully illustrated their views by their speeches and votes; and if they choose to withhold their names it is a matter for themselves to determine. But, I think that in accordance with the usual practice in all States the names of members ought to be appended to the new Constitution.

Mr. DUNN of Perry. Will it be in order to amend the resolution?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. DUNN of Perry. Then I offer the following:

"Strike out the words 'principal Secretary,' and insert the words 'all the Secretaries.'"

Mr. WATTS accepted the amendment as a modification of his resolution.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution as modified,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAVIS of Parke offered for adoption the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Convention now take up the orders of the day."

The resolution was agreed to.

Before the Convention proceeded to the consideration of the orders of the day,

Mr. WALPOLE said, I rise to a privilege question.

The Convention then proceeded, in accordance with the resolution previously adopted, to the consideration of the

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The first thing in order being the section reported by the committee on the practice of law and law reform, upon its third reading.

The section is as follows:

"Any person of good moral character, and possessing the right of suffrage shall be entitled to admission to practice in all the courts of this State."

Mr. KELSO. The section ought to be amended by the striking out of two words, and I hope the Convention will agree to the amendment by unanimous consent. The words are "to admission." The section contemplates that there shall be an examination. I would prefer that it should be in this form, that any man of good moral character and possessing the right of suffrage shall be entitled to practice in all of the courts of this State.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. "Consent! Consent!"

Mr. KELSO. I do not care one farthing about it. Take the section as it stands, it just amounts to what the law now is.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman will send up his amendment in writing.

Mr. KELSO. Yes, sir, I will send it up in writing.

I move that the section be re-committed with instructions to strike out the words "to admission."

Mr. BORDEN. I ask whether it is the intention of this provision that a man who knows nothing about the law at all, will be permitted to come into court and practice law!

A VOICE. "Lay members" for instance.

Mr. BORDEN. I move that the section be laid upon the table.

[Much confusion here prevailed throughout the Chamber.]

Mr. MILROY demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

The PRESIDENT (without noticing the motion of the gentleman from Allen) said: The main question is upon the passage of the section.

A MEMBER. I want the yeas and nays upon this question.

Mr. COLFAX. The previous question I think brings the Convention to a vote first upon the motion to re-commit.

A VOICE. There has been no motion to re-commit.

Mr. COLFAX. There certainly was such a motion, and it was made by the gentleman from Switzerland (Mr. Kelso).

Mr. PETTIT. The motion to re-commit was made to my certain knowledge.

Mr. WATTS. I make a point of order. The gentlemen of the bar have no right to vote upon this question, because they are personally concerned.

The PRESIDENT (Laughing). Members of the legal profession will be excused from voting.

Mr. GIBSON. I would inquire whether an amendment could now be made, by universal consent?

The PRESIDENT. Not under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. GIBSON. As the proposition at present stands, it gives the right to practice law to any person.

A VOICE. Possessing the right of suffrage. It strikes me that this is too broad.

The question then, according to ruling of the Chair, being upon the adoption of the section, the yeas and nays were taken, under the rule, with the following result—yeas 84, nays 27.

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Bowers, Bracken, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbott, Hawkins, Hogin, Holman, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Mowrer, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Sherrod, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tannehill, Thomas, Trimble, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—84.

NAYS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Berry, Blythe, Bryant, Carr, Clark of Tippecanoe, Dunn of Jefferson, Hall, Helmer, Hitt, Kilgore, Logan, Miller of Gibson, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Rariden, Shannon, Shoup, Snook, Stevenson, Thornton, Wallace, Walpole, and Zenor—27.

So the section was adopted and referred to the committee on revision, arrangement, and phraseology.

The section which provides that the present officers shall continue in the exercise of their respective offices until superseded under the authority of this Constitution, was taken up on its third reading.

The question being, "Shall the section pass?"

Mr. DOBSON asked the unanimous consent of the Convention, to amend the section so as to provide that where any officer continues to discharge the duties of his office under the new Constitution, he shall be required to give new bonds.

Mr. KELSO was of opinion that such a provision was wholly unnecessary. He held that the sureties to the former bonds would continue to be liable, and that no renewal of the bonds was necessary.

Mr. DOBSON. I do not profess to be much of a lawyer, but I will undertake to say that the gentleman is wrong in regard to this matter. Under the old Constitution, the law is that the election shall take place in August. Now, sir, we propose to change the time of holding the elections, and we propose, also, that the officers who were elected in pursuance of the former law, shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices, until a period later than that contemplated by the law heretofore in force. My opinion is that you will thus discharge the liability of their sureties, in all such cases where bonds have been required to be given.

Mr. PETTIT. I think the gentleman, though he says he is no lawyer, has certainly shown that upon this subject he is a lawyer. There can be no question clearer than that neither conventional or legislative authority can render a man liable upon bonds that he would not have been liable upon under the law as it existed when the bonds were given. That is, the Legislature cannot extend the operation and obligatory force of a bond further than it would extend by construction of the law existing when the bonds were given. The bonds given by the sureties of an officer, as sheriff for example, expire in August, and then cannot be vitalized by any subsequent legislative action.

Mr. KELSO. Suppose that no other officers are elected to supersede those already in office, but that they are directed to continue to discharge the duties of their offices?

Mr. PETTIT. You then have, to all intents and purposes, new officers; and the liability of their sureties ceases when the time expires for which they were originally elected.

Mr. WALPOLE. I have examined the Constitutions of several of the States, and I find nothing of this kind contained in them. They, in general terms, confirm existing obligations. If the gentleman from Tippecanoe were right in the ground he took the other day, that any change in the fundamental law is tantamount to a revolution of the government, the proposition that he now makes is perfectly consistent with the doctrines he has previously enunciated.

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen will remember that debate is altogether out of order. Will the Convention unanimously consent that the gentleman from Owen (Mr. Dobson) have leave to amend the section in the manner proposed by him?

[Cries of "no, no."]

The PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. DOBSON. One additional remark. If the bonds that these officers have already given are sufficient, or if the Convention so consider them, I have no desire to press the amendment.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman can attain his object by moving to re-commit the section.

Mr. DOBSON. It appears to me there ought to be no objection to making this matter perfectly certain. There are officers who must necessarily be entrusted with large amounts of money.

The PRESIDENT again put the question, "Will the Convention unanimously consent to permit the amendment to be made?"

Objection was made.

Mr. KENT. I am under the impression that the subject has been acted upon yesterday, in the section that was offered by the gentleman from Marion. I would like to have the Secretary read that section.

The PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the amendment is out of order, and debate is out of order.

The question being on the passage of the section, the rule requiring the yeas and nays to be taken on the passage of a section, was suspended, and the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision, arrangement, and phraseology.

The section which provides that the present incumbents in the offices continued by this Constitution, (and who were elected by the people,) may exercise the duties of their respective offices, until the expiration of the time for which they were elected; provided, no incumbent shall continue in such office by virtue of this section, for a longer period of time than the term of time prescribed by the Constitution to such office, was taken up on its third reading.

The question being on the passage of the question, the rule requiring the yeas and nays to be taken on the passage of a section, was suspended, and the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision, arrangement, and phraseology.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would inform the Convention that there is nothing on the files.

SEVERAL DELEGATES. Let us adjourn.

Mr. KELSO. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Convention. The standing committees, on motion, have been discharged from this day forward; there are some reports perhaps remaining to be made, and I think we should allow them to be made now.

Mr. NILES. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of submitting the following section in regard to the school fund.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would inform the gentlemen from Laporte, that his motion is not in order.

Mr. NILES. I understood that permission was granted to introduce this section. I ask the unanimous consent of the Convention, to introduce the section, that it may be read and laid upon the table. It is as follows:

"The General Assembly shall have power to consolidate and invest in the bonds of this State or otherwise, the entire common school fund, and in case of such consolidation, interest thereon, at the rate of six per cent., shall be invariably appropriated from the annually accruing revenues, to the same specific purposes to which said funds are applied under this Constitution?"

Leave was not granted.

On motion by Mr. PETTIT,

The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on revision, &c.

Mr. PETTIT. I believe that my motion is still pending.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tippecanoe to concur in the report.

Mr. OWEN. I will very briefly state, if the Convention will allow me, what are the alterations, if alterations they can be called, which have been made by the committee on revision in the sections referred to them, and reported back this morning. They are four in number; the first is, the transposition of words without any alteration of the sense. The first section of the Bill of Rights, as reported to the committee, reads as follows:

"SECTION —. We declare that all power is inherent in the people: and that all free governments are, and of right ought to be, founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness. For the advancement of these ends the people have, at all times, an inalienable right to alter and reform their government.

"That the general, great, and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and unalterably established, we declare that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

As reported by the committee, it reads as follows:

"ARTICLE I.

"BILL OF RIGHTS.

"SECTION 1. To the end that justice be established, public order maintained, and liberty perpetuated, WE DECLARE, That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that all power is inherent in the people; and that all free governments are, and of right ought to be, founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, and well-being. For the advancement of these ends, the people have, at all times, an indefeasible right to alter and reform their government."

Mr. OWEN proceeded to describe certain other alterations which had been made by the committee in the phraseology of the sections contained in the article, but which did not at all affect them as to their sense.

Mr. THORNTON. When this question was up this morning, and the gentleman from Laporte made some remarks in regard to it, I felt compelled to dissent from the position he assumed. I thought the language adopted by the committee preferable to that employed in the article referred to the committee. I will remark, however, that if it be thought by the Convention the changes made by the committee should not be concurred in, it is a very easy matter, and entirely within parliamentary rules, to concur in an amendment. But the Chair is entirely correct, that where a motion is made to concur simply, the only question to be decided is, whether we will concur or not. My own opinion is, that we should concur. But if gentlemen dissent from that opinion, and think that a modification is necessary to be made in the report, they can vote down the proposition to concur and come to a vote upon concurring with an amendment.

Mr. FOSTER expressed his dissatisfaction with the report. He thought the committee had made an unwarrantable alteration in the very spirit and meaning of the preamble. He preferred the phraseology as it originally stood: "We, the people of the State of Indiana, grateful to ALMIGHTY God for our freedom, in order to establish justice, maintain public order, and perpetuate liberty, do ordain this Constitution."

As the committee had made it, it declared that, "We, the people of the State of Indiana, grateful to ALMIGHTY God for the free exercise of the right to choose our own form of government, do ordain this Constitution."

If (continued Mr. F.) we are grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, it certainly implies the right to establish our own form of government; and it is altogether a more appropriate and comprehensive phrase.

Mr. OWEN. The gentleman certainly could not have heard what I said. I stated that the committee had deemed it necessary to transfer a portion of the preamble to the first section.

Mr. FOSTER. It is true that I had not paid particular attention to the explanation of the gentleman, and what he now suggests, removes to a great degree, the objection that I entertained; at the same time, I most decidedly prefer that the article should stand as originally passed by this Convention.

Mr. RARIDEN. I desire to know, and it is important for the Convention to know, the position in which the article will be placed if we concur in the report of the committee. Now I have no doubt as to the fidelity with which the committee have fulfilled their trust, yet there are things contained in their report which this House would not agree to were they pointed out. I should like to know whether we are to have an opportunity to examine the report closely, and ascertain in what particulars changes have been made by the committee. I would like to be informed by the Chair, at what stage in the progress of this report it will be in order for the Convention to give an expression of its views in regard to the changes which have been made.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will remark, that there will be a proper time for the expression of the views of the Convention in regard to the subject. A motion may be made to reconsider the vote taken upon the final passage of any section.

Mr. RARIDEN. Should not that motion to re-consider be made now, instead of after the vote on concurring in the report has been taken? My understanding of the matter is this: that the committee on revision should have done nothing more than embody with fidelity that which has heretofore been adopted by the Convention. My impression is, that we ought to have this expression of the sense of the Convention in regard to the changes that have been made, before we take the vote upon concurring in the report.

The PRESIDENT. The motion may be made either before or after.

Mr. MURRAY. It seems to me that we have been contending, like Timothy, for the true faith. [Laughter.] We have been contending for principles, for matters of substance, and that is all right and proper, but we are now contending about words. I should certainly like to see the best language made use of in the wording of the Constitution, but it seems to me that there is no necessity of wasting much time upon a question of mere words, where the sense is perfectly conveyed and where there is no ambiguity.

Mr. MILROY demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded,

And the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being, Will the Convention concur in the report of the committee?

Mr. PETTIT demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 91, nays 14—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mower, Murray, Nave, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimby, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—91.

NAYS.—Messrs. Brookbank, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Davis of Madison, Foley, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Kelso, Maguire, March, May, and Rariden—14

So the report was concurred in.

Mr. RARIDEN. I now move to re-consider the vote taken upon the final passage of the third section.

Mr. PETTIT. Did the gentlemen vote in the affirmative on that question?

Mr. RARIDEN. I am under the impression that I did. I believe there were very few votes given in opposition to it. I understand the Chair to say that a motion can be made at any time, to re-consider the vote taken on the passage of a section.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman could not have understood the Chair to say that a motion to re-consider could be made by a member who did not vote with the majority.

Mr. RARIDEN. Well, sir, I voted with the majority on the passage of the section. I understood the Chair to say that the report of the committee on revision was not subject to amendment until after the vote had been taken on the motion to concur. I think it is desirable, at least, that the matter should be in such a situation that if there is anything seriously objectionable, it might be amended. But if it be not amendable before or after concurrence, I do not know how we are to get at it at all.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark, that when a report is made by a committee, the motion usually made is, "that the report be concurred in." A motion may be made that the report be concurred in, with an amendment. Or, a motion may be made to reject the report, or to refuse to concur; but when the motion to concur is first made, the question must first be put upon that motion; and pending the question on that motion, no motion is in order. If the Convention disapprove of the report of the committee, the motion to concur would very naturally be rejected.

The Chair would further remark to the gentleman from Wayne, and to all others, that the arrangement made by the committee, if not acceptable to a majority, would necessarily be rejected; and this mode is, perhaps, the shortest mode of determining whether a majority approve of it or not.

Mr. RARIDEN. Well, then, I will make a motion that will be in order; and before I make that motion allow me to explain the object, and then the Convention will be able to determine whether it ought to be adopted or not. The second section reported by the committee is, "All men shall be secured in the inherent right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences." The section, as referred to the committee, contains this language: "No law shall, in any case whatever, control the free exercise and enjoyment of religious opinions, or interfere with the rights of conscience." This, it appears to me, is much more forcible and appropriate: "No law shall be passed interfering with the rights of conscience." The rights of conscience then will be in a man's own keeping.

Now the motion that I am going to make, is to have this article re-committed, with a view to have so much of it stricken out by the committee on revision; and I believe it is the only way in which we can get at it. I move that the article be re-committed, with instructions to strike out the third section. That will certainly be in order.

The PRESIDENT. It is in order for the gentleman to move to re-consider the vote taken upon the adoption of the section, provided he voted with the majority.

Mr. RARIDEN. I am not moving to re-consider, but to re-commit.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that the motion is clearly not in order.

Mr. RARIDEN. There has never been a time when I could reach the object that I wish to accomplish, by a motion that is in order. I have made repeated efforts for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT. I trust the gentleman will not charge it as a fault upon the Chair, if he has not been able to make the proper motion.

Mr. KELSO. I have to make the last report, perhaps, that any of us will have occasion to make. It is a report from the committee on miscellaneous provisions. Mr. K. then reported sundry sections, permitting the Legislature to pass a law for the State to borrow money to establish a State Bank and branches, the State having the right to be a stockholder in such bank and branches, &c.; the salaries of the Supreme and Circuit Judges to be $1,000 each, until changed by the Legislature; no county, with an area of four hundred square miles, or less, shall be divided or have any part stricken therefrom, without submitting the same to a vote of the people, &c.; and all State and county officers shall be ineligible to any other office during the time for which they are elected.

The sections were read a first time.

Mr. PETTIT. It seems to me that this is a very miscellaneous report. [A laugh.] I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that there is but one privileged motion in reference to the report at its first reading.

Mr. PETTIT. Well, sir, I move, then, that the report be rejected.

Mr. KELSO. A portion of that report is founded on resolutions of this honorable body, if it be entitled to that appellation. There was a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Hancock, and concurred in by the Convention without opposition, for the purpose of getting it on the record to be passed thereafter. Gentlemen may do just what they please with the report.

The question being on the rejection of the report,

The yeas and nays were demanded and they were ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. I rise to a point of order. I want to know if a standing committee may bring in a report without having been instructed so to do by the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that a part of the matter which is embodied in this article, has been introduced in the shape of a resolution which was adopted by the Convention.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. I make the point then, whether that part of the report which was not embraced in the resolution, is to be considered as matter proper to be acted upon by the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that when a committee is instructed in general terms, in reference to a subject, they are left free to bring in such a report as a majority of the committee may agree upon.

Mr. KELSO. Another thing. Our committee was required from the very nature of its duties, to hunt up all the odds and ends of everything.

Mr. McFARLAND. I would inquire whether all the committees have not been discharged?

The PRESIDENT. The resolution discharging the committees is to take effect from and after to-day.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result—yeas 72, nays 39:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Bicknell, Bourne, Bracken, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Tippecanoe, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbaker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Garvin, Gordon, Haddon, Hall, Harbolt, Helm, Helmer, Howe, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milier of Gibson, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—72.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Dobson, Farrow, Foster, Frisbie, Gootee, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Huff, Kelso, Maguire, March, May, Milligan, Milroy, Mowrer, Nave, Prather, Rariden, Robinson, Smith of Ripley, Stevenson, Tannehill, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, and Zenor—39.

So the report was rejected.

Mr. PETTIT moved that the Convention adjourn.

Mr. RARIDEN. Will the gentleman withdraw his motion for a single moment?

Mr. PETTIT withdrew the motion.

Mr. RARIDEN. It has been suggested to me that I misapprehended the decision of the Chair, when I moved a re-consideration. My motion was to re-consider the vote upon the final passage of section three.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark to the gentlemen that he has a right to move the re-consideration of any vote, provided he voted with the majority.

Mr. RARIDEN. Then I move to re-consider the vote upon the final passage of section three. I hold that that section is altogether useless and unmeaning in the connection in which it stands. The same thing that it contains substantially, is embodied in the preceding section. "No law shall, in any case whatever, control the free exercise and enjoyment of religious opinions, or interfere with the rights of conscience."

Conscience, sir, is a thing which is in the keeping of no law. I move to re-consider the section for the purpose of striking out that part of it.

Mr. PETTIT moved that the Convention adjourn.

Mr. WALPOLE. Just one moment.

Mr. PETTIT. Well, now, I think we had better adjourn.

The question was put upon a motion to adjourn, and on a division—yeas 33, nays 41, The Convention refused to adjourn.

Mr. WALPOLE. I have got a section to propose and I think there will be no objection to it.

[Cries of "Read it."]

Mr. WALPOLE read the section; it was to the effect that it should be the duty of the General Assembly to reduce the salaries of public officers, in case of neglect of duty on their part, &c... &c.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be upon suspending the order of business, to enable the gentleman to introduce the proposed section.

The Convention refused to suspend the order of business.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. Mr. President—

Mr. RARIDEN (interposing). I thought I had made a motion to re-consider?

The PRESIDENT. That is true—the gentleman is right. The Chair was misled by the motion to adjourn, which took the precedence.

The question being on the motion to re-consider the vote taken upon the final passage of the third section,

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. It strikes me the motion is entirely out of order, unless we re-consider the report of the committee, and then go back step by step.

The PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair, the Convention has a right to re-consider any vote while the subject is yet within the control of the body. As for instance, in the Legislature, a bill may at any time be reconsidered while it is yet in the possession of the House by which it was passed. But, after it goes out of the control of the body, a motion to re-consider is not in order. The subject matter in this case being yet in possession of the Convention, the Chair thinks the gentleman has a right to move to re-consider.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. There is this difference between the view taken by the Chair and that which I take of the matter. Suppose a bill to have passed finally, I am of the opinion that a motion to re-consider the vote ordering it to a third reading, would not be in order, without first re-considering the vote on its final passage. And in this case, it appears to me that the gentleman cannot move to re-consider the vote taken on the final passage of the section, without the Convention first re-considering the vote by which the report of the committee was concurred in.

Mr. RARIDEN. The gentleman from Gibson and myself do not agree in the view we take of the report of the committee on revision. I look upon the article as being in precisely the same condition—so far as the action of the Convention is concerned—as it was before being referred to the committee. The action of the committee forms no part of our legislative proceedings; it is merely a revisory process, having reference to propriety of phraseology. It is merely a matter of convenience to ourselves, that that work should be performed by a committee. And the concurrence of the Convention in the report, simply amounts to this—we say that the committee have done that which we have directed them to do—and have returned to us the sections we have passed in the form in which it is our intention they shall stand, after the final action of the Convention upon their adoption.

Mr. SPANN. A single word by way of inquiry of the Chair, for I am not sure that I clearly understand the ruling of the Chair, and I would like to be better informed before giving my vote. This report was made this morning from the committee on revision. I desire to know—and it was my purpose to make the inquiry, if I could have got the floor, when the gentleman first made his motion to re-consider—whether the rules do not require that the first and only question shall be upon concurrence in the report?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that two or three motions may be made. A motion may be made to concur, or a motion may be made to concur, with an amendment, or a motion may be made to reject.

Mr. SPANN. Does not the motion to concur take precedence?

The PRESIDENT. It does, if that motion be first made; not otherwise.

Mr. SPANN. I wish to ask further, if, when a motion be made to concur, a motion may not also be made to concur with an amendment?

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already stated that the motion first made must be first put.

MR. SPANN. I ask whether a negative proposition may be made when an affirmative one has been already made?

THE PRESIDENT. The negative in the one case is the affirmative in the other.

MR. SPANN. Am I right in supposing, then, that the affirmative proposition is the only one to be put?

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already remarked, that when a report is made from a committee, two or three motions are in order: for instance, a motion to concur in the report.

MR. SPANN. That is first in order—

THE PRESIDENT. Not unless it be first made. A motion to refuse to concur, and a motion to re-commit the subject matter, are also in order. These motions take precedence of each other as they are moved. The motion first made, is to be first put. So far as the motions to concur and non-concur are concerned, the positive in the one case is the negative in the other.

MR. SPANN. That is true. The thing that I want to understand distinctly—for I confess I am at a loss—is this: after the vote is taken to concur in the report, will it be in order to concur, with an amendment?

THE PRESIDENT. In this case the motion to concur must be first put because it was first made.

MR. SPANN. Precisely so. I understand the present question is upon re-considering the vote by which the third section was passed.

THE PRESIDENT. That is the pending question.

MR. MOWRER moved that the Convention adjourn.

The Convention refused to adjourn.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wayne, (Mr. Rariden,) to re-consider the vote by which the third section of the article was passed.

MR. FARROW. I ask leave to record my vote upon the question of concurring in the report of the committee.

THE PRESIDENT. Was the gentleman within the bar when his name was called?

MR. FARROW. No, sir. I ask the unanimous consent of the Convention to record my vote in the affirmative.

Leave was granted.

MR. WATTS. I ask the gentleman, inasmuch as leave has been granted to him to record his vote, whether he voted against me on a recent occasion when in the lobby, while the vote was being taken? [Much laughter.]

MR. COOKERLY. I ask the same favor that has been extended to the gentleman from Putnam. I had a violent head-ache, and was not present when the vote was taken.

MR. PETTIT. If the gentleman was not here, he certainly is not entitled to the privilege of voting.

The question upon granting leave to the gentleman from Vigo to record his vote upon the motion to concur in the report of the committee on revision, was then put, and decided in the negative.

So leave was not granted.

The question being on the motion of the gentleman from Wayne to re-consider the vote on the passage of the third section,

It was decided in the negative.

So the Convention refused to re-consider.

MR. CLARK of Tippecanoe gave the following notice of an amendment to the rules, that to-morrow, or on some subsequent day, he would move to amend the standing rules as follows:

“Reports made by the committee on revision, arrangement, and phraseology, may, if a majority of the Convention so direct, be considered by sections, so that the question of concurrence may be taken upon each section separately.”

MR. PETTIT. I believe that there is another section to be considered by the Convention, and it may as well be done at this time.

THE PRESIDENT. The Convention will now take up that section. It provides for the inclosure and permanent preservation of the Tippecanoe Battle Ground.

The question being on the engrossment of the section,

MR. NILES moved to amend by inserting a provision to the effect that the Legislature shall have no power to sell the block in the centre of Indianapolis, known as the “Governor’s Circle.”

I make this motion (said Mr. Niles) because I observe that the Legislature is assailed every year with importunities to sell, or give away the Governor’s Circle; and my desire is, that the public grounds within this city shall be preserved as a beautiful ornament to the town and the State.

MR. RARIDEN moved to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Laporte, by striking out the word “not,” so that the Legislature may be empowered to sell the Governor’s Circle, if they should deem it proper to do so.

MR. KELSO. I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Laporte, as I understand there is a proposition now before the Legislature, to devote that ground to the purpose of building a monument upon it in memory of our soldiers who fell in Mexico. Such a clause inserted in the Constitution, would rather sanction the appropriation of it to such a purpose, and I am decidedly in favor of devoting it to that purpose.

The question being on the amendment to the amendment,

It was rejected.

The question then being on the amendment of the gentleman from Laporte,

It was decided in the affirmative.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. It seems to me that the provision ought to include all the public grounds; and unless a provision to that effect be inserted in the Constitution, take my word for it, they will be disposed of by the Legislature.

The PRESIDENT. The section has been ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. SMITH of Scott. I move further to amend—

The PRESIDENT. It is not now in order to amend.

Mr. SMITH of Scott. Then I will offer my proposition as an additional section. It provides that all officers other than county and township officers, and members of the Legislature, shall receive such compensation as shall be fixed by law, which shall not be increased or diminished during their term of service, &c.

The question being on the adoption of the additional section.

Mr. KENT moved that the Convention adjourn.

The Convention refused to adjourn.

Mr. KELSO moved that the section proposed by the gentleman from Scott be laid upon the table.

Mr. SMITH of Scott demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, and being taken there were yeas 61, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Carr, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helmer, Hitt, Jones, Kelso, Logan, Mather, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Shannon, Sherrod, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Wiley, Wunderlich, Zenor, and Mr. President—61.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Borden, Bracken, Bryant, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foster, Garvin, Graham of Miami, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Prather, Read of Clark, Robinson, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Trimby, Watts, Wolfe, and Yocum—50.

So the section was laid upon the table.

Mr. HOWE offered an additional section providing that the Judges of the Supreme Court, of the Circuit, and other inferior courts, shall receive at stated periods a compensation to be fixed by law, &c.

The question being on the adoption of the section,

Mr. McCLELLAND moved that the section be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that the proposition of the gentleman from Lagrange is not in order, inasmuch as it contains in substance the same provision as that contained in the proposition of the gentleman from Scott, which has just been voted down.

Mr. BORDEN. It only contains a part of the proposition of the gentleman from Scott.

The PRESIDENT. The section proposed by the gentleman from Scott declares that all officers other than county and township officers, &c., and as a matter of course the officers embraced in the proposition of the gentleman from Lagrange are included.

Mr. NILES. I desire now to submit the section which I referred to this morning:

"The General Assembly shall have power to consolidate and invest in the bonds of this State, or otherwise, the entire common school fund, and in case of such consideration, interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. shall be invariably appropriated from the annually accruing revenues, to the same specific purposes to which said funds are applied under this Constitution."

Mr. NILES. This section is somewhat similar to one offered a few days ago by the gentleman from Marion, but drawn with a view to obviate the objections which were suggested against it.

I have given some little attention to the condition of the school funds, and have conversed with several gentlemen in and out of the Convention on the subject. It seems to be admitted by all that the present system of managing them is a bad one. It is both expensive and insecure. They are scattered over the State, in the hands of an hundred different agents, and are loaned out to our citizens on long times and at a high rate of interest. A fund managed in such a way, must be subject to constant losses. In the county of Laporte, we have lost some three thousand dollars of the principal already. The gentleman from Warren informed us incidentally, in connection with a proposition to make the counties liable for the fund, that a similar or heavier loss had been sustained in his county. And indeed an accurate history of the school fund would show more improvidence and folly in its management, than is often witnessed in connection with any fund either public or private. It is a bad system, in every view that can be taken of it.

A gentleman who is a member of the committee on education, informs me that he has carefully examined the reports, and finds that the cost of taking care of the school funds, in seventy counties, last year, amounted to over seventeen thousand dollars. The expense for the entire State can fall little short of twenty thousand dollars. When we add to this, the expense of perpetually occurring law suits and the diminution of the principal by occasional losses, it is safe to estimate the aggregate at not less than the cost of the entire judiciary system of the State. In the county of Laporte, there have been a dozen law suits growing out of the management of this fund, which have been making their way back and forth through the Circuit and Supreme Courts. It is safe to say that there is not less, upon an average, than one law suit, in each county, at every term of the Circuit Court, on account of the school funds—that is to say nearly two hundred in a year, for the whole State. And, sir, it requires no spirit of prophecy to say that a year never can go by without more or less losses from the insolvency of borrowers and insufficiency of security, or from the dishonesty or bad management of the public agents. Under the present plan of managing it, it is a real injury to the people of the State. An occasional short loan may be a benefit to the borrower, but loans made as those are, are always an injury. While it remains in its present condition it must always be liable to be made a kind of corruption fund to be loaned out to political and personal favorites. And it is my deliberate judgment that it had better be all sunk at once, than to remain as it is at present.

Now, sir, in contrast with this expensive, insecure, and complicated system, what do we propose? Simply that these funds be collected in slowly and without injury to the borrowers, and invested in the public securities of this State. Our bonds can be bought any day in the market. As the money is paid in, instead of being loaned out again in the counties, it could be applied in the manner to be pointed out by law, in purchasing our own bonds. In order to guard the rights of the respective townships and counties the section provides that interest on the bonds which may be purchased shall be invariably appropriated from the annually accruing revenues to the same specific purposes to which the funds themselves will be applied under the New Constitution. Then suppose that the three millions of our school fund were collected in and invested in this manner, what a difference in the expense of managing them, and in the danger of loss. There could be no loss, so long as there is faith or honor among men, or any reliance upon Constitutional guaranties. And the whole expense of managing them would be the wages of one clerk, for a few hours in each year, while by a simple process in the rule of three, he could ascertain the amount to be paid to each county or township. An order could then be given upon the county treasurers to pay over to the proper persons their respective amounts instead of paying it into the State Treasury, to be paid over to foreign bond holders. And after the whole fund had been consolidated, the amount to be paid annually to each county for the use of the townships, would be ascertained by law, so that even the few hours' clerk hire could be avoided. There would be just the difference between such a disposition of the school fund and the present plan, as between having the Smithsonian bequest invested in government securities or scattered over the country, in the hands of an hundred different agents. Now it is secure against all contingencies, and its management does not cost a farthing—in the other case it would be insecure, expensive, and troublesome. It is surely just as well that the government should owe half a million to that fund as to a foreign capitalist. Were it necessary to create a State debt for the purpose, we should have a different question; but our bonds are out, and the interest on them must be paid. Why then may they not be purchased and the interest paid for the use of schools? Were it left to myself I would make the section imperative. In its present form it is only permissive, but it secures the faithful application of the interest in case of consolidation. And without some such guarantee, higher than a statute subject to repeal at any time, the townships would not feel safe in assenting to any consolidation of the funds. I will not disguise in fear that this subject will not receive the attention at this late day, which its importance demands, but I hope that before a motion is made and carried to lay on the table, an opportunity will be given to the gentlemen from Washington and from Warren, and perhaps to some others, to be heard for a few moments. The subject is worthy of deliberate consideration.

Mr. READ of Clark moved that the Convention adjourn.

The motion was, upon a division—ayes 42, noes 38—decided in the affirmative.

So the Convention adjourned.

~~~~~
MONDAY, FEB. 3, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. BABB.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The Convention proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being the section in relation to the boundary of the State.

[Mr. Lockhart made a speech which was not furnished the printer.]

Mr. WALPOLE. I was not in my place the other morning when this report was made. I consented, however, that the article reported by me in view of the intention of the gentleman from Vanderburg, to introduce his report, that the article which I reported should be laid upon the table. Not that I thought there was any error in the article, because it is a faithful transcript of a similar provision of the Convention of 1816.

"SECTION 1. In order that the boundaries of the State of Indiana may more certainly be known and established, it is hereby ordained and declared that the following shall be and forever remain the boundaries of said State, to-wit:—Bounded on the east by the meridian line which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio; on the south by the Ohio river, from the mouth of the Great Miami river to the mouth of the river Wabash; on the west by a line drawn along the middle of the Wabash river, from its mouth to a point where a due north line drawn from the town of Vincennes would last touch the north-western shore of the said Wabash river, and from thence by a due north line until the same shall intersect an east and west line drawn through a point ten miles north of the southern extreme of Lake Michigan; on the north by the said east and west line until the same shall intersect the first mentioned meridian line which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio."

The next section contains a provision similar to that contained in an act of the Legislature of Kentucky, which was passed in pursuance, or further to carry into effect the act of the Legislature of Virginia, when she ceded to the United States the territory north-west of the Ohio River. The committee thought that it was important that the same thing should be introduced into this Constitution, and therefore reported the following section:

"SECTION 2. The State of Indiana shall possess jurisdiction and sovereignty co-extensive with the boundaries, as declared in the preceding section, and have concurrent jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases with the State of Kentucky, on the Ohio river, and with the State of Illinois, on the river Wabash, so far as said rivers form the common boundary between this State and said States respectively."

The river is a great national highway, and unless there be concurrent jurisdiction exercised over the waters of the rivers, by the States lying contiguous, there would be great difficulty in preventing the escape of offenders against the law. And inasmuch as the formality of going before the authorities, and making affidavit and procuring process to arrest an offender would interpose an obstacle to the administration of justice, the committee thought it best not to declare that the courts shall exercise jurisdiction, but that the States shall exercise concurrent jurisdiction, not making the waters lying opposite the county of Jefferson, for instance, a part of that county for judicial purposes; the committee thought it would be altogether less embarrassing if the Legislature were authorized hereafter to make the necessary provisions on the subject, in view of there being concurrent jurisdiction. If we were to claim absolute jurisdiction, we might be trenching upon the rights of Kentucky. It would be equal to claiming the right to tax a portion of her citizens; they would never submit to it; and if it were made a permanent provision in the Constitution, there would have to be another Convention called to alter it. I trust we shall stand by the old land marks which our fathers have adopted, and which, up to the present day, we have adhered to. Then, that the question may be fairly presented, having heard the argument of the gentleman from Vanderburg, I move that the section now under consideration be laid upon the table, with a view to taking up the report of the committee on "miscellaneous provisions."

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that the whole article is under consideration.

Mr. WALPOLE. I desire merely that one section be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT. Which section does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. WALPOLE. The one in reference to the boundary.

Mr. PETTIT. It seems to me that the first section of the report—

The PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order.

Mr. PETTIT. I am not going to debate the question; I only rise for information. I understand the section introduced by the gentleman from Vanderburg was ordered to be engrossed on Saturday?

The PRESIDENT. The Convention considered the whole article, and all the sections were postponed.

The question was then taken on the motion of the gentleman from Hancock, to lay the second section on the table, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the section was laid upon the table.

The question then being,

"Shall the section be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading?"

Mr. WALPOLE moved to strike out that section and substitute for it the second section of the article reported by the committee on miscellaneous provisions.

Mr. HOVEY. I think the second section should not be ingrafted into our Constitution. I was the attorney who submitted the case of McFaden vs. The State, mentioned by the gentleman from Vanderburgh, (Mr. Lockhart,) and I am under the impression that I know something about the question of jurisdiction on the Ohio river, but I do not wish to detain the Convention with on argument. This section is an exact copy of the second section found on page 66 of the Revised Statutes of 1843, and consequently is now the law, if we have the power to make such a one. The decision of the case mentioned by the gentleman from Vanderburgh, (Headley's Lessees vs. Anthony), to say the least of it, throws some doubt upon our right to enact such a law, and where our power is questionable, sound policy would dictate that we should take the sure side. If I remember correctly, the Judge, in giving the opinion in that case, decides "that the boundary of Indiana extends to ordinary low-water mark." This I think should be sufficient at least to cause us to hesitate, even though the decision of that point was not demanded by the facts of the case, as has been intimated.

I move that the amendment of the gentleman from Hancock be laid upon the table.

Mr. PETTIT. I will ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. HOVEY. If the gentleman desire to speak, I certainly will withdraw the motion.

The motion was accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. PETTIT. I am not prepared to admit that either of the States adjoining the Ohio river owns the soil of the bed of the river, for it is covered by navigable waters, which are common to the citizens of all the States of the Union, and subject to the laws of the General Government as the tide waters are. The General Government has exercised this right from time immemorial by the establishment of ports of entry and delivery along these waters. That these waters are common to the citizens of all the States—that they are not within the territorial limits of any State, and that no State has a right to the submerged soil, I do not doubt. And I have no doubt, also, that Indiana has the same rights as Ohio or Kentucky. That Kentucky has no right to exercise jurisdiction over the waters of the Ohio if Indiana have not, I think equally evident. The jurisdiction of each extends to the river, and that of Virginia precisely in the same way. The question might have been debated if we relied upon the act of Virginia in 1783, and the deed of cession made by Mr. Jefferson, in pursuance of that act, in 1784.

When Virginia ceded to the United States the territory lying north-west of the Ohio river, she did not surrender her sovereignty over the river itself, but she subsequently, and before surrendering to Kentucky the sovereignty over the soil which now forms that State, voluntarily passed an act by which she declared that neither herself nor Kentucky should have any more jurisdiction over the waters of the Ohio than those States which might be formed out of the territory lying north-west of that river, but that their jurisdiction should be equal and co-extensive. It will be recollected that the act by which Virginia ceded to the United States this territory, was passed on the 20th of December, 1783, and that the deed of cession made in pursuance of it, was made in the year following. In December, 1789, Virginia, on the occasion of creating a new State out of her reserved territory, expressly declares what shall be the jurisdiction as between Kentucky and Indiana, and between herself and Ohio; circumscribing her own jurisdiction, and making it only co-extensive with that of the territory adjoining. If she had at first reserved too much power, she now surrendered more, so as to place herself upon an equal footing with the State thereafter to be carved out of the ceded territory.

The seventh section of the act which was passed by Virginia six years after the cession of the territory, reads as follows: "That the use and navigation of the Ohio river, so far as the territory of the proposed State (that is Kentucky) or the territory which is within the limits of this commonwealth, (that is Virginia,) lies thereon, shall be free and common to the citizens of the United States; and the jurisdiction of this commonwealth, and that of the proposed State (that is Kentucky) respectively, on the river as aforesaid, shall be concurrent only with that of the United States, and may pass to the opposite shores of said river." Virginia, by this act, restricts her jurisdiction and that of Kentucky, and places it upon a par with our own and that of Ohio. So far as our jurisdiction is concerned, it is precisely equal to that of Kentucky. The jurisdiction of the two States is concurrent—it is precisely the same. But I am not prepared to say that either of the States owns the land under the water, or that either of them owns the land that may be formed in the river, or have jurisdiction over it; I mean so far as taxation is concerned; but each has jurisdiction to punish crime. This necessarily attaches to the sovereignty possessed by each concurrently. I therefore think we had better pass this second section of article sixty-one, in preference to the one proposed. The section that I refer to reads as follows:

"Sec. 2. The State of Indiana shall possess jurisdiction and sovereignty co-extensive with the boundaries declared in the preceding section; and shall have concurrent jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases, with the State of Kentucky on the Ohio river, and with the State of Illinois on the Wabash river, so far as said rivers forms the common boundary between this State and said States respectively."

It will be recollected that the first section of this article is precisely the same as the first section reported by the gentleman from Vanderburgh, so that it makes no difference which of them we adopt. But there is a very considerable difference between the second section as reported by the committee, and that reported by the gentleman from Vanderburgh. It will be seen that the second section reported by the gentleman from Vanderburgh declares that our territorial limits extend to certain places ; it is as follows :

"In order that the southern boundary of this State may be better known and established than is declared in the preceding section, it is hereby ordained and declared that the boundary of this State upon the Ohio river extends to the centre of the Ohio river, and that Indiana has concurrent jurisdiction with the State of Kentucky on said river between the mouth of the Great Miami river and the mouth of the Wabash river, and that all the counties of this State bound by the Ohio river, shall have and exercise such original and concurrent jurisdiction fronting said counties."

Mr. WALPOLE (in his seat). Why does not the gentleman declare that we have concurrent jurisdiction on the Wabash ?

Mr. PETTIT. That ought to have been done. The report of the chairman of the committee is, in my opinion, much preferable ; it avoids creating controversy with a sister State, a thing that we ought by all means to avoid. We ought especially to avoid giving offense by any usurpation of jurisdiction.

But one word further in regard to this subject: If the doctrine that is contended for, with a great deal of plausibility, at least, by the gentleman from Vanderburg, be true, that the boundaries of those States that border upon navigable rivers give them a colorable title to concurrent jurisdiction, then we do not need the second section at all, for, the first section reported by him, and the first section reported by the chairman of the committee, are alike. They both declare that the boundary shall be on the Ohio river. And if then the common law construction comes in and declares that we have concurrent jurisdiction, we need no additional declaration of ours to settle the point. The common law applicable to the case will, in this instance, settle the question as to the jurisdiction. I fear, however, the gentleman's doctrine is not altogether correct, but that our territorial limits reach only to the low-water mark of the river, and that we shall be compelled to resign the whole authority on the river, or to stipulate that while our territorial limits extend only to the shore, our civil and commercial jurisdiction shall be concurrent with that of the State on the opposite shore. It can do no harm to adopt the first section, but I fear it may do harm to adopt the second proposed by the gentleman from Vanderburg.

Mr. HOVEY moved that the section be laid upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question being on the adoption of the section,

It was decided in the affirmative.

It was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

EXTENSION OF THE BANK CHARTER.

Mr. DOBSON offered a section declaring that the Legislature may, in the passage of a general banking law, have power to extend the present bank charter for a period of five years, the profits derivable from the funds of the State invested therein, to be devoted to common school purposes.

I desire (said Mr. D.) to offer a few words in explanation of the section. The "compromise section," as it is called, that has been adopted by this Convention, will, in my mind, create a great deal of difficulty and embarrassment in this State. I do not believe that it is the intention of delegates to bring about such a state of things as will be brought about if the section which I have offered be not passed. We have all seen the combinations that have been and are being formed, between the anti-bank men and the friends of free banks, to accomplish the overthrow of the State Bank. These combinations have been witnessed all over the State; and we know, too, that a union between the State Bank men and the anti-bank men, may defeat any general system of free banking. We all know that no bank charter can pass the Legislature without a union in its favor on the part of those friendly to the different banking systems; and without such union, I undertake to say that there will be no free banking law passed in Indiana until the expiration of the present charter of the State Bank. Unless you identify the interests of the two parties, you will get no general banking law. It is to obviate this difficulty that I propose this section.

Now I am opposed, although I am not much in favor of banks, to winding up our system of banking until a better one is established. It will produce ruin and disaster in this country, such as has not been seen for many years, if you compel the bank to wind up its affairs and call in the sinking fund, that has been loaned out on mortgage security. If you compel these mortgages to be redeemed, you take away from the circulation some millions of dollars, and there will be much embarrassment occasioned thereby to the business of the State. We all know that these lands, if carried to a forced sale, would not bring their value. If you go into the collection of your funds loaned on these mortgages all at once, when there is not a sufficiency of money in circulation, the property mortgaged must, to a great extent, be sacrificed, and in all probability the fund itself will be diminished. As a means of avoiding this difficulty I propose this section. It is not made imperative on the Legislature, but they are empowered, if they should see proper to do so, to extend the charter of the bank for five years. And I ask you, what possible harm can it do? It only extends the charter of the bank to the year eighteen hundred and sixty-two. And the question is, whether it would be good policy on the part of the State of Indiana to compel the bank to wind up its business within a shorter period, and to take out of circulation this fund belonging to the State when, if it be allowed to remain, it will produce sixty-five thousand dollars a year for the school fund, or three hundred and sixty-five thousand in the five years. That is an item of some importance; and it is important, too, that you should avoid the embarrassment that will necessarily arise if you compel the bank to wind up its business before some other banking system goes into operation.

It appears to me it should be the policy of all those who do not desire to see the energies of Indiana crippled, to identify the interests of the State Bank and the free bank men. It will have the effect of retaining in the State money which we have borrowed at five per cent. and upon which we are making much more than five per cent. If you withdraw these funds, I ask, to what purpose will you appropriate them for five or six years to come, until the time when they are to be paid to the creditors of the State?

Mr. PEPPER of Ohio. I have expected ever since the commencement of the session of the Convention, that this monstrous monopoly, this favored corporation, would struggle hard for existence and would die hard. I did not know that the gentleman from Owen had been of either of the parties that entered into the compromise. If he do belong to either of them, I must say that he is acting very disingenuously in coming in at this late hour with this proposition. I want to know if this monopoly is to struggle on until the very last hour, as it has struggled from the first, and if, when members have scattered off, a measure is to be forced upon us that is contrary to the judgment of a large portion of the Convention, heretofore expressed. I move that the section be rejected.

Mr. DOBSON. I will ask the gentleman one plain question; that is, whether he is an anti-bank man or not?

Mr. PEPPER of Ohio. I am in favor of a free banking system; I have pledged myself to it, and will stand up to it in good faith.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark to the gentleman from Ohio, that the section is not in a position when his motion would be applicable; it is offered as an additional section.

Mr. PEPPER of Ohio. Then I move it be laid upon the table.

The question being on the motion to lay on the table,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and ordered; and, being taken, were—yeas 52, nays 70—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Bracken, Bryant, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cookerly, Dick, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foley, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Had-don, Harbolt, Helm, Hovey, Howe, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Mather, May, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Sher-rod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Thornton, Trimby, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, and Wunderlich—52.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beard, Bourne, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Carr, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helmer, Hitt, Hogg, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Kelsa, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, McClelland, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Robinson, Shannon, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Wallace, Watts, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—70.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. I trust gentlemen will give to this subject that calm and deliberate consideration which its importance entitles it to receive. There should be no hasty action on propositions affecting the currency of the State. It appears to me that the section introduced by the gentleman from Owen (Mr. Dobson) harmonizes with the spirit of the compromise on the subject of banking, heretofore adopted by this Convention. The section provides that the General Assembly may, in any general banking law passed under the provisions of this Constitution, extend the termination of the charter of the State Bank, five years beyond the period fixed in the charter, and that the net profits accruing to the State, on her stock, during such extension, shall be appropriated to the use of common schools. It does not require that the charter shall be so extended, but leaves the question of its extension to be decided by the people through their representatives in the General Assembly. But there is one important condition attached to the privilege of extension; that is, that this extension can only be granted in a law providing for free banking. We do not propose to extend the exclusive privileges of the State Bank one day longer than can be avoided. We expect, if this section is adopted, that it will secure the early enactment of a general banking law. We desire to make it the interest of the friends of the State Bank to assist in procuring the passage of such a law. From the embarrassments we have experienced in this body, in adjusting and compromising the difficulties growing out of the conflicting views of the members, on the subject of banking, we may reasonably expect that the friends of free banking may have to encounter similar difficulties in the Legislature. Those of us who are in favor of free banking, must consider that the State Bank is now in the possession of the field, and that with the aid of the same allies who have given her aid and comfort here—I mean the no bank men—she may be able to maintain that exclusive possession, until the expiration of her charter. But the privilege of an extension of her charter will, no doubt, induce her friends to admit a rival, and when that rival is admitted, I trust she will be able to maintain her ground. I do not fear that the free banks will be unable to exist in connection with the State Bank. There is an outside pressure that will operate upon all the banks of the State, and will compel them to act harmoniously for their mutual benefit and protection. We can establish no system or systems of banking in this State, that will be independent of the operations of banking institutions of the surrounding States, and it would be folly and madness in our banks, to act hostilely to each other. Let us secure the early establishment of a free banking system. Let it have a parallel existence with the State Bank, and when that system expires, we will be the better prepared to judge of the comparative merits of the two systems.

But, sir, there are other reasons why I think we should leave the subject of the extension of the charter of the State Bank, to the sound discretion of the Legislature. I am afraid we have not yet sufficient private capital in the State, to afford us all the facilities the demands of trade require. In the State of New York, where the free banking system works so well, there is a large amount of capital seeking investment. Here we have more borrowers than lenders. But we are rapidly increasing in wealth, and a few years will make a great difference in this respect. In the mean time, is it sound policy to break down the system we have, before another banking system can grow sufficiently strong to supply its place?

The circulation of the State Bank averages about four millions. This is a large amount to draw from the business operations of the State, and we should endeavor to make sure of the supply of an equal amount of currency in some other way. I fear, sir, that by mistaking our true policy, we may bring upon the people a pecuniary pressure, which, however much we may regret, it will be out of our power to relieve.

The State borrowed for banking purposes, $1,390,000, and issued her bonds for that amount bearing five per cent. interest, payable as follows: $500,000 in Sept., 1864, $450,000 in August, 1865, and $440,000, in July, 1866. Of these bonds, $84,000 have been redeemed by the bank, leaving outstanding, $1,306,000. I think it a safe calculation that the bank can make ten per cent. interest on this money, five of which will pay the interest on the bonds, and five per cent. will remain as a profit to be devoted to the use of common schools. Putting this profit at the sum of $65,000 per annum, it would amount in five years, to the sum of $325,000. That is a large sum of money and ought not to be inconsiderately thrown away. The bank bonds were negotiated on better terms than they could be now negotiated. The question before the committee is not one of borrowing money, but whether we should pay, before it is due, money borrowed on so favorable terms. The charter of the bank expires in 1857, and none of the bonds mature before 1864. If the charter should be extended to 1862, it would then expire in ample time before the maturity of the bonds, to enable the bank to pay them promptly as they fall due. It should be remembered that the State borrowed from the school fund and expended in internal improvements, $665,580. This amount, the State pledged her faith to pay, "whenever the bank stock loan shall be paid off and the bank wound up." I am afraid this pledge will be forfeited. How is that loan to be paid? Can our people bear any heavier rate of taxation than is now laid upon them? We ought to make every effort to protect our common school fund from loss. I have shown you here, I believe, a large amount of this prospective loss may be covered by the earnings of the bank, if her charter should be extended five years. I do not desire to make this extension imperative upon the Legislature, but I do desire that the question may be left to be decided by the people through their representatives, in such manner as they, upon mature deliberation, may think best.

Mr. BASCOM moved to amend the section so as to provide that the stock of the State Bank shall be taxed the same as any other property.

Mr. WALPOLE. I had the pleasure, some two or three weeks ago, of addressing some remarks to the Convention, on the subject of the State Bank, and of the policy and interest of the State in maintaining it. The old "monster" has made his appearance again. At the time the first bank charter was passed by the Legislature, this was the assertion that was put forth—"after two years the bank shall not issue bills of less denomination than ten dollars." Before the expiration of two years, however, she came to the Legislature for an alteration of the act of incorporation, so that instead of being restricted to the issue of bills of a less denomination than ten dollars, she might have the privilege of issuing bills of any amount down to one dollar. She found the Legislature of Indiana in the condition similar to that in which the Convention finds itself now, without a dollar to pay the per diem of its members, and in debt to every body. She said "we will advance you $80,000, if you extend our charter for five years. She obtained what she asked for; and a second time she found the Legislature in a position of embarrassment, and tendered them a loan on similar terms; and to-day she comes in and tells you that if you will extend her charter for five years, she will advance the money to pay your per diem, and enable you to go home. ["Consent! Consent!"]

Sir, let us deal honestly. I am surprised to hear gentlemen rise and say that through the influence of this "monster," you may have your system of free banking adopted.

The gentleman from Jefferson (Mr. Dunn) has said that if you comply with the demand of the free bank, you will be enabled to carry into effect your proposed free bank system.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson (interposing). Permit me to correct the gentleman—

Mr. WALPOLE (without noticing the interruption). It is to protect the purity of the Legislature, that I protest against the introduction of such a proposition as this at this late period of our session. It is a duty that is incumbent on the highest deliberative body of the State, at once to spurn this outrage—this attempt to practice on the necessities of the people. The people do not want the bank charter extended for five years; it is asked for only to enable them to carry out frauds; depend on it, there is a design in it that is not apparent to us. I hope the section will not pass.

Mr. PETTIT. I am not at all surprised to see this proposition introduced this morning, and I should not be surprised to see just such a proposition introduced at the last hour of the session. I have expected to see such a proposition as this emanating from a concern which pursues a course of fraud, weakness, and villainy, instead of an honorable course; and such will be its career until the last days of its existence.

Sir, the syren song is repeated here by the gentleman from Jefferson, that you make money by your connection with this institution. I pronounce it to be utterly visionary and fallacious to say that this bank has made money for the State. Your State Bank deserves an extension of its charter for five years, in order to make money for the education of your children! Great indeed is the anxiety of that institution for the education of your children! Great indeed is the anxiety of that institution for the welfare of the children of this country! Sir, the feeling of sympathy on the part of that institution for the children of this State, is very much like that of the lion, or of the wolf, towards the lamb. It would take not only the flesh, and the blood, and the sinews, but the very bones. Ave, sir, even the very marrow in the bones, and swallow them all up. "True patriots" they, to be sure! They want to make money for the State; they want the use of the children's money in order to make money for the children's benefit! A very probable thing truly! No, sir; they want to make money for themselves. The naked truth is, the State Bank of Indiana is broken, is rotten, is worthless. It never can redeem its liabilities, and it wants an extension of its charter for five years in order to hide its worthlessness.

Sir, did not the friends of free banking and the friends of the State Bank make a compromise?—much to my dissatisfaction. But I consented that the matter should go to the people, and be determined by them, through their representatives in the Legislature. But here comes a proposition again for the benefit of the State Bank. And, sir, by what influence is this expected to be carried out? By subornation. Yes, sir, bribery is abroad. False pretences are made to lull you into the belief that all is right, and to induce you to grant them an additional period of time in which to continue the perpetration of frauds upon the community.

Mr. President, is this thing to go on? When are we to have done with it? The present charter of the bank extends to the year eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, and now she comes forward, taking time by the forelock, to secure an additional period of five years in which to enjoy the monopoly she possesses, although you have determined that you will put in practice a different system. Do you expect to see free banking successfully carried on while this monster monopoly is in existence? It is idle to expect it. Sir, the design is to cover up and conceal as long as possible the rottenness of that institution, while they continue to filch from the State every dollar that can be drained from it. It is neither more nor less than that.

The gentleman from Hancock has very properly appealed to the honor and integrity of members of this Convention to stand up against this thing. Sir, adopt such a proposition as this, and every one of you will go home branded with the charge of having been bribed and bought up by this monster. Month after month and time after time have we put it down, and, as we thought, finally put the matter at rest; yet at the last hour because, forsooth, you have not the pitiful sum necessary to pay your per diem allowance, ready to put into your pocket, you are to be pursued by propositions of this kind in the hope that you may be weak enough to yield to their importunities, and permit this worthless institution to go on in its career stealing from the citizens of this State their hard earnings, and sucking their very life blood! Sir, I feel as did the proud woman mentioned in history who, when about to be robbed of her honor, took the dagger and buried it in her breast, saying "mine eyes shall not see my disgrace." Sir, my eyes shall not look upon this outrage. [Enthusiastic applause.]

Cries of "Vote it down!"

Mr. STEVENSON. I have always avoided getting myself into a passion; in the examination of a question of this kind, in which the interests of the country are involved, it is necessary that we should be calm and dispassionate. This old bank, sir, has been loudly denounced, and it has even been charged that this is a scheme of the bank by which she is to obtain an extension of her charter; that she is to influence the votes of members by holding out the offer to advance the funds requisite to meet the expenses of this Convention. Sir, I for one do not care whether the bank pays our wages or not; nor do I care whether the State pays them at all. I am neither beholden to the bank or the State for the pittance that is due me. But I endeavor to act, in regard to all measures, calmly and dispassionately, and to do what appears to me to be for the best interests of the country, in spite of the ravings of others. This is a question which we should discuss coolly and deliberately, as becomes legislators.

Now I am a State Bank man, but in regard to any proposition, no matter from what quarter it comes, I shall endeavor to act upon it according to the dictates of my judgment, and to determine for myself upon its merits. I do not, as a State Bank man, think that we have so much to gain by the adoption of this proposition as the gentleman seems to suppose. He says it is going to be of enormous advantage to the bank to extend its charter for five years. But, sir, the Legislature will, in the mean time, charter free banks. A free banking system will be put in operation, and it will, by that time, have had an opportunity to become firmly fixed and established; and, when the charter finally expires, there will be a system of banking to supply the place of the State Bank, and to afford commercial facilities to the State. I say then, it is no scheme on the part of the State Bank men. It is, on the contrary, for the public advantage that banking operations should be carried on until your new system shall have been put into practical operation and the people have become acquainted with it, so far as to be willing to repose confidence in it if it be worthy of confidence, for upon this must depend the successful operation of any system of banking. I am, myself, doubtful of the ultimate success of your free banking system; and it appears to me highly essential that there should be an opportunity afforded to fully test its merits and to ascertain whether it will furnish for the country a currency that will supply the necessities of commerce. I say, then, that if at the end of five years it be found to answer the purpose for which it shall have been established, then, sir, there will be no interruption to the business of the country, and the free banking system will continue in operation. But if it should be found not to answer the purpose for which it was established, as I believe will be the case, I have no fears but that the Legislature in its wisdom will establish a State Bank, with branches. Then I have nothing to fear about the matter, for I consider there is no sort of danger that a State Bank will not be in existence. And, sir, in regard to the insinuation that we may be influenced in our action on this question by the consideration of receiving our per diem, I say for myself, that I care not whether I receive the pittance that is owing to me here or not; I can go home without it. I am neither to be bought nor sold; and the men who intimate a thing of that kind, are the very men most likely, perhaps, to be bought. It is a charge that is unworthy of any man who holds a seat in this Convention.

Mr. HAMILTON. I am exceedingly sorry that the gentleman from Tippecanoe has left his seat.

Mr. HOWE (interposing.) Will the gentleman from Allen give way for a moment, to enable me to offer an amendment?

The PRESIDENT. There is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

Mr. HAMILTON (resuming). I was about to say, sir, that I am exceedingly sorry the gentleman from Tippecanoe is not in his place, for I should be glad to say a few words in reply to the remarks of that gentleman. It is not my purpose to detain the Convention with an argument upon this question. Indeed I was not aware that it would again be brought up, for I have not consulted with any man on the subject. I profess to be a friend of the State Bank, and it is known that I am connected with that institution, being one of the managers. And when a gentleman gets up on this floor and denounces those connected with the State Bank as being corrupt and dishonest, and pronounces the institution to be rotten and insolvent, assigning this as a motive why they seek an extension of their charter, I pronounce the statement false, and without any foundation whatever.

Mr. WALPOLE (interposing). If the gentleman will allow me, for a moment, I will remind him of several occasions upon which money has been loaned by the bank to the State, with the express understanding between the bank directors and the Legislature that the charter of the bank should be amended so as to give them additional privileges. The gentleman will remember ———

Mr. HAMILTON. I do not yield the floor sir.

Mr. WALPOLE. That the Bank made application——

Mr. HAMILTON. I cannot consent to the gentleman's occupying the floor during the time allotted to me.

Mr. WALPOLE. Only a single moment, sir.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Allen is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HAMILTON. I requested the gentleman from Tippecanoe to stay; I am replying to his remarks. If he says that the managers of the State Bank are corrupt men, I have to tell him that he is making a charge that is wholly untrue. The gentleman goes on to state that this institution is rotten; and how does he show it? Does he produce any statistics in support of his assertion? Is he a gentleman who is accustomed to give us proofs of that kind? He is a man of talent, I admit, but he is not a man of figures. Now, so far as his imputation on the integrity of the managers of the Bank and the solvency of the institution is concerned, I pronounce the charge to be gratuitous and false. I will not sit quietly by and hear those connected with the State Bank denounced as swindlers. It is highly improper for any gentleman to get up here and denounce a set of men by a wholesale declaration of this kind; and when it is made, I pronounce it to be a falsehood, let it come from what source it may.

Mr. WALPOLE. What is the charge the gentleman complains of?

Mr. HAMILTON. That every man connected with the Bank is a rogue and a swindler.

Mr. WALPOLE. There has been no such allegation made. The gentleman from Tippecanoe certainly said no such thing.

Mr. HAMILTON. He said what was equivalent to it.

Mr. WALPOLE. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does he not know that $80,000 were loaned by the Bank to the State on consideration that power should be given to the Bank to issue bills of credit?

Mr. HAMILTON. I do not know of any such condition.

Mr. WALPOLE. Was not the gentleman connected with the Bank in 1833-4?

Mr. HAMILTON. I was not. I should not have said a word, sir, in reference to the Bank had it not been for the charges with which that institution has been assailed. I merely rose to put my condemnation upon them; and I must say that I regret very much to hear any man give utterance to slanderous charges of this description, regardless of the feelings of others, when he must be aware that there is no foundation for them. Now the gentleman from Hancock and myself have been on the same side upon this question; he certainly has been as warm a State Bank man as I am.

Mr. WALPOLE. No, sir. It is true I am for a State Bank—

Mr. HAMILTON. Precisely. The gentleman is for a State Bank; but it is a matter of no importance. I merely rose to say what I have said in reply to the gentleman from Tippecanoe.

Mr. DOBSON. With the permission of the Convention I will make a brief explanation; and I should not have said a word on the subject were it not for the remarks of the gentlemen from Tippecanoe and Hancock. Now I have lived long enough not to get scared right away when I see a storm coming. I hardly ever take the trouble even to provide myself with an umbrella, and I don't think I shall require one now.

In regard, sir, to this charge of bribery, all I have to say is, that I have never had a particle of connection with the State Bank of Indiana, or any other Bank, except banks of earth, from which I have raised potatoes and pumpkins.

A VOICE. Go it, Dobson. You are "some punkins." [Laughter.]

Mr. DOBSON. I never asked for a loan from a Bank, and I never expect to. I never had any brothers, uncles, cousins, or aunts, who asked any favors from Banks. It will be admitted, therefore, that I have no great interest in keeping up a State Bank. And as to the contest between the State Bank men and the anti-Bank men, I am pretty much in the situation of the woman, who, when her husband had a fight with a bear, didn't care much which got whipped.

Now as to the sympathy which the State Bank has with the children of the State, whether it is like that of a "lion" or a "wolf" towards a "lamb," or not, I suppose they have about as much sympathy as the free banking men have. Indeed, the former seem better disposed, for they are willing to divide the profits, while the free bank men want to take all. We might retort the charge, but that would be no argument. If I had a mind to deal in abuse, I might compete with even the gentleman from Tippecanoe himself. I might say to him, "Look at your New York stock jobbers, who are here trying to buy you up." But I will not make any such assertion.

One word regarding the obtaining of our pay. It is a consideration that does not affect me in the least; I do not care one cent whether I get my per diem or not. I can go home without it. I did not come here to make money, and I can go home without asking assistance from the State Bank, or any other quarter. As to the fuss that was gotten up in the Legislature a little while ago, in regard to the swelling of the expenses of the Convention, all I have to say is, that if my people complain of it, I am willing to make the State a free gift of all I am entitled to in the way of per diem.

But, sir, I am actuated by the reason which I assigned at first; that is, that we have seen here that the State Bank men and the anti-Bank men outnumber the Free Bank men; and the Free Bank men and the anti-Bank men are too many for the State Bank men. And these combinations may be brought to bear in the Legislature, so as to prevent the passage of any law in relation to banking, or else to secure the passage of a law that will not be acceptable to the people of the whole State; not that they will bribe your Legislature; I am not going to advance any such wholesale charge, although the gentleman from Hancock intimates that every man in the Legislature has, on former occasions, been bribed and bought up.

Mr. COOKERLY (in his seat). I believe they were.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is entirely a mistake.

Mr. DOBSON (continuing). We only propose that the Legislature shall have power, if they deem it expedient to grant the extension that is here indicated; and the opposition that gentlemen make to the proposition only goes to show that in their opinion the Legislature will act dishonestly—that they are corruptible, and that the State Bank will buy them up. We do not say that the Legislature shall pass such a law; but, inasmuch as they are authorized to pass a general banking law, we declare that when they pass the one they may pass the other also; that is all we say about it. My object is, to let the State Bank have an opportunity to pay its debts and wind up its business. And in point of fact, we do not need the money belonging to the State that is deposited in the State Bank, because it is not to be re-paid until the time named to which it is proposed to extend the charter of the Bank. I prefer that the money should be kept here, and not then sent out of the State.

Mr. KELSO. I care very little about the charges that have been made against the Legislature. I have not been a member of that body; therefore, those charges cannot affect me; but as a friend of the State Bank, so far as I am a friend to any bank at all, I will say to the gentlemen from Hancock, and to the gentleman from Tippecanoe, that their charges are rather gratuitous. And let me say that the State Bank is an institution that has been created for the benefit of the State. The State owns half the stock, and individuals own the balance. Now, suppose the State of Indiana should be in a strait for money, and should have to make application somewhere for assistance, where can she so properly go as to an institution of her own, within her own limits, to obtain the relief she requires? Where should she go but to the State Bank of Indiana? If that bank has the means to spare, she will, as a matter of course, at once grant the relief that is asked for. Again, sir, if the State Bank men, those interested in that institution, desire an extension of their charter, where are they to seek for it, but at the hands of the representatives of the people—where else could they obtain it? And, sir, does not the State derive an advantage from the existence of the bank—does not the State receive her share of the profits made by the bank? How should we have obtained a million of dollars for the school fund, if it had not been for her connection with that bank? And what injury, sir, has been occasioned by the operations of the bank? Who has been imposed on? Who has been in the least degree, injured in consequence of authorizing the bank to issue small bills? I say that no evil has resulted from it—no harm has been done. The profits made by the bank have been divided between the State and the individual stockholders share and share alike.

Well, sir, as to the charge of corruption and bribery by the bank, in buying up the members of the Legislature, what advantage could accrue to the bank, that the State did not participate in? None whatever. But where is the evidence of such corruption? Where is the evidence that the bank ever refused to advance money that was asked for by the State, without requiring as a condition of such advance, some privilege to be extended to that institution, as an equivalent? I say that the allegations of the gentleman from Hancock, or of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, or of any other gentlemen, are not sufficient evidence to my mind; and we have had no such testimony from any gentleman who was a member of the Legislature, when the acts referred to were passed.

Mr. WALPOLE. Permit me to remind the gentlemen that the gentleman from Jefferson intimates to the Convention, that the State Bank men in the Legislature, co-operating with the free bank men, may, at any time, succeed in obtaining the passage of any measure desired by them.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. No, sir. That is not what I said.

Mr. KELSO. Gentlemen will excuse me—my time is short. I do not see the necessity for any such combination. As I understand the proposition, it is this—that the first Legislature that meets under the new Constitution, may, if a majority of all the members deem it right and proper—if they consider that it would promote the interests of the people of Indiana, extend the charter of the State Bank for five years; and that if this be done, it is to be done in connection with a general banking law. And I ask you if it is not in the power of the Legislature to impose such restriction on free banking as would render any system of free banking inoperative? And if a system of free banking be put in operation, would that prevent the establishment of a State Bank? Now, there can be no difficulty or hardship growing out of this proposition. It is a matter which should be left to the discretion of the people to be acted upon by them through their representatives.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I regret very much that we should have anything like an excited debate on this question. There is no subject requiring more cool, calm, deliberation. Why these appeals to prejudice? Are gentlemen afraid of the deliberate judgment of this body? Why impute dishonorable motives to the friends of this proposition? Such a course is unworthy of ourselves—unworthy of those who sent us here—but worthy the source from whence it comes. The question before us is plain, simple, and easy of comprehension, but important in its bearings. Let us approach it then, with candor and fairness, and act on it dispassionately, as becomes men who desire to do what is right. What do we ask? Simply this that in the passage of a general banking law—the Legislature may continue a charter of the State Bank five years from its termination. Not that the Legislature shall do it, but that if the voice of the people command it, that they may have the power to do it. Is there anything unreasonable in this request? Anything that should excite us with terror and alarm? Is it dangerous to leave in the hands of the people this small pittance of power? Cannot we trust them in one particular? The people, the free bank men, and the State bank men, knowing that this question would be acted on the first session of the Legislature under the new Constitution—would agitate and discuss it in every township throughout the State. A question so thoroughly identified with the industrial resources of the country call forth the business talent of the State. This would produce an enlightened public sentiment on this question. Who dreads that public sentiment? Not we. Who withholds from the people the right to express that sentiment? Our opponents! If the people desire to continue the charter of the bank for five years, they will send their friends to the Legislature to do it. If they do not desire it, they will say so. Now, let me ask, does it become us to deprive our masters of this right? We may think we understand their interests better than they do, and that they are not fit to be trusted with the decisions of this question. If these are your sentiments, tell the people so when next you want their votes. All we ask is to leave the decision to them. They cannot blame us for allowing them to exercise their own judgments, but to refuse the right ought to and may provoke their displeasure. We were sent here to remove restrictions in the old Constitution. Let us not, then, multiply the evils which we were sent here to remedy.

Mr. President, I am a free bank man, but I have great fears, very serious doubts, whether we are, or will be, at the expiration of the present bank charter, sufficiently ripe to rely on an exclusive system of free banking. We are not in the condition of New York and the New England States. They are old and wealthy States. They have been laying up their pennies for years. They had large sums invested in stocks, and the transition to free banking was easy; in fact, it increased their circulation. The case with us—as I had occasion before to remark—is very different—we are a debtor State. Three hundred and twenty-six thousand dollars will soon go abroad annually, to pay the interest on our State debt, and it is as much as our people can well bear. With such a burden on our shoulders, we cannot be expected to accumulate a very large surplus of wealth during the existence of the present charter. Yet, we are making very considerable additions to our wealth, and the addition of five years to our State Bank charter, will bring us to a period when the transition to an exclusive system of free banking will be less injurious to the industrial resources of the country. The shock would then be less severe and the void thus created in the currency would be more easily supplied.

I will now refer the committee to some facts which I have from well informed business men, relative to the operations of the "Wisconsin Fire Marine Insurance Company." This company is chartered by the State of Wisconsin—her real banking-house or office is in the city of Chicago. Illinois, as you are aware, has no banking institutions. Chicago, then presented a point for the profitable employment of banking capital. This company is furnishing a large circulation in the northern part of Illinois and Indiana. So great is the confidence of the public in the ability and integrity of the person who manages the company, that his notes has a wide circulation. Besides this, the necessities of trade compel them to have a circulation. The profits of this company are known to be immense—from a hundred to a hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually.

It may not become me to say how this company makes so much money, but I will describe a plan which a money-making man would be likely to adopt, and gentlemen may regard it as fancy or fact. A dealer wants $10,000 to buy produce—he applies to the banker, and informs him of the sum he wants, and that it is to be employed in the purchase of grain, to be shipped to New York. The banker says he will take a bill on New York, at sixty days, but it must be at a small discount. A modest hint is given to the trader that he must insure this produce in his company. The rates of insurance are agreed upon, and every thing is fixed to the satisfaction of the banker. Though the terms of the insurance may be high—yet the dealer wants the money. Just in proportion to the stringency of the money market, will the operation be favorable to the banker. Now, who suffers in this operation? Not the trader, but the tiller of the soil. The trader will take care to buy on such terms as will make him safe. Now, if Illinois had such a bank as ours, with a branch at Chicago, furnishing $2,000,000 of circulation, or what was adequate to the wants of trade, would not the competition resulting from the increased number of purchasers, and the facilities of obtaining money redound greatly to the benefit of the farmer? Most unquestionably.

We ought to look at society as it exists, to see things as they are, and not be misled by theories. In Illinois they have no monopoly of a bank, yet a broker's office there far exceeds in profits the same amount of capital in our State Bank.

Whenever we have wanted money to sustain the credit of our State, the bank has never refused it, but has always furnished it. She has never asked an extension of her charter, and all we ask now, is that one poor privilege may be allowed the people—that of deciding this question themselves.

Mr. COLFAX. I shall not detain the Convention over the five minutes allotted by our rules, as they know right well that I speak very rapidly. When this matter was first suggested I deliberated long whether I could give it my support. I have finally concluded to vote for it, and will briefly and frankly state the reasons.

The first, the main object, in all the votes I have cast upon the bank question, has been to secure free banking at the earliest possible moment. And though we have adopted a compromise section which authorizes it, yet we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that it is still another thing for the Legislature to pass the required law pursuant to that authority. Fifty-one Representatives and twenty-six Senators must vote for it to secure its adoption, as all laws hereafter passed must receive the affirmative votes of a majority of all the members elected to each branch of the Legislature. And if the same feeling is exhibited there as has been in this body, an union of the friends of the State Bank and the anti-bankers might very easily prevent the passage of a general banking law; at any rate till eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, the time of the expiration of the present charter.

If, therefore, I believe it will hasten the adoption of a free bank law, if it will indeed secure its passage, it seems as if it is clearly my duty to support it. What does it propose? That the charter of the present State Bank may be extended five years in a general banking law. In no other way than in a free bank law can it be extended; and it seems as if this would make it the interest of the friends of the State Bank to assist the friends of free banks in passing their law, in order that under it their charter, if they had sufficient friends for that purpose, might be extended. More than this, it does not say, even then, that that charter shall be extended. If the friends of free banks are strong enough in the Legislature to pass their law without assistance from those members friendly to the State Bank, they need not extend the charter another hour. It is not, in the slightest degree, imperative on them. It can be extended only in a free bank law. And it cannot be extended even then, unless the friends of free banks are willing.

But another point still. In what does this proposition differ from the compromise section which I had the honor of introducing, and the passage of which such an overwhelming majority of this Convention so recently refused to re-consider? I am glad to see several gentlemen around me who opposed that compromise to the last, who now say it must be stood by and maintained in its every letter. It authorizes, as all know, both systems; free banks and a State Bank, in which the State should not be a partner. And if this section now before us should be carried out to the utmost, it would only authorize both systems still. True, for five years longer the present instead of a new State Bank, would be authorized; but no money would be borrowed for the State's share of the capital stock, which is one of the great objections to the State's partnership in banks or other corporations. As has been well remarked, the bank bonds on which the State's capital in the present bank is based, do not fall due till eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and such an extension, if authorized, would only be allowing the bank to live out the same life as those bonds. It would only be authorizing the money to be continued to be used for banking, with its present guaranties and securities, instead of having it lay in our State treasury from eighteen hundred and fifty-seven till the bonds become due and their owners call for their payment. If this section proposed that bonds should be sold and the money borrowed for the State to bank on, there would be a good ground of objection to it, after the decisive action this Convention has taken upon that point.

It may be possible, indeed I consider it highly probable, that if such an extension took place, before its expiration the benefits and excellencies, the safety and permanency of our free banks would be so triumphantly vindicated that no considerable portion of the people would desire any other system. Free banking would then be the permanent system of the State.

Besides preventing the Legislature from loading down a general banking law with amendments and restrictions that would prevent its going into operation, this section, if carried out, would also secure a waiver of the rights claimed by the State Bank to exclusive banking privileges up to eighteen hundred and fifty-seven—the life of her charter. It is well known that she claims such exclusive privileges under her charter, granted under authority of the old Constitution. I differ decidedly with her friends, as to these claims. I believe free banking can and should go into force, immediately on the passage of the law for that purpose, authorized by this Constitution. But I can well see how these claims by the State Bank might make capitalists and others reluctant to invest in free banks, and how the waiver of these claims would facilitate such investments.

But, Mr. President, I shall go for this section mainly to secure the early passage of a free banking law, and a prompt organization of that system; and I shall, therefore, at the proper time, move to add to the section "that it shall apply only if the general banking law is passed at the very first session under this Constitution." I wish to make the friends of the State Bank aid in securing its passage at the earliest possible hour; and even then, as I have before remarked, the extension is not commanded, but the friends of free banks, if they have the power, without other aid, to pass their own law, need not provide for a year's or a day's extension.

Mr. RARIDEN. I was not aware that this proposition was to be introduced. The first intimation I had of it was when, on coming into the Convention a few moments ago, I found the discussion going on. I heard only a portion of the remarks of the gentleman from Tippecanoe. Now the proposition appears to me as if it came from the free bank men. It seems preparatory to shifting the capital employed in one form of banking to another, which is a very prudent course for gentlemen who maintain that free banks are of more importance to the community than is a State Bank. I had entertained the idea that our present form of banking was secured to the community. I have not favored the State Bank propositions for the purpose of doing a service to State Bank men, nor have I opposed the establishment of a free bank system because I did not wish to see men invest their capital in free banks, but it was simply because I believe that the public interest would not be so secure under a general banking system as under a State Bank system.

Now whether the State Bank is solvent or not, I have no other means of judging than from the reports made officially by the officers of that institution. I have not been in the habit of looking at the dark side of human character, and I am firmly of opinion that if we encourage these uncharitable opinions of our fellow men, the indulgence of those suspicions do us infinitely more harm than those against whom they are indulged. I can see no danger in allowing an extension of the State Bank charter for five years. I take it that if in that time there should be any apprehension of wrong or injustice being contemplated by that institution, as has been supposed in cases heretofore when privileges have been extended to them—as, for instance, that of allowing them to issue bills of a small denomination—it will turn out to be an unfounded supposition, as was the case in that instance, for I maintain that it was for the benefit of the people as well as it was for the benefit of the bank. If it were a privilege to the bank to issue small notes, it was a benefit to the general currency of the State, because it enabled us to protect ourselves against the introduction of a spurious circulation from other States. Now I do not know that it would be a great advantage to the State Bank that her charter should be extended. But, at all events, it is not for the purpose of consulting the wishes of those interested in that institution, but it is for the purpose of making the change gradual from one system to the other, that this proposition has been introduced. The very fact of throwing their capital together in this form, stimulates the industry of the people; and if the country does not receive greater benefit from this circulating medium than the banks themselves do, I should be against all banks.

The question being on the amendment of the gentleman from Wells (Mr. Bascom),

Mr. DOBSON. I would accept the proposition of the gentlemen but for this fact, that the State Banks yields a profit to the State from the funds invested in the State Bank, and you cannot make a distinction in levying the tax.

Mr. WALPOLE. But the connection ceases at the expiration of the present charter.

Mr. DOBSON. Then I accept the amendment as a modification of my proposition.

Mr. COOKERLY proposed to amend the section to the effect that the Legislature shall, at its first session under the new Constitution, pass a general banking law, in which law they may extend the termination of the present bank charter for five years.

I offer this, said Mr. C., as a compromise proposition.

Mr. GIBSON. (Sotto voce.) D—n such compromises.

Mr. COOKERLY. We have compromised this question once, not however to my satisfaction. This question, however, is brought in again at a late hour; at a time when I thought we had settled all the great principles that we were called upon to settle, and when we are about to wind up our business and go home. I say, sir, that under all these circumstances this question has been again thrust upon the Convention. I was sorry to see it introduced. I regret it from the very bottom of my heart, because I believe from the indications which I see around me, that the proposition of the gentleman from Owen will pass. And I tell you now that if it be incorporated in the Constitution, it will create great dissatisfaction, not only among a large portion of the delegates to this Convention, but among the people of the State.

Mr. WALPOLE (in his seat). No doubt of it.

Mr. COOKERLY. I am sincere and earnest in offering what I have offered; and I do trust that if what I propose as a compromise be not adopted, the whole matter will be voted down, and that we shall be governed by the compromise which passed some weeks since in relation to the subject.

The State Bank men say that if we pass this provision, it will favor free banking. I ask in what way will it favor the establishment of a system of free banking? Does it authorize the Legislature to pass a general banking law? No, sir, it only authorizes a continuance, or rather an extension of the charter of the State Bank for five years. The free bank men say that the adoption of this provision will not prevent a general banking law from being passed; but I can tell them, however, that it will retard it.

A VOICE. That is the object of it.

Mr. COOKERLY. I do not know whether that is its object or not; I hope it is not. I dislike very much to impugn the motives of men; but I must be permitted to say that it comes from a State Bank man. I am not going to impugn his motives. Is not the question left to the Legislature whether we shall have a State Bank established or not? certainly. And has not the Convention determined that the State shall not be a stockholder? has it not been decided by an overwhelming majority? has not the whole matter been compromised in fine? Yet, at the moment when our work is just on the point of completion—when we are about to adjourn, the question is again pressed upon the Convention. Sir, I protest against it; it is wrong; it is unjust. It is unjust on the part of a minority, those who voted against the compromise originally, to bring forward this proposition at a time when many members have gone home, under the impression that all questions involving important principles had been finally settled. A majority of this Convention have agreed upon a compromise in relation to this question, and have passed it. And now, at the moment of separating, the subject is again introduced in this new form. Sir, I warn the Convention not to adopt this section. If it be adopted I tell you we will hear a voice of disapprobation, coming up from among the people, that will make itself heard by those who vote in favor of the adoption of this section. Sir, there is a great deal of prejudice existing in the community against this Convention. The Legislature has tried to augment this dissatisfaction among the people. And members on this floor have declared in advance that they would vote against the Constitution. Now, under these circumstances, would it be proper, would it be prudent, to adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Owen? Sir, it appears to me that the popular indications are adverse to the adoption of such a proposition as this. Sir, I trust it will not be adopted. But if this section, as proposed by the gentleman from Owen, be adopted, then, sir, I throw myself upon my own rights—and I have a right to determine for myself whether I support this Constitution or not—and as a representative of a free people, I shall decide that the Constitution should not be adopted.

Mr. GIBSON. [Very indistinctly heard, owing to the confusion prevailing throughout the chamber.] I had supposed, sir, that the question was definitely settled. Such was certainly the understanding of nineteen-twentieths of the members of this Convention. But, now, however, at this late hour, when the days and hours of the Convention are numbered, when the hour is fixed for our adjournment, the question is thrust upon us again. I apprehend that no man will deliberately bring a charge of bribery against any member of this Convention. If any such charge were made, I should not believe it. I ask you to consider how this matter will appear when presented before the people, if we adopt this proposition? I ask you in the phrase which has become so popular, "what will Mrs. Grundy say?" Time and time again has this proposition been voted down. Gentlemen should not obtrude it upon us again. We are here, it is said, depending upon the bank for our pay: then pass it if you dare. Go home to your constituents, and tell them you did this through your anxiety for their interests, and try to persuade them that you are honest. You cannot do it.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. All this clamor about bribery and corruption passes by me as unheeded as the idle wind. The gentleman from Clark (Mr. Gibson) dares the advocates of this measure to pass it, and go home to face their constituents. I would say to him that if he would be afraid to face his constituents after having voted for this motion, I am not afraid to vote for it and go home to meet mine. I believe it to be right; and I dare to do what I believe to be right, either here or elsewhere. Sir, however unworthy I may be found in other respects, I trust I shall never prove so craven hearted as to be deterred from the performance of a high public duty by the fear that any motives may be misrepresented, or my acts exposed to unjust suspicion. Indeed I should feel that I had lived to little purpose if I thought my character could be effected by the ridiculous cry of bribery that has been raised on this occasion. The section under consideration has been the subject of free conversation among the members for several days. It would have been introduced earlier, but it properly belongs to the miscellaneous provisions. Moreover there was so much excitement last week on subjects connected with banking, that it was not thought the measure would receive, if presented under such circumstances, that deliberate consideration which its friends desired it should receive. I was aware that a bill was pending in the Legislature providing for borrowing money from the State Bank to pay off the members of this Convention; but such a thought as that members could or would be induced to vote for this section in order to secure their pay, never entered my mind, until it was suggested in this debate. And, sir, I cannot conceive how such a suspicion could have ever entered the brain of any high minded and honorable gentleman.

The gentleman from Vigo (Mr. Cookerly) has moved an amendment, saying that the Legislature shall pass a general banking law at its first session under this Constitution, and that in such law it may extend the charter of the State Bank for five years. However proper his amendment might be, I know this Convention will not adopt it. But I think his object will be accomplished by the passage of the section without the amendment. If the friends of the State Bank should be disposed to procrastinate the passage of a general banking law, the friends of free banking could soon convince them that if they desired an extension of their charter at all, they must procure it early or never. We will, I have no doubt, by the adoption of this motion, secure the enactment of a free banking law at the next session of the Legislature. In reply to the misrepresentations of my previous remarks upon this subject, I desire to say that I did not speak of the importance of securing the co-operation of the State Bank in procuring a general banking law. I spoke not of the Bank, but of the friends of that institution—not of the stockholders, but of such friends as those who have so ably and earnestly defended her on this floor. Men entertaining the same views will be found in your legislative halls, and will be able to command respect for their opinions. I deem it a matter of importance to secure their good will, for it is never wise to underrate the power of your adversary. I have thought much about this motion, and have come to the conclusion that as a friend to free banking, I ought to support it. I am as liable to err as other men, and in matters of doubt, I prefer to leave the power of discussion to the people, as provided in this section, rather than to impose a restriction upon the exercise of their free will.

Mr. HOWE. I would inquire if it is in order to move to strike out the section?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir. The question pending is on the motion of the gentleman from Vigo (Mr. Cookerly).

Mr. COOKERLY. I have a right to modify my amendment, I believe?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Lagrange has the floor.

Mr. HOWE. I ask if it be not in order to move to strike out the section?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir; the friends of the section have the right to perfect it first.

Mr. HOWE. Then I move to lay the amendment of the gentleman from Vigo on the table.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. HOWE then moved to strike out the section, and insert in lieu thereof a section providing that the charter of the State Bank shall be extended to the year 1862, with a proviso that no other State Bank shall go into existence after that period.

Mr. COLFAX. Before the question is put on the motion to strike out, I desire to perfect the section by an amendment, which I have no doubt will be accepted by the gentleman from Owen. It is, that the general law, extending the charter, shall be enacted at the first session of the Legislature, under the new Constitution.

The object of this amendment is to obviate the objections of those who say that the Legislature will defer the passage of a general banking law. I desire that this may be adopted in order to show that their authorizing the extension of the State Bank charter shall be upon the condition of their passing a general banking law. I ask the gentleman from Owen if he be willing to accept this amendment as a modification of his section?

Mr. DOBSON declined to accept the amendment.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment,

Mr. BASCOM demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was, upon a division—ayes 58, noes 25—seconded.

The question then being, Shall the main question be ordered to be now put,

Mr. WALPOLE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken were—yeas 78, nays 45—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Brookbank, Butler, Carr, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Hadson, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogan, Howe, Huff, Johnson of D., Jones, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, Mathis, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Noisinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Sims, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wallace, Watts, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—78.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Beeson, Berry, Bryant, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cookerly, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foley, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Harbolt, Hovey, Johnson of Orange, Kent, March, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Shannon, Shoup, Sniley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, and Wunderlich.—45.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. WALPOLE moved that the Convention adjourn.

The motion was, on a division—ayes 57, noes 39—decided in the affirmative.

So the Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The PRESIDENT announced the pending question to be on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from St. Joseph to the section introduced by the gentleman from Owen.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 79, nays 41—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Butler, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Helmer, Hitt, Huff, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Sims, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Thomas, Thornton, Watts, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—79.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Beeson, Bracken, Bright, Carter, Chapman, Coats, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Gibson, Gordon, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Logan, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Nave, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Ritchey, Shannon, Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Tague, Tannehill, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, and Wolfe—41.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The question recurred on the motion of the gentleman from Lagrange, to strike out the section and insert the substitute proposed by him, to extend the charter of the present Bank until the year 1862, with a proviso that no State Bank shall be thereafter established.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 41, nays 85—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bourne, Bryant, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Elliott, Garvin, Gibson, Hovey, Howe, Kendall of White, Mather, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Shoup, Smiley, Smith of Scott, Trimble, Wiley, and Wunderlich—41.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Blythe, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Carr, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Holman, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Murray, Nave, Newman, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—85.

So the amendment was not adopted.

Mr. WALPOLE. I move a re-consideration of the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Lagrange was rejected.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman cannot move to re-consider the vote.

Mr. WALPOLE. I am under the impression, sir, that I can.

The PRESIDENT. The matter is under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. WALPOLE. I must be permitted to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT. Does any gentleman second the appeal?

Mr. WALPOLE. There will be no difficulty about that, I imagine.

Mr. COOKERLY. I second the appeal.

Mr. WALPOLE. Almost any sensible man will second it. [A laugh.]

Mr. PEPPER of Crawford. If no motion is entertained by the Chair, how can there be an appeal? [Increased laughter.]

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark, that that is the very question we are going to try, whether the motion of the gentleman shall be entertained.

Mr. Walpole then commenced writing his appeal.

After a considerable pause, cries of "question," "question." Much impatience was manifested on all sides of the Chamber.

A MEMBER. What has become of the appeal? Is the gentleman writing a letter home? [Laughter, and cries of "consent."] Calls of "Borden," "Prather," "Cockerly," "come up and face the music."

Mr. WALPOLE then proceeded to read his appeal, which had been prepared in a circumstantial manner, and at considerable length.

The reading having been concluded,

The PRESIDENT. The appeal does not state the whole history of the case. [Renewed laughter.] The demand for the previous question had been seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. WALPOLE modified his appeal in accordance with the suggestion.

Mr. MAY. I do not believe, sir, that we are doing the State any service in selecting from the Statute Book fragments of laws and inserting them in the new Constitution. I move that the Convention adjourn.

The yeas and nays were demanded.

The PRESIDENT remarked that the Convention was waiting for the gentleman from Hancock to correct his appeal.

The question being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?"

It was decided in the affirmative.

The question then being on the adoption of the section as amended,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered, and, being taken, were—yeas 61, nays 67—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Blythe, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Carr, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foster, Frisbie, Gootee, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helma, Helmer, Hitt, Huff, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Lockhart, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, Milligan, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mower, Murray, Nave, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Robinson, Schoonover, Sims, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornon, Watts, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—61.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beach, Becson, Berry, Borden, Bourne, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foley, Garvin, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hardin, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of White, Kinley, Mather, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Moore, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Shannon Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Trimble, Walpole, Wiley, Wolfe, and Wunderlich—67.

So the section, as amended, was not adopted.

The PRESIDENT then called upon committees for REPORTS.

Mr. HALL, from the select committee to whom had been referred the subject of uniformity of assessment and taxation, reported a section which was read a first time.

Mr. HALL. This subject has been before the Convention, and the section was read a first and second time, and it was then re-committed to the select committee.

The PRESIDENT. It does not so appear by the report that is made from that committee.

Mr. PETTIT. The gentleman from Gibson is a little mistaken. It originated from a motion made by me; this is the first reading of the section.

The section was passed to a second reading.

TIPPECANOE BATTLE GROUND.

The section in relation to the inclosure and preservation of the Tippecanoe Battle Ground, was read a third time.

The question being, "Shall the section pass?"

Mr. MAGUIRE moved that it be re-committed to a select committee of three, with instructions to amend so as to provide that the State shall never sell the military ground at Indianapolis.

The question being upon the motion to re-commit.

Mr. PETTIT. It appears to me that the Convention might agree to the adoption of the amendment without the re-commitment of the section.

The PRESIDENT. It will require the withdrawal of the motion to re-commit.

The motion was not withdrawn.

The question was then taken upon the motion to re-commit with instructions, and it was on a division—ayes 51, noes 19—decided in the affirmative.

So the section was re-committed with instructions.

THE SCHOOL FUND.

The section offered by the gentleman from Laporte in relation to the consolidation of the common school fund was read a third time.

The question being, "Shall the section pass?"

On motion,

The section was laid upon the table.

SUBSTITUTION OF THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

The section which declares that the old Constitution shall be superseded by the one now being formed, was read a second time and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

LOCAL COURTS.

The following section was taken up on its second reading:

"Local courts, established in any city, town, or county, (including the Courts of Common Pleas for the counties of Marion and Tippecanoe,) shall continue with their present powers and jurisdiction until otherwise directed by law."

The question being on ordering the section to be engrossed,

Mr. EDMONSTON rose to inquire whether a provision had not already been adopted directing a law to be passed by the Legislature in reference to this matter?

Mr. WALPOLE. I would explain if the gentleman will allow me. Our new Constitution is intended to be a complete and full indication of what the laws of the State shall be. Well, sir, there are many things contained in the Constitution of 1816 that have not been inserted in this. Under these circumstances, the courts might hold that these portions of the old Constitution were still the supreme law of the land, if that instrument were not, by the express declaration of this Constitution, declared to be superseded. The committee found examples for such a section in the constitutions of other States. In regard to the second section of this article, we found that it had been usual to insert such a provision as it contains, least it might be considered that certain local tribunals were abrogated by the new Constitution.

Mr. EDMONSTON. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Hancock does not understand the inquiry. It is, whether a section has not already been passed retaining all these courts in existence until the Legislature shall make provision in regard to them. We do not propose to repeal any law. I see no necessity for the second section, and I do not see any necessity, sir, for burthening the Constitution with a provision of this kind.

Mr. WALPOLE. If my recollection is correct, the gentleman from Dubois himself has expressed a doubt whether these courts might not be considered as abrogated. I know there is an apprehension very extensively entertained that such will be the case. I have no anxiety about the matter; but if those who are interested in these courts desire that there shall be an express provision in regard to them, I think it is right that there should be such a provision. The rights of individuals might be compromised by abolishing them. I hope that, for the sake of the interests of those counties, the section will be retained; it certainly can do no harm.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson proposed to amend the section by striking out the words "including the Courts of Common Pleas for Marion and Tippecanoe."

He could see no necessity for making a special reference to those courts, because there were other local courts in many counties in the State. He would have no objection to see the section laid on the table. But if it were passed at all, it should be without any special reference to these courts.

Mr. PETTIT. There is certainly no design to continue these local courts permanently. But in Tippecanoe we have a court of general jurisdiction called a Court of Common Pleas, in which not only the interests of the people of Tippecanoe are involved, but also the interests of the people of other parts of the State, who, have occasion to transact business there. And, it is important that this court should continue in existence in consequence of a want of sufficient time and energy on the part of the circuit court to transact the business. I am of the opinion that unless there be a provision adopted, making this court permanent, the amendment moved by the gentleman from Jefferson might as well be adopted. Such courts will be found to be necessary in populous counties and large towns.

Mr. WALPOLE. In reply to the gentleman from Tippecanoe, I will say that this section was copied from a similar provision in the New York Constitution. They are a description of courts having a purely local jurisdiction.

Mr. PETTIT. This court has just as much jurisdiction within the limits of the county as the circuit court.

Mr. WALPOLE. Then I maintain it is not a local court, but has jurisdiction co-extensive with the limits of the State. I think, for the security of all concerned—not only the citizens of that county, but of other counties, and who may have suits there—this section should be retained, and in its present form. This was the view taken by the committee.

Mr. EDMONSTON. I have no wish to disturb any of these local courts. But it does seem to me to be very clear that the general provisions we have already passed in relation to this subject will be quite sufficient. If no other gentleman desires to offer any remarks, I will move that the section and amendment be laid upon the table.

The question being upon the motion of the gentleman from Dubois,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the section and amendment were laid upon the table.

Mr. HOWE offered an additional section providing that the salaries of Judges shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Mr. BORDEN. I think, sir, that I have seen it clearly indicated by the votes of this body for several days past, that they do not intend to fix the salaries of the Governor and other State officers. And those votes seem to indicate also that they intend to refuse to fix the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme and Circuit Courts. I am not disposed now to say anything in regard to this matter in addition to what I have already said, but I do trust that the section proposed by the gentleman from Lagrange (Mr. Howe) will prevail. Can it be possible, sir, that this Convention designs to adjourn and not re-instate this clause of the old Constitution? for I believe the amendment of the gentleman is in substance the same as the provision in the old Constitution.

I trust, sir, that this Convention is not prepared to make a retrograde movement in regard to the independence of the judiciary. According to the system which has now been agreed upon by the Convention the judiciary is dependent enough in all conscience upon the legislative department of the government. I suppose, sir, we will have the usual motion to lay the proposition on the table. But before it is laid upon the table, I trust the Convention will endeavor to reflect that it is a question of no ordinary importance. Let no member of this body suppose that he is not interested in this question. No one can tell what a day may bring forth. Every member has a reputation to protect; and it may be that his life may depend on an impartial judiciary. And, sir, the least that we can do in this matter is to sustain this proposition; and by so doing, at least say that after a judge has been elected to office, his salary shall not be taken from him, and he be thus compelled to resign. I do hope, sir, that the proposition will be sustained.

Mr. BASCOM proposed to amend by inserting the word "increased," so that the section would read "neither increased nor diminished."

Mr. HOWE. The section is copied from the old Constitution. The object is to save the judges from the danger of having their salaries interfered with; and so, to render them independent, I move that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The question upon laying the amendment on the table was put, and, upon a division—ayes 66, noes not counted—it was decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. BASCOM moved that the section be laid upon the table.

The question upon laying the section on the table was decided in the negative.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

Mr. SMITH of Scott moved to amend by inserting the following:

"That the members of the Legislature at its first session under this Constitution shall receive three dollars a day for their services, and three dollars for every twenty miles traveled in going to and returning from the seat of government."

The question being on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON moved that it be laid on the table.

The question being put, it was decided in the affirmative.

So the section was laid upon the table.

The question being on the adoption of the section,

It was decided in the affirmative.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. I have a small favor to ask of the Convention, and I am emboldened to make it because I am assured by many gentlemen that it will afford them pleasure to grant it. It will be remembered that the other day when the section in relation to the school fund was under consideration, it was determined that the trust fund should not be diverted, and at the same time an article was on the table which I desire now to have taken up. I will say that if the Constitution should go out to the world as it is at present, it will go out without the word "university" in it; and for the purpose of having the section alluded to, inserted in the Constitution, I now move to take from the table the third section of article 45.

The question being put, it was, on a division—ayes 45, noes 47—decided in the negative.

So the section was not taken from the table.

The section which provides that "The capital stock of all railroad, plank road, turnpike, and moneyed companies, upon which a profit may be derived, shall be subject to the like State and county tax, as the property of individuals,—the county tax shall be equal to the State tax,—which tax shall be assessed and collected as may be prescribed by law, all of which shall be paid in the State Treasury.

The amount of all county tax upon such capital stock shall be appropriated to the several counties of this State for the benefit of common schools"—was taken up on its second reading.

Mr. KENT moved that the section be laid upon the table.

Mr. WALPOLE desired that the gentleman would withdraw his motion in order that he might explain the effect of the section.

Mr. KENT declined to withdraw his motion.

Mr. WALPOLE demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to lay upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken there were yeas 57, nays 69, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Barbour, Beach, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bracken, Bright, Butler, Carr, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Foster, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Helm, Hitt, Hogin, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kilgore, Lockhart, Logan, Mather, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Smiley, Snook, Spann, Stevenson, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Trimby, Wiley, Zenor, and Mr. President—57.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Borden, Bowers, Bryant, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clements, Crumbacker, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helmer, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Jones, Kelso, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Moore, Mower, Nave, Nofsinger, Rariden, Ritchey, Robinson, Shoup, Sims, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Wunderlich, and Yocum—69.

So the section was not laid on the table.

Mr. WALPOLE. I am happy, sir, that a majority of the Convention have felt disposed to hear something in relation to this question before they make a final disposition of it. And I think the gentleman from Floyd had not the interests of his constituents in view when he made the motion to lay the section on the table.

My attention has been called to this question some three or four years since, at a time when I was a member of the Senate. I found the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad stock ranging somewhere between two and three millions of dollars, furnishing all the revenue that was derived from it by taxation at all, to the county of Jefferson, and consequently the money my constituents of the county of Hancock was transferred to a distant and remote county, thus increasing the burthen of taxation on our county beyond that which was borne by our neighbors of the county of Jefferson. It is time that the benefits to be derived from the taxation of the property of the citizens of each county, in all the various branches of our system of taxation should be equally distributed. Heretofore the benefit has gone to the county in which the principal office of the company, (whatever it may be) is located. My constituents are at this day subscribers to the amount of sixty thousand dollars; and that amount of capital is taxed for the benefit of another county. When you consider the amount that has been subscribed at other points and that it is transferred to the principal station of the company, you must see that the present system operates unjustly. I hold that the tax imposed on this kind of stock should be equal to State taxation, and that it should be paid into the treasury of the county in which such stock is owned. There are now nineteen railroad companies in Indiana, and there are twenty-seven representatives, representing those counties in which the offices of these companies are situated. The aggregate of the stock is about fifteen millions of dollars; and this is transferred from the places where it is owned, to nine or ten counties. The law of 1843 says, these stocks shall be taxed only where they yield a profit. Well, sir, should they not be taxed just as individual property is taxed—is there any reason they should be exempted from the same burthen that the property of the humblest citizen is subjected?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's time is up.

Mr. COOKERLY moved to amend, by striking out the section and inserting a provision to the effect that the capital stock in plank road companies, railroad companies, turnpike and monied corporations, shall be taxed in the several counties in the same manner as other property, said roads to be taxed in the counties through which they pass.

Mr. WATTS. We have a right, I believe, to perfect the section. I desire to amend the original section in such a manner that the stocks of these companies shall be made subject to the like county and State tax as all other property, in proportion to the amount owned by each stockholder. I move to amend the section, by striking from out of it the words "upon which a profit may be derived."

My object in moving this amendment, is to make the taxes fall equally upon the man whose property is in stocks, and the farmer whose property does not yield him a profit. I see no reason why these stocks, even if they do not yield a profit, should not be subject to taxation.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am willing that schools shall be supported by a tax, but it should be equally imposed upon all. And I am opposed to levying a tax in counties that have railroads, for the support of schools in counties that have no railroads. I own a little railroad stock; the gentleman from Hancock I suppose has none: yet he calls on me to tax my stock, for the benefit of schools!

The gentleman proposes to levy a tax in counties which have railroad stock, for the purpose of distributing it in counties in which there are no railroads. I do not think this is fair. The gentleman from Vigo I think is right in the view he takes of this matter.

Mr. KELSO. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Vigo would be correct if the stock owned in these railroads and plank roads were owned by citizens of the State; but, as is the case in the Madison and Indianapolis railroad, three-fourths of the stock is owned by persons living out of the State of Indiana. Now how is Johnson county to know when she receives her due share of the tax? But in the first place, how are you to value the road? For instance, at that place where it crosses the hill at Madison the cost must have been nearly as great as that of the rest of the road. Again, the construction of the road through the county of Jennings must have cost twice as much as through the county of Johnson. Such a tax, in my opinion, can never be levied; and that has been the argument used heretofore, for allowing Jefferson county to apply the whole tax to her benefit as a county tax. Now that certainly is unfair and unjust; and although it may seem hard, as the gentleman from Putnam says, to take the tax on his stock and put it into a general fund for education, I ask which is the more just: to take the county tax which he pays upon his railroad stock—and that should be made equal to the State tax, for the sake of having it equal everywhere and putting it into a general fund for education—or distributing it, in Vigo for instance, for county purposes? Which, I say, is the more just? Now I am free to admit that there is more in the section than there ought to be. I move that the article be referred to a select committee of three, with instructions to amend, in order to so appropriate the taxes.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. We have on our files here, a section which provides that all property shall be assessed and taxed at a uniform rate in its value. This will, of course, embrace railroad property, and it appears to me that such a rule is all we need insert in our Constitution. If the tax on the property of the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company has not been properly distributed, that is a matter entirely within the control of the Legislature, and may be remedied by that body. As the whole subject under consideration, in my opinion, properly belongs to legislation, I move its indefinite postponement.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. I think the article ought to be indefinitely postponed. We have already passed a section providing that all the property in the State shall be taxed.

A VOICE. No, we have not passed it yet.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. It is ordered to be engrossed, however. If the gentleman from Hancock have perceived those evils which he has described, when he was in the Legislature, he might have remedied them. That was the proper place; this is not. He proposes to provide for this taxation by constitutional provision. If the law has been heretofore unjust, why may there not be equal injustice in our constitutional provision? We ought not to run the risk of making a provision which possibly may operate unjustly.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, I have an amendment in my hand, which I intend to offer, to the original section.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman's amendment is not in order. The motion is to indefinitely postpone.

Mr. SHOUP. Such I am aware is the fact, and I hope the motion to indefinitely postpone will not prevail. There are some good qualities in this section, and it should be adopted. Let us, for one moment, look at this matter. We are told that Jefferson county is collecting an annual tax upon the stock of the Madison and Indianapolis railroad of twenty-five hundred dollars, for county purposes. When we reflect that this stock is held principally by men in New York, and that the corporate powers of the company have been granted by the people, or the State, I would ask what justice is there, or what right has Jefferson county to this tax more than other counties of this State? None, sir. The mere location of the office at Madison should certainly not give it such extraordinary advantages.

Mr. President, as I remarked, the powers or privileges granted to the various rail, plank, and turnpike roads, and monied corporations of the State, have been taken from the masses or given to them, by the people; and, sir, it is but just that this small tax should go to the benefit of the people, either for common schools or the payment of the public debt.

Mr. PETTIT. I am not satisfied with this section as it stands, and even as proposed to be amended. I think I shall feel compelled to vote against it. I am in favor of the section down to the word "individuals." It is as follows: "The capital stock of all railroad, plank and turnpike and monied companies, upon which a profit may be derived, shall be subject to the like State and county tax as the property of individuals," &c. I would like, however, once to be with my friend from Hancock and my friend from Dearborn, that whatever may be paid in the way of taxes, whether it be upon private property or not, shall be on a principle of equality.

Mr. WALPOLE. Agreed. Shake hands upon that.

Mr. PETTIT (offering his hand). Certainly; with great pleasure.

A VOICE. I am afraid it is an unholy union. [A laugh.]

Mr. PETTIT. The thing is, shall we equalize the State and county tax so far as regards the property of individuals? I hope that the more general provision of the article will pass, but the latter part I cannot go for. Now it strikes me that the Convention is laboring under a difficulty, and that the chairman on miscellaneous provisions has been laboring under a mistake as to the proper objects of taxation. It is not the stock, or shares owned in a joint stock company, railroad, or plank road, that ought to be taxed. When you talk of taxing stocks, whether they be United States stocks or State stocks or the stock of companies, they are no tangible thing that the sheriff can get hold of. This section ought to provide that the property of the road be taxed in the county in which it lies. You ought to tax the timber and the iron laid down on the road; it is so much property within the county, and should be taxed, whoever owns it, as well as a house or a barn.

A VOICE. That is correct.

Mr. PETTIT. Tax the miles of road, estimate its value within the county of Jefferson, the county of Jennings, Bartholomew, &c. That is the proper system. Then you will have the means by which your law officers may collect the revenue. You will have the means by which they will enforce the payment of the taxes, because in case of refusal to pay the tax they can take up the rails and sell them in the market. But if you undertake to tax stock, merely, you will never have any tangible means by which to compel the payment of the taxes. Sir, I hope the section will not be indefinitely postponed, but that it will be referred to a select committee and a section prepared in accordance with what I have suggested, levying a tax upon the value of the road—upon the tangible and not the intangible thing.

The question was taken on the motion to postpone indefinitely, and it was decided in the negative.

The question then recurring on the re-commitment of the section to a select committee of three,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the section was re-committed.

The following section was read a second time:

"The provisions contained in this Constitution requiring uniform laws regulating township business, shall not affect the laws now in force regulating the mode of transacting business in the several townships in the counties of Dearborn, Switzerland, Ohio, Wells, and Adams. But the General Assembly may, when deemed expedient, amend or repeal said laws."

The question being, Shall the section be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. MATHER moved to amend, by inserting "the counties of Elkhart and Lagrange."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON moved to add the "county of Allen."

The county of Allen was added.

Mr. MAY moved to insert the "county of Steuben,"

Which was agreed to.

Mr. PRATHER moved to add the "county of Jennings."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARR of Jackson moved to amend, by inserting the words "the county of Jackson."

The motion prevailed.

Mr. STEELE moved to introduce the words "the county of Wabash."

The motion was agreed to by consent.

Mr. STEVENSON. We have heard a great deal said about uniform laws. This looks so little like uniformity, that I move the whole article be laid upon the table.

The motion was, upon a division—ayes 62, noes 36—decided in the affirmative.

So the article was laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. PETTIT,

The Convention adjourned.

TUESDAY, FEB. 4th, 1851.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. —.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. OWEN stated that a report from the committee on revision would be ready to be laid upon the tables of delegates to-day. The sub-committee, he added, would complete their labors to-day, and the whole Constitution would be ready to be submitted to the committee. And he stated this in order that all members of that committee might be apprised that there would be a meeting in the Supreme Court Room this evening, and it was desirable that every one should attend.

Mr. O. further said that he desired to move to take from the table the section in relation to "the rights of married women," and he would preface his motion with few words.

We have been here together (continued Mr. O.) for nearly four months, and we ought by this time to know something of each other. And I appeal to my colleagues of the Convention whether I have ever shown myself to be a factious member? whether any gentleman has proposed a measure that I have not dealt fairly by? whether I have ever endeavored to load down a measure to which I have been opposed, with vexatious amendments? whether when any gentleman has asked a direct vote upon a measure, I have not aided him in obtaining it? Now, sir, I make a personal appeal to the Convention this morning, not as to how they shall vote upon the merits of the question, for every man ought to vote according to the dictates of his conscience, no consideration of personal favor ought to induce him to vote contrary to his judgment upon any question involving a principle, but in regard to a mere matter of courtesy, as, for instance, the granting to a member the privilege of having a direct vote upon a question in which he is interested; that is but an act of common courtesy from one man to another that every one can render, no matter whether he is in favor of, or opposed to the matter to be voted upon. Now I am about to move to take from the table article fifty-two; it is the article in regard to the property of married women.

[Cries of "no," "no," "no"].

Mr. OWEN. I am not going to ask a direct vote upon the article; there has been a vote already had upon it, and a majority voted against it, and to that vote I submit. I repeat that I am not going to ask another vote upon that article; but I am going to ask the Convention to suffer me to move a substitute for it, and upon that substitute I desire to have a direct vote by yeas and nays. If the Convention grant me this, I will be satisfied. If it be adopted, very well; if it be voted down, I shall not name the subject in the Convention again. I have shown the proposition to some of the warmest opponents of the original article, and they said they should go for it. I have found but one single individual of the Northern part of the State, who said he should go against it. The proposition that I intend to offer is in accordance with the motion that was made by the gentleman from Vanderburg, and is also in accordance with the one that was made by the gentleman from Elkhart. In fact it is not counter to any proposition that has been introduced from any quarter. It merely proposes to call the attention of the Legislature to the subject, leaving them to act on it as their good sense might dictate. It does not say how they shall act, but merely recommends action. I move, therefore, to take from the table the article to which I have referred, in order that I may offer this substitute, and obtain a direct vote upon it.

Upon the motion to take the article from the table,

Mr. WALPOLE demanded the yeas and nays.

They were ordered, and being taken were—yeas 83, nays 45—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Chapman, Chenowith, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Johnson of D., Johnson of O., Jones, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Maguire, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Steele, Tannehill, Thornton, Wiley, Yocum, and Mr. President—83.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Barbour, Beard, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Gootee, Haddon, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Huff, Logan, March, Mathis, May, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Niles, Nofsinger, Pettit, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Todd, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, and Wunderlich—45.

So the motion prevailed, and the section was accordingly taken up.

Mr. OWEN. I am aware that without the permission of the Convention, the restrictions which are pending in connection with this article cannot be withdrawn. I move, therefore, that the gentleman from Vanderburg and myself have leave to withdraw our instructions.

Leave was granted, and the instructions were accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. OWEN. I now move to recommit the article to a select committee of one, with instructions to strike out all and insert the following:

"Laws shall be passed for the security of the property of married women, of widows, and of orphans."

Mr. PETTIT. I want to have a hand in this matter: I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT. The previous question having been demanded, the question will be on seconding the demand.

Mr. WALPOLE. Did the gentleman from Posey call for the previous question?

The PRESIDENT. The previous question was demanded by the gentleman from Posey yesterday.

Mr. WALPOLE. I know he called it yesterday, and has made a speech to-day.

Mr. OWEN withdrew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HAMILTON renewed the demand for the previous question.

The demand was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on the motion of the gentleman from Posey to re-commit to a select committee of one with instructions.

Mr. WALPOLE. Now we will have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and being taken were—yeas 77, nays 53—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Ballingall, Bascom, Beach, Beeson, Berry, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bracken, Brookbank, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Cole, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Maguire, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Rariden, Read of Monroe, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Steele, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wiley, and Mr. President—77.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Barbour, Beard, Bowers, Bright, Butler, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Logan, March, Mathis, May, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Niles, Nofsinger, Pettit, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Todd, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Wunderlich, and Yocum—53.

So the article was re-committed with instructions.

Mr. OWEN. Will the President name the select committee?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Posey will be the select committee.

Reports from select committees being next in order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. PRESIDENT: The select committee, to which was referred the article in relation to the rights of married women, is prepared to report, in accordance with the instructions, the following section:

"Laws shall be passed for the security of the property of married women, of widows, and of orphans."

The question being "Shall the section pass?"

Mr. RARIDEN. I simply wish to define the position I occupy in regard to this matter. I am not apprehensive that such a provision as this will do a great deal of harm to the community; yet I cannot but say, that I look upon it as simply a question of debtor and creditor, and not as affecting the relation in regard to property as between husband and wife. If it have any effect in regard to property, as between husband and wife, it will be a deleterious effect.

Mr. PETTIT. Well, sir, this thing has been before us interminably: it has been before the Convention from the commencement of its session and is likely to be so until its close. There is such a thing as laudable perseverance, and there is such a thing as a troublesome pertinacity. It strikes me that this is likely to be of the latter class. This smacks a great deal of certain writings I have often seen, very species in their outline, but absolutely a nonentity so far as their substance is concerned, without a beginning, and without an ending. Now, what does the gentleman from Posey propose? Why, sir, after this matter had been disposed of, and when all others had been cut off from speaking by the previous question, the gentleman having first made a speech on a question that was not debatable, comes in with a new proposition; and what is it? That better provision shall be made by law, for married women, widows, and orphans. Now, sir, if you can take a man's estate and make better provision for married women, and better provision for widows, and better provision for orphans out of the whole of it, I give you leave to kick my (loud laughter) head for a foot ball.

Sir, it is an absurdity. Suppose, sir, you take the estate of my friend Watts here, and, in the first place, make a better provision for his wife; in the next place, after he dies, you make better provision for his widow; and strangest of all, when the widow is better provided for, the children shall be better provided for. (Much laughter.) Sir, the idea is irrational. It only shows to what extent a man will go who has an overweening desire to accomplish some innovation.

Sir, I feel sorry to make these remarks, but I am constrained to make them from the unremitting perseverance with which this matter is pressed upon the Convention. When the last vote was given I staid away: I was willing that the matter should be settled. But there is such a thing as a decent respect for the judgment and action of our fellow-men, which should prevent the constant repetition of propositions that have been acted upon adversely; and then to bring in a proposition which means nothing, which bears a contradiction on its very face! You cannot make half a dozen parties better off by making as many distributions as you please. It is very much like two boys swapping jack-knives: in the first place the wife has it all; and, when the husband dies, the widow cannot have more than all, especially if the children are to have it all too. (Much laughter.) Now, that is exactly the kind of proposition we have here introduced; that a better provision shall be made for married women, widows, and children.

A VOICE. That's not it at all.

Mr. PETTIT. Will the secretary read it again.

The secretary read the section.

Mr. PETTIT. Why, sir, that is an entirely new thing.

A MEMBER. You will have to make your speech over again.

Mr. PETTIT. It appears to me that that is not the same proposition as it was when in the form of instructions.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. It is precisely the same.

Mr. PETTIT. Well, then I was laboring under a misapprehension.

Cries of "You may as well take it all back."

Mr. PETTIT (after a pause) resumed his seat, much laughter and confusion prevailing.

Mr. MATHER. I believe it is in order to move to recommit the section?

A DELEGATE. Do you want to get a lick at it?

Mr. MARCH. I move that the article be re-committed to a select committee, with instructions to add the following:

"But no law shall be passed, in any manner impairing the unity and sacredness of the marriage relation."

Mr. WALPOLE. I rise to a question of order. It was certainly not in order to make the report to-day.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that the Convention, by its own action, granted leave.

Mr. PETTIT. Leave was not granted by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. WALPOLE. Was the question put at all?

The PRESIDENT. When the report was made, the Chair was calling upon select committees for reports.

Mr. MARCH renewed his motion to re-commit with the instruction above recited.

Mr. OWEN. Now, I have one thing to say to this Convention. I heard yesterday, that the gentleman from Tippecanoe, to whom I am under great obligations—I will say that in advance—for the honorable and high minded manner in which he once bore testimony to my character, when assailed—but I did hear yesterday, that the gentleman declared that if this sub-committee on revision went out of the House to attend to its duty, and failed to vote finally upon this matter of taxing the stock of corporations, he would oppose this section this morning.

Mr. PETTIT. The gentleman has been misinformed—that is all I have to say.

Mr. OWEN. I heard it from more than one individual. It is enough for me, however, that the gentleman says it is not the case.

Now, sir, what was the course taken by that gentleman in regard to the grand jury system? When he found that his favorite proposition for the abolition of the grand jury system could not prevail in the Convention, he then took another course, and referred the matter to the Legislature. Was not the gentleman's last proposition a compromise?

Mr. PETTIT. I will say to the gentleman, it was not.

Mr. OWEN. Then I take issue with the gentleman. His proposition is as much a compromise as is mine, and I say further, that it is in accordance with the proposition of the gentleman himself, when he declares that the property of married women should be secured against the debts of their husbands.

Now, all I have to say in regard to the amendment is, that I hope it will be voted down, so that a direct vote may be taken upon the adoption of the section. Let it be voted upon and then pass to other business.

Mr. BORDEN. I would inquire whether it would be in order to re-consider the vote on the grand jury question?

Mr. SHOUP demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was, on a division—yeas 63, nays 43—seconded.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on the motion to re-commit the section with the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Delaware,

The yeas and nays were demanded and they were ordered.

After a pause, on account of the confusion which prevailed in different parts of the Hall,

Mr. EDMONSTON said: I move that the order of business be suspended, in order to give gentlemen a chance to talk.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that it is not necessary to make a motion for that purpose; business is suspended [Laughter].

The yeas and nays were then taken, with the following result—yeas 53, nays 73:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Bowers, Brookbank, Butler, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Garvin, Gootee, Haddon, Hardin, Helmer, Hogen, Howe, Jones, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Pettit, Rariden, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Todd, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, and Wolfe—53.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bracken, Bryant, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chen-owith, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wiley, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—73.

So the motion to re-commit did not prevail.

The question being, "shall the section pass?"

The yeas and nays were taken, under the rule, and resulted thus—yeas 71, nays 61:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bracken, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Chenowith, Cole, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Read of Monroe, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Steele, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wiley, and Mr. President—71.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Haddon, Hardin, Helmer, Hogen, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Logan, March, Mathis, May, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Niles, Nofsinger, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Todd, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Wunderlich, and Yocum—61.

So the section passed and was referred to the committee on revision.

Mr. GREGG. When the section submitted by the gentleman from Owen, was under consideration yesterday, I had a desire to make some remarks, but was cut off by the previous question, though I made a personal appeal to the gentleman from Allen, to withdraw it. And when the vote was taken on the final passage of the section, I voted in the negative, though that was not my true position in regard to the question. I, therefore, move a re-consideration of that vote.

Mr. STEVENSON inquired if the privilege of changing his vote would not answer the gentleman's purpose?

Mr. GREGG. If it be in order to make some remarks, it is all I desire.

The PRESIDENT. It will not be in order; the vote was taken under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. GREGG. Well, then, I ask the unanimous consent of the Convention to change my vote.

The PRESIDENT. A majority can give the gentleman leave to change his vote.

The question being put, leave was granted.

Mr. MAGUIRE from the select committee, to whom was referred the section in relation to the Tippecanoe Battle Ground, reported the same back, amended so as to provide, also, that the Governor's Circle and the Military Ground at Indianapolis, shall never be sold.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I move to re-commit this article to a select committee of three or five gentleman, with instructions so to amend as that the Legislature shall be authorized to sell the Governor's Circle, and the lot known as the Parade Ground, No. 147, for the best price they can obtain, and appropriate the proceeds of such sale to the use of common schools, in the several counties in this State.

I make this motion from two considerations: first, they are yielding the State no profits, but, on the contrary, are an expense; and secondly, it should be our duty, in bringing about a system of free schools, which, in my opinion, will very soon become universal over the State, to bring all possible resources to bear, so that the masses who are already taxed heavily, shall have the smallest possible additional embarrassment.

I am aware of strong objections to this move, but, sir, we should not forget that it is a virtue to cultivate that very necessary ingredient, in a public servant—ECONOMY.

And, if by this means, we can add a few thousand dollars to our common school fund, the undertaking will be a laudable one.

If this amendment should be the means of educating and developing the otherwise hidden intellectual powers of but one man, the end will abundantly justify the means; for remember, sir, that knowledge is power—that a virtuous and an enlightened people can never be enslaved, nor is there any earthly power that can bind down the mighty energies of the human soul, nor rivet the chains of slavery on an intelligent people, who feel that they are free, and know that they are immortal.

I do hope, sir, that the article may be re-committed with the instructions which I now offer.

Mr. NILES. I hope, sir, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Putnam, will not be adopted. That gentleman has been consistent in his desire to increase and protect the school funds. But it would be a strange movement on the part of this Convention, after refusing to do anything with a view to save the school funds from utter loss, to order the sale of the public grounds in this city, for the sake of the little pittance which they would bring. We lose twice as much every year, on account of the bad system of managing the school funds, as all the public grounds in this city would sell for; but if they would bring an hundred thousand dollars, I should be only the more anxious to have them protected from sale by the Constitution. Public squares and parks in cities are hardly second in their humanizing influences to public schools. Who would be willing to fill up the public grounds of large cities with brick and mortar? Such a policy would be a greater injury to the present and succeeding generations than could be repaired by adding an hundred times their value to school funds.

Mr. WOLFE demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded.

The question being taken on the re-commitment of the section, with the instructions as proposed by the gentleman from Putnam,

It was not agreed to.

The question then being, "shall the section pass?"

On motion by Mr. COOKERLY,

The rule requiring the yeas and nays to be taken on the passage of a section, was suspended, and the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

Mr. HOLMAN asked leave to introduce a section.

The PRESIDENT remarked that it would require a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move a suspension of the rules, and hope that gentlemen will not object to suspend the rules in order that I may introduce the section. If it be wrong in itself, it can be voted down; but I think it will recommend itself to their favor.

The question on suspending the rule was, on a division—yeas 43, nays 17—decided in the affirmative.

So the rules were suspended.

The section was then read as follows:

"All acts of incorporation, created for municipal purposes, shall remain unaffected by the provisions of this Constitution, until such time as the General Assembly shall in its discretion, repeal the same."

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to say to the Convention, in regard to this subject, without detaining them unnecessarily, that the people of Indiana ask no injustice of this Convention—they ask no injustice at the hands of this body. The sense of justice on the part of this Convention, is alone appealed to in support of this section. It does not propose to allow the Legislature even to amend those acts of municipal incorporation, but only gives the power to repeal them. If the words "amend or repeal," were inserted in the section, the legislature might perpetuate them. This section will not allow the Legislature to amend them; but allows time to do one of two things; either to repeal the acts of municipal incorporation of towns or cities, or else to let them remain in force until such time as the public interest will not suffer by their repeal. I hope that gentlemen, from a sense of justice—a sense of propriety—will allow this section to be adopted.

The section was passed to a second reading.

STATE BOUNDARIES.

The PRESIDENT. The next thing in order is the following section, on its third reading:

SEC. 1. In order that the boundaries of the State of Indiana may be known and established, it is hereby ordained and declared that the State of Indiana is bounded on the east by the meridian line which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio; on the south by the Ohio river from the mouth of the Great Miami river to the mouth of the river Wabash; on the west by a line drawn along the middle of the Wabash from its mouth to a point where a due north line drawn from the town of Vincennes would last touch the north-west shore of said Wabash river, and from thence by a due north line until the same shall intersect an east and west line drawn through a point ten miles north of the southern extreme of lake Michigan; on the north by said east and west line until the same shall intersect the first mentioned meridian line which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

On motion by Mr. KENT,

The rule requiring the yeas and nays was suspended and the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

The following section was taken up on its third reading:

"The Constitution adopted in the year eighteen hundred and sixteen, is hereby declared to be superseded by this Constitution."

The question being, Shall the section pass?

On motion of Mr. READ of Clark,

The rule was suspended and the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

The section which provides that the compensation of judges shall not be diminished during the term for which they were elected, was read a third time.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

On motion by Mr. MORRISON of Marion,

The rule requiring the yeas and nays was suspended and the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

Mr. PRATHER moved a re-consideration of the vote on the adoption of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Dearborn (Mr. Watts) on Saturday, requiring the names of delegates to be affixed to the Constitution.

The motion was agreed to.

The question then recurring on the adoption of the resolution,

Mr. PRATHER moved to amend, by striking out all after the word "Resolved" and inserting to the effect that each of the enrolled copies of the amended Constitution heretofore ordered, be signed by the President and Secretary of the Convention.

Mr. WALPOLE moved to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Jennings, by substituting therefor "that the enrolled copies be signed by the members of this Convention, by way of attestation."

Many members (said Mr. W.) might not desire to sign the Constitution as approving of it.

The PRESIDENT remarked that the resolution did not require that members should sign it; they were under no obligation to do so unless they pleased.

Mr. WALPOLE. But I want it left entirely free, so that every man may sign it or not, as he pleases.

Mr. DOBSON. The proposition of the gentleman from Jennings I think should be modified in this way: "That the Constitution shall be attested by the Secretaries."

The question being upon the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Jennings, it was decided in the affirmative.

The question recurring on the adoption of the resolution as amended,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. KELSO. I believe it has not been my misfortune to be under the necessity of moving to re-consider any vote since the commencement of the session of the Convention. But there is one vote that I gave, under an entire misapprehension, in the early part of the session, and I would take it as a great favor if the Convention would consent that the vote upon that question be re-considered.

A VOICE. Ask leave to change your vote.

Mr. KELSO (without noticing the interruption). This is the last day upon which a motion of that kind can be made. My friend from Carroll moved an amendment to an article abolishing capital punishment, and a motion was made to lay it on the table, which I did not observe. I thought I was voting for the adoption of the amendment, and accordingly voted in the affirmative. I now ask that that vote may be re-considered, and the yeas and nays taken either upon laying the amendment on the table or on its adoption; that is all I ask.

A VOICE. Oh! Colonel, change your vote.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. I move that the gentleman have leave to change his vote.

Mr. KELSO. If gentlemen do not feel disposed to have the vote taken over again they can vote against the motion to re-consider, but it is my privilege to make that motion as it is theirs to refuse to re-consider.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington renewed his motion to allow the gentleman to change his vote.

Mr. KELSO. I will not accept it.

The PRESIDENT. That part of the journal which contains the vote referred to by the gentleman, the Secretary informs the Chair, has been sent to the printer.

Mr. KELSO. I suppose it is not necessary for the Secretary to refer to it expressly; I believe I can almost state the proposition verbatim. When the ninth section of article twenty was under consideration, Captain Milroy of Carroll offered an amendment in relation to the abolition of capital punishment; that amendment was laid upon the table. My motion is to re-consider that vote.

The question being put upon the motion to re-consider,

It was not agreed to.

Mr. DOBSON. I believe this is the last day for motions of this description, and as I am not a pugnacious or stubborn man, I rise to ask to have my name taken from a protest that I signed heretofore, in relation to certain action on the part of the Convention. It is the protest that was drawn up by the gentleman from Hancock to which I refer. I ask leave to have my name taken off.

Leave was granted.

Mr. BORDEN (addressing the Chair). Is there any business before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. There is none.

Mr. BORDEN. Then, sir, as this is probably the last day on which an opportunity will be offered for the purpose, I desire to ask of the Convention to suspend the rules, in order to enable me to introduce a resolution which I hold in my hand. The resolution is as follows:

"Resolved, That the committee on revision, phraseology, and arrangement, be instructed to insert in the fifth line of number thirty-four, after the word "provide," these words: "as far as the same may be found practicable and expedient."

Sir, (continued Mr. B.,) it will be recollected that at the time the section was passed which provides for the appointment of commissioners to reform the practice of our courts and to revise the Statutes of the State, much opposition was made on the part of some gentlemen of the bar to that portion of the section which makes it imperative on the commissioners to abolish all distinction between actions, and also all distinction between proceedings at law, and in equity. Some of those gentlemen are men for whose opinions I have always entertained the highest respect; and although, sir, I do not agree in opinion with them, yet I was then willing to leave the question, whether the distinction between actions, and also the distinction between proceedings at law and in chancery should be abolished, either for the commissioners or the Legislature to determine. I wish it, however, to be distinctly understood, that I am not willing to leave the question of abolishing the law fictions and reforming the practice and proceedings of our courts open to the Legislature; on the contrary, so far as these are concerned, I still insist that it should be made imperative. It should be recollected, however, sir, that we are forming a Constitution that has yet to be submitted to the people for adoption, and I am convinced that if the Convention will suspend the rules and adopt the resolution I propose, it will obtain for the new Constitution some supporters who would otherwise feel constrained to vote against it.

Since the passage of this section I have reflected on the subject much, and I am convinced on mature reflection, that the best plan will be to leave this question, at least so far as abolishing the distinction between law and chancery proceedings is concerned, with the Legislature. And then, sir, if it should turn out, on trial, that the system will not work well, the Legislature will have it in their power very easily to alter it and to restore the old system of chancery practice. On the other hand, if it be made imperative, by a provision in the Constitution, it must stand whether it be found to work well or not. I trust, therefore, the rules will be suspended and the resolution adopted.

The question being on suspending the order of business,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered; and, being taken, there were—yeas 40, nays 76—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Blythe, Borden, Brookbank, Bryant, Carter, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Colfax, Davis of Madison, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Duzan, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gregg, Harbolt, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Kelso, Kilgore, Maguire, May, Miller of Fulton, Nave, Niles, Rariden, Read of Clark, Robinson, Smith of Ripley, Stevenson, Walpole, Wunderlich, and Mr. President—40.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Bourne, Bowers, Butler, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Coats, Cole, Cookerly, Crawford, Crumbacker, Davis of Parke, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Helmer, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Logan, March, Mathis, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Pepper of Ohio, Pettit, Prather, Schoonover, Shannon, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Scott, Steele, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimble, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Zenor—76.

So the order of business was not suspended.

Mr. GORDON. I rise to ask leave to change a vote I gave this morning. I voted "aye" on the motion of the gentleman from Posey to take from the table the section in relation to the rights of married women. I wish to vote "no."

Leave was granted.

Mr. Pepper of Ohio moved that the order of business be suspended, in order to enable him to introduce a resolution declaring that after this day it shall not be in order to move to take from the table any section that has, by a vote of the Convention, been laid upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. THORNTON moved to take from the table the section in relation the Attorney General, &c. He stated that the section had been laid upon the table on his motion, in order that time might be afforded to obtain certain information which had been called for by a resolution of the Convention; that information had been obtained, and he now moved to take up the section from the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe, The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mr. BASCOM. On looking over the printed articles that have been laid upon our tables, I find that there is one section missing, which is very important. I have not the section here, but the purport of it is, that bills shall contain but one subject, which shall be expressed in the title.

Mr. GORDON moved to re-consider the vote referring the section to the committee on the legislative department.

Mr. GIBSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. GIBSON moved to lay the section on the table.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and ordered, and, being taken, resulted as follows :

YEAS.—Messrs. Blythe, Bourne, Bright, Carr, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Davis of Madison, Dick, Dunn of Jefferson, Gibson, Gootee, Hitt, Holman, Howe, Logan, Morrison of Marion, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Spann, Tannehill, and Wiley—22.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Berry, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Chenowith, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbott, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Nave, Pepper of Ohio, Prather, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Todd, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—99.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

Mr. BRIGHT. An amendment was offered to this section by the gentleman from Jefferson, (Mr. Dunn,) which I think would not be productive of any benefit. The section itself is one which I think ought to be adopted. I move, therefore, to lay the amendment upon the table. The section was read, as follows:

"SEC. 16. Bills may originate in either House, but may be altered, amended, or rejected in the other; except that bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives."

The pending amendment to the section was to the effect that every bill should embrace but one subject only, which should be expressed in the title: Provided, that if any subject should be embraced in the bill which was not expressed in the title, such law should only be void in regard to so much of it as was not thus expressed.

Mr. DOBSON moved to amend the amendment by striking out the word "expressed" and substituting the word "indicated."

Mr. WALPOLE was of opinion that the language of the section was right as it stood, and that this was a matter which should be left entirely to the Legislature; that the Legislature should decide what the law was, and not leave it to be "indicated" by judges on the bench. If it were thus left, one man would "indicate" it one way and another another; and they might have as many "indications" of the law as there were judicial tribunals where the law was to be enforced.

Mr. SPANN thought there was but little difference between the two expressions; they were both of them indefinite and equivocal, and such as, in his opinion, could never be effectually carried out. And, indeed, such was the character of the whole article. People would differ about the title, differ about every little thing contained in a bill or law; and if this provision were adopted the result of it would be endless and vexatious litigation. The whole matter appeared to him to be entirely demagogical, and he trusted that neither the section nor the amendment would be incorporated in the Constitution. Gentlemen might just as well say that every man should agree upon a given form of words, or that every man should agree as to what was the state of public sentiment, or what the proper notions to entertain upon subjects of religion, as to say that every bill should be clearly expressed or indicated by its title. The one notion was, to his mind, as absurd as the other. He hoped the whole matter would be summarily disposed of.

Mr. KELSO. It seems to me that if we are going to pass this section, it would be better without the amendment of the gentleman from Owen (Mr. Dobson). I have my serious doubts whether it is not crippling the Legislature to pass it at all; but if gentlemen want the thing more definite than it is now, it appears to me that the only way to effect it is to re-write the whole bill in the title. That is the strongest language you can use, and there is some question whether the Legislature might not put that construction upon the language of the section as it now stands, and thus make the title of every bill a duplicate of the bill itself. At any rate I think the section is better without the amendment of the gentleman from Owen.

Mr. DOBSON. I offered the amendment with the view of obviating the very difficulties suggested by the gentleman from Switzerland, and others before him. The whole object of the provision is to inform the members of the General Assembly what a bill contains, so that its purpose may be plainly indicated by its title. All that we want with the title of a bill is, that the Legislature may understand what its object is, and that it may be readily hunted up by the people at home. I think the word I have suggested is the better word, and would obviate all difficulties.

Mr. KELSO. Now, sir, that is the very objection which I take to the section. We have been legislating for the State, in years gone by, by merely reading bills by their title, and many frauds have thus been committed upon the people. And as we have now provided that every bill shall be read entirely through on three separate days, and that on the third reading, under no circumstances, shall the reading be dispensed with, we cannot want any further provision of the kind or any further security against bills being improperly mixed up. I am satisfied that there is already sufficient in the Constitution to protect the people from unjust legislation, and if those provisions are not amply sufficient to protect the people against legislative imposition, then to pass the section would only make the matter worse. There is no necessity that I can see for writing a whole bill twice over, which, beyond all question, might be the effect of the adoption of this section. I move to strike out so much of the section as requires the contents of a bill to be expressed in its title.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would inform the gentleman from Switzerland that there is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

Mr. PETTIT. I am satisfied, Mr. President, that it is not necessary to incorporate any portion of this section in our Constitution. I shall not undertake the labor again of showing the impropriety of any provision requiring that the substance of a bill should be expressed in its title. When this subject was under consideration on a former occasion, I said that it would be productive of more litigation, if adopted, than all the other provisions of the Constitution put together. You say that a law shall only contain one subject, and that that subject shall be expressed in its title. Now what will be the result? The Legislature will go on and pass laws over and over which contain more than one subject, and which subjects are not expressed in the title; and if an injury is done, and a man goes into one of your courts asking for redress, he is met by his opponent with the taunt, "Oh, you have no remedy; the law is unconstitutional, because it embraces more than one subject, and the subjects are not expressed in the title!" Who does not see the injustice and absurdity of such a plea? Besides, sir, you will constantly have your courts construing two questions; first, as to whether a bill contains two subjects, and secondly, whether these subjects are expressed in the title of the bill. And in either case they will declare the whole law to be unconstitutional; and thus all rights afforded by such a law, no matter how great they may be, must fall to the ground, because the Legislature, either by accident or from inability to do so, have not complied with this absurd provision of your Constitution.

Now, as to the origin of bills, I ask gentlemen what is the difference between bills originating in the Senate and in the House of Representatives? Not one single bit. The Senator is as directly the representative of the people as the Representative himself. They may be brothers; they may come from the same county, from the same house, from the same log cabin. Sir, this is a principle which we have derived from the British Constitution. In that country it was well enough, but there is no necessity for it here. Who will say that our Senate is to be compared to the British House of Lords, temporal and spiritual? And unless there be some similarity there is no need for such a provision. In England it was well enough, because the Lords were an estate of themselves, and had no sympathies in common with the people; and as the revenues were to come from the masses, they decided that those who represented their condition in life should hold the purse strings. But that is not the case here. Our Senators and Representatives are all of the same kind of people. In England the Lord has no constituency at all. He is born a ruler. Not so with the House of Commons; they have to look to the people from whom the money has to be raised.

Now let us not travel right along, step by step, without meaning, following in the wake of Great Britain. What they have that is good I am willing we should copy; but for what reason should we adopt their provisions and institutions which are not at all adapted to the nature of our government? Do you suppose that if England were revolutionized, and they should establish a government like ours, they would elect Senators from the masses of the people? Would they put into their Constitution any such absurdity as this? No, sir; they would say, the Senator is as responsible to us as the Representative, and will not be any more likely to oppress us with taxation than he would be. Sir, they never would disgrace themselves by adhering to this principle where the reason for it did not exist.

Sir, I hope the section will be indefinitely postponed. There is no reason for its passage, and I will move its indefinite postponement.

Mr. WALPOLE. I will not consent to the indefinite postponement of the section. A portion of it, I will readily admit, should be laid upon the table; but to part with that principle of government which makes us immediately responsible to our constituents, I will never consent to. Your Senators are elected for four years and your Representatives for only two; and when you give to the Senator power to present a tax bill, who is four years remote from the people, and to press before the House of Representatives his notions about taxation, it would be arbitrary, as every form of government has always conferred upon the immediate representatives of the people the power to originate revenue measures. There is not a government in the United States that has adopted a contrary principle. It is right and proper that all revenue measures should originate with the representatives of the people, and that the influence of the Senate should not be brought to bear upon the Representatives in this respect. I hope that the section will not be indefinitely postponed, but that it may be amended by striking out what is objectionable.

Mr. SPANN. Will it be in order to move to amend the section before the question is taken on the indefinite postponement?

The PRESIDENT. No, sir.

Mr. PETTIT. I will withdraw the motion to indefinitely postpone if the gentleman wishes to amend the section.

The motion to postpone the section indefinitely was withdrawn.

Mr. SPANN. There is one principle in the section which I think should be preserved. I do not believe that the Senate is a body in which revenue bills ought to originate, but that all bills imposing taxes should originate with the immediate representatives of the people. If it will be in order I will move to amend by striking out all after the word "representatives."

The PRESIDENT. There is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

Mr. DOBSON. I will withdraw my amendment. I have no disposition to prolong debate on the matter.

The amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. SPANN. I now move to amend by striking out all after the word "representatives."

Mr. STEVENSON. If that motion prevails it will strike out a principle which I look upon as being of the greatest importance—one which has been regarded of so much importance as to be incorporated in the new Constitutions of several of the States. Now, I have seen the power that a few individuals have in passing bills that are worthless and injurious, by tacking them upon other bills, even upon revenue bills. This is an evil which should be remedied. We are here to reform it—and ought to reform it. Gentlemen say that this provision will result in injury. For my part, I cannot see what injury is likely to result from it. In my mind they are all imaginary.

Mr. BRACKEN. It appears to me that this matter has been debated long enough and I will therefore, call the previous question.

The call for the previous question was sustained, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question was first taken on the amendment of Mr. Spann, to strike out all after the word "representatives."

The yeas and nays were demanded and ordered, and being taken, they resulted as follows.

YEAS.—Messrs. Beach, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Carr, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Cookerly, Davis of M., Davis of V., Dunn of Jeff., Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Haddon, Helmer, Hovey, Howe, Jones, Kelso, Maguire, McLean, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Spann, Tannehill, Thornton, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, and Zenor—42.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beard, Beeson, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Chenoweth, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Dick, Dobson, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Garvin, Hall, Hamilton, Harbott, Hawkins, Helm, Hitt, Hogin, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Murray, Niles, Pepper of Ohio, Prather, Read of Clark, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Thomas, Todd, Trimby, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—78.

So the motion to strike out did not prevail.

The question then recurred on ordering the section to be engrossed for a third reading, and the yeas and nays being demanded and ordered, they were taken, with the following result:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Bascom, Beeson, Bowers, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Chenowith, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helm, Hitt, Hogin, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Mowrer, Prather, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Shannon, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Todd, Trimby, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—78.

NAYS.—Messrs. Beach, Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Bright, Carr, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Elliott, Fisher, Gregg, Helmer, Hovey, Howe, Jones, Kelso, Maguire, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Spann, Thornton, Walpole, and Watts—31.

So the section as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

INCREASING A COMMITTEE.

Mr. KELSO. There was referred to a select committee of three, report No. 65, on a subject of taking corporation stock, and no two of the three can agree as to making a report. [Laughter.] I ask that the committee may be increased.

Mr. WALPOLE moved that the gentleman from Jefferson (Mr. Dunn) be discharged from further service on the committee.

Mr. MORRISON of Marion, said that that was rather a discourtesy to the gentleman from Jefferson, and he would move that the whole committee be discharged and another one appointed.

Mr. WALPOLE accepted the proposition as a substitute for his.

Mr. WATTS hoped the committee would not be discharged, but that one or two individuals friendly to the proposition would be added to the committee. It was certainly treating the committee unfavorably to discharge them without their having had an opportunity to make a report.

Mr. WALPOLE. I would suggest that Mr. Cookerly and Mr. Pettit be added to the committee.

Mr. WATTS. I will accept that as an amendment to my proposition.

Mr. COOKERLY. I will not serve upon the committee. You do not need to name me.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

Mr. GREGG. I believe that a great deal of dissatisfaction prevails in regard to the section which was passed this morning in relation to the rights of married women. I move to reconsider the vote taken this morning, on the passage of the section.

The motion to re-consider was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley, moved a call of the House.

Mr. KENT demanded the yeas and nays on the call, and they were ordered.

Mr. KELSO (amid considerable confusion.) I rise to a point of order, Mr. President. I would like to know what became of the motion in relation to the select committee. There certainly was no action upon it?

The noise continuing, the yeas and nays were taken on the motion for a call of the Convention, and they resulted as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Beach, Berry, Borden, Bracken, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gordon, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Howe, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Mathis, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Pepper of Ohio, Prather, Robinson, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Steele, Trimby, and Wolfe—61.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beeson, Blythe, Bourne, Bowers, Bright, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Graham of Miami, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Hovey, Huff, Kelso, Logan, Maguire, March, May, Milligan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Niles, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Spann, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—55.

So the motion for a call was decided in the affirmative.

The roll having been called,

Mr. GREGG moved to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREGG. I now move to postpone the further consideration of the subject till to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the motion to reconsider, is under the operation of the previous question, and in that case the motion to postpone will not be in order.

Mr. GREGG. Then a motion to adjourn will be in order.

The PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. GREGG. I move then that the Convention adjourn.

A division being called for, there were—yeas 55, nays 47.

So the Convention adjourned.

~~~~~
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1851

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. CRARY.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The PRESIDENT said he had been requested to call the attention of the Convention to a resolution which had been adopted on a former day, in relation to the binding of the Journal. The resolution did not specify by whom it was to be done.

Mr. DOBSON remarked that there was another omission in the resolution. It had been provided that each member should be furnished with a copy of the debates, but the manner of their distribution had not been pointed out. There would be two volumes, one of which could be obtained before the day of adjournment. I think we ought to make some provisions for their distribution.

Mr. KELSO. They may be distributed when the laws are to be distributed.

The PRESIDENT. The object of making the inquiry was to learn whose duty it should be to see to getting them bound.

Mr. GORDON. I have a resolution drawn up that I think will remedy the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Owen. It is, that the Secretary of State be requested to distribute the debates at the same time that the laws are distributed.

The PRESIDENT. It will require a suspension of the rules to enable the gentleman to introduce his resolution. The only object at present is to ascertain whose duty it shall be to see to getting them bound.

Mr. GORDON. I give notice then, that I will offer the resolution on some other day.

The PRESIDENT. It is not necessary that the gentleman should give notice.

At the suggestion of several members, it was directed by unanimous consent that the Secretary should superintend the binding.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

The PRESIDENT. The first thing in order is the motion to re-consider the vote upon the passage of the section in relation to the rights of married women.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to make an explanation in regard to a point of veracity. I understand, sir, it has been industriously circulated this morning, that there was some unfairness in my action yesterday, in regard to the proposition which I offered as a substitute for the original section relative to woman's rights, inasmuch as I had shown to several delegates some days previously, a resolution in which the words "better security," were embodied, and that when the instructions were offered, the word "better" was omitted. And, sir, it has been intimated that I desired to obtain the passage of the section in an under hand way without its containing that word, while delegates believed it was still retained. Now, I ask the gentleman from Rush (Mr. Bracken) who is known to be an opponent of my proposition, and who made a speech against it, to say whether he did not come to my seat yesterday and tell me that he could not possibly vote for it with that word in it—that it made the proposition too strong—but that if I struck it out, he and some others would vote for it. So far as I was concerned, I would not have taken the trouble to cross the room for the sake of a choice whether the word should be in the section or out of it. But I struck the word out to satisfy the gentleman, and for no other reason whatever. All that I wish on this occasion is to exonerate myself from the imputation of having acted unfairly.

Mr. BRACKEN. The statement of the gentleman from Posey, is correct, so far as my action in regard to this matter is concerned. I requested the gentleman to strike out the word, and he complied with my request.

The question being on re-considering the vote on the passage of the section,

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken, and there were—yeas 65, nays 61:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Garvin, Goo-tee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Jones, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, Miller of Fulton, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Spann, Stevenson, Tagne, Todd, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, and Zenor—65.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Blythe, Borden, Bracken, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Chenoweth, Cole, Cookerly, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kilgore, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Newman, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Prather, Read of Monroe, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Smith of

Scott, Steele, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wiley, and Mr. President—61.

So the vote was re-considered.

The question being, "shall the section pass?"

Mr. SHERROD moved that the Convention adjourn.

Mr. OWEN demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered and being taken, were—yeas 3, nays 116—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Frisbie, McLean, and Murray—3.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Berry, Borden, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenoweth, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Garvin, Gibson, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Helm, Helmer, Hitt, Hogin, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, Logan, Maguire, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McFarland, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Nave, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Trimble, Walpole, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Zenor, and Mr. President—116.

So the Convention refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the passage of the section,

The yeas and nays were taken under the rule, and resulted as follows—yeas 63, nays 68:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Bascom, Beeson, Berry, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Chenoweth, Cole, Cookerly, Crumbacker, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Foster, Frisbie, Gibson, Graham of Miami, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Hovey, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kilgore, Kinley, McClelland, McFarland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Mowrer, Murray, Owen, Pepper of Ohio, Read of Monroe, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Steele, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Wiley, and Mr. President—63.

NAYS.—Messrs. Badger, Ballingall, Barbour, Beach, Beard, Bowers, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Carter, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Coats, Colfax, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Gregg, Haddon, Hardin, Helm, Helmer, Hogin, Howe, Huff, Jones, Logan, Maguire, March, Mather, Mathis, May, Morgan, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Robinson, Schoonover, Shannon, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Todd, Trimble, Wallace, Walpole, Watts, Wolfe, Wunderlich, and Zenor—68.

So the section was not adopted.

Mr. SHOUP moved to suspend the rules, in order to enable him to introduce a resolution to the effect that the Secretary be directed to prepare suitable sheets of parchment upon which each member might sign the Constitution in the order in which their names were called.

The rules were suspended.

Mr. KELSO moved to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "Constitution," the words "by way of attestation."

A MEMBER. There is the same thing in a resolution which was passed yesterday.

The amendment was on a division, yeas 48, nays 70—rejected.

The resolution was then adopted.

INCREASE OF A COMMITTEE.

On motion by Mr. KELSO,

The gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit) and the gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole) were added to the select committee to whom was referred the article relative to taxing corporate stock.

Mr. PRATHER moved that the rules be suspended in order to enable him to introduce a resolution tendering the thanks of the Convention to the Hon. GEORGE W. CARR, for the efficient and impartial manner in which he had discharged the duties of the President of the Convention.

The rules were suspended by unanimous consent.

Mr. PETTIT. I shall not detain the Convention further than to say that no resolution has been offered since our meeting that I would vote for with more cordiality and good will than for this.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Committees were then called upon for

REPORTS.

Mr. OWEN from the committee on revision made a report setting forth certain alterations in phraseology that had been made by that committee.

The report was concurred in.

THANKS.

On motion by Mr. BASCOM, the rules were suspended and a resolution of thanks to the Secretary and Assistant Secretaries for the faithful discharge of their duties, was adopted.

On motion by Mr. COOKERLY, the thanks of the Convention were tendered to the Clergy of Indianapolis for their kind offices in attending each morning, and opening the Convention with prayer.

Several resolutions of a similar character were adopted.

After which the gentleman from Switzerland (Mr. KELSO) offered the following resolution, which was NOT adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention be tendered to the members thereof, some for their able lucid and instructive speeches, and others for their consummate impudence, and others for being quiet and doing nothing at all."

Mr. OWEN from the committee on revision made another report,

The report having been read,

The question was on concurrence,

Mr. MILLER of Gibson suggested that there was one point which required a slight alteration. The article now reported from the committee on revision contained the provision for biennial sessions, and that the first session of the Legislature should be held in 1852. But there had been no provision making the election of Governor conform in point of time with the meeting of the Legislature; so that their would be a difficulty in regard to his inauguration.

Mr. OWEN. The attention of the committee was called to that fact but, they did not consider themselves at liberty to make any change. They supposed it likely that some provision would be reported by the committee on the schedule in reference to it.

Mr. WALPOLE stated that it was in the contemplation of the committee on miscellaneous provisions to report a section in reference to this matter.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. Then in order that we may have that report made before we act on this matter, I move that the report of the committee on revision be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT. A motion to lay on the table will carry the whole report.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. It was my intention that the whole should be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

So the report was laid on the table.

BILLS.

The section providing that bills may originate in either House except revenue bills, and shall embrace but one subject to be expressed in the title, &c., was read a third time.

The question being, Shall the section pass?

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson moved that the rule requiring the yeas and nays to be taken on the passage of a section, be suspended.

The Convention refused to suspend the rule.

The yeas and nays were then taken with the following result—yeas 93, nays 34:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Anthony, Badger, Bailingall, Bascom, Beach, Beard, Beeson, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Brookbank, Bryant, Butler, Carter, Chenowith, Coats, Cole, Colfax, Cookerly, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dick, Dobson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Foster, Frisbie, Garvin, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Haddon, Hall, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helm, Hitt, Hogin, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kendall of Wabash, Kendall of White, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Clinton, Miller of Fulton, Milligan, Milroy, Mowrer, Murray, Nofsinger, Pepper of Ohio, Prather, Read of Clark, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Sims, Smiley, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Steele, Stevenson, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Todd, Trimble, Wallace, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Zenor, and Mr. President—93.

NAYS.—Messrs. Berry, Blythe, Bourne, Carr, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Clements, Davis of Madison, Dunn of Jefferson, Elliott, Gibson, Gregg, Helmer, Holman, Hovey, Howe, Kelso, Kilgore, Maguire, Mather, Miller of Gibson, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Robinson, Watts, and Wiley—34.

So the section passed, and was referred to the committee on revision, &c.

The section reported from the committee on miscellaneous provisions, fixing the time for submitting the new Constitution to a vote of the people, was taken up on its third reading.

Mr. PETTIT. If the Convention will indulge me, I should be glad to make a very few remarks in relation to this matter. I am inclined to think that we had better not do this. In fact, to use a common phrase, "we had better let it alone." We were sent here, sir, for a specific purpose; we were brought together by a law enacted by the Legislature; we are acting under the authority of that law, and it provides that we shall deposit the journal of our proceedings, together with a draft of the Constitution we may form, in the office of Secretary of State. And the act provides further, that the Legislature shall pass the necessary laws for the submission of the Constitution to the people.

I believe, sir, that we had better confine ourselves to our legitimate business. It may be said by some gentlemen that the Legislature will not attend to this matter. Sir, let us not distrust our fellow-citizens. Let us do our own duty, and be not apprehensive that others will fail to do theirs. It will be their solemn—their bounden duty to submit the Constitution to the people at such time as they may deem proper.

Mr. READ of Clark. I would inquire what would be our situation should they repeal that portion of the law of last winter? And, sir, there is a bill to that effect now ordered to be engrossed in the Senate.

Mr. PETTIT. I do not think they will do any such thing. Gentlemen may as well ask me whether the heavens will not fall. It is not to be supposed that men who are sent up here by a common constituency, and who have taken an oath to discharge their duty faithfully, will so far forget what is due to that constituency as to allow any temporary and ill-founded prejudice which may have arisen in their minds towards each other, to lead them into an abandonment of their duty. I am unwilling to admit such a supposition for a moment. I doubt not that they will properly, and in good faith, submit our work; but whether they do or not, is a matter for which they alone will be responsible. If they fail to do it, the fault will be theirs and not ours. We shall have performed the work for which we were sent here, without transgressing the law in any manner. I think we had better complete our work, pass it over to their hands, and let them discharge their duty.

Cries of "Consent. That is right."

Mr. DOBSON. If no gentleman wishes to make further remarks, I will move that the section be laid upon the table.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. Will the gentleman withdraw his motion for a moment?

Mr. DOBSON. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. I remark, in reply to the gentleman from Tippecanoe, that as I understand the position of this matter, it is the intention of the Legislature to repeal that part of the law, under the supposition that the Convention itself will make provision for submitting the Constitution to the people.

Mr. PETTIT. I am told by a gentleman who has just been across the way to the State House, that the Legislature will do no such thing.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley remarked that, in his opinion it was more appropriate the Convention should settle this question than that it should be left to the Legislature.

Mr. FOSTER said it appeared to him that the Convention ought to fix the time when the Constitution was to be submitted to the people, and in doing so they would be only acting in accordance with their duty. I do not recollect a solitary instance (said Mr. F.) in which any State convention has failed to designate the time when the constitution formed by such convention should be submitted to the people. I do not think it will be a work of supererogation on our part to follow the example. Whether the Legislature repeal the law or not, I consider it is our bounden duty to fix the time when the new Constitution shall be submitted to the people. For my own part, I do not know a better time than the first Monday in June. I hope the section will be adopted.

Mr. PETTIT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Monroe one question before he concludes.

Suppose we say that it shall be the duty of all inspectors of elections to hold an election on the first Monday in June, will that be law? Would they be subject to any penalty for disobeying our injunction? as they would be if they were to disobey an act passed by the law-making power.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is entirely correct as to that, but it is for the Convention to fix the time for the submission of the Constitution, leaving it to the Legislature to enact the law necessary to carry out the intention of the Convention, and to regulate the necessary details as to the manner in which the instrument shall be submitted.

Mr. DOBSON. I do not believe that we ought to adopt this section at this time. What we ought to do is to place the Constitution in the hands of the Secretary of State, and go home then. I move that the section be laid on the table.

The question being put upon the motion of the gentleman from Owen,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the section was laid on the table.

Article sixty-nine, which relates to the subject of taxation, was taken up on its second reading.

Mr. PEPPER of Ohio proposed to amend, by providing for the establishment of a central board of equalization.

Mr. PEPPER remarked that he thought it was a matter of very great importance, that there should be an equal and uniform mode of taxation, and he did not think there was any possibility of arriving at such equitable and uniform mode, by any other process than that of having a central board of equalization. The counties of the State were not all governed by the same rules in regard to the valuation of property. He hoped the Convention would see the importance of adopting a provision of this kind.

Mr. DAVIS of Parke moved that the amendment be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The section was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

On motion by Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe, the rules were suspended and the section was passed, and referred to the committee on revision.

The section which provides that all acts of incorporation granted for municipal purposes shall remain in force until repealed by the Legislature, was taken up on its second reading.

On motion,

The rules were suspended, and the section was read a second and third time and passed, and was referred to the committee on revision.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Convention a communication from the Marshal of the State, which was read.

On motion by Mr. MILROY, the rules were suspended and a resolution was adopted tendering the thanks of the Convention to the Hon. S. Meredith, Marshal of the State.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. I suppose that the Convention should take some action in regard to this communication. I should be inclined to move that it be printed, but for the reason that I suppose we would not be able to obtain the printed copies before our adjournment. But as it contains information which it is highly necessary the people should possess, I move that it be spread upon the journal of the Convention.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The Convention has got through with all the business on the orders of the day.

On motion by Mr. MILROY,

The rules were suspended and a resolution was adopted directing the Secretary to have the bill of rights enrolled.

Mr. BRYANT moved to take from the table the additional section, offered on Saturday last by the gentleman from Laporte (Mr. Niles), in relation to the consolidation of the school funds.

A VOICE. It has been rejected a dozen times.

The question was put on the motion to take up the section,

And it was decided in the negative.

On motion by Mr. SMITH of Ripley,

The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mr. PETTIT said, he believed the report made by the committee of revision this morning had been temporarily laid upon the table. He would now move that it be taken up.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT then moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson said, that before concurring in the report, there were some slight alterations that ought to be made. Upon examining the report, it would be found that the Legislature would meet in 1852; the Governor's term of office, however, would not expire until 1853. In order that no delay might take place in regard to the inauguration of the Governor elect, he thought it would be highly proper that the first meeting of the Legislature should be in 1853. If the motion to concur did not prevail, he would move to re-commit the report, with instructions to strike out "two," and insert "three."

Mr. WALPOLE said, he could see no necessity for referring back this report. The chief object of the gentleman from Gibson, he supposed, was to accommodate the time of the meeting of the Legislature, to that of the selection of United States Senators. That was not an object with him, however. Pennsylvania and other States elected their representatives in Congress a year in advance of the vacancy. There was no difficulty in electing Senators or Representatives to Congress, in anticipation of the vacancy. If the gentleman's proposition should prevail, it would have the effect of postponing the adoption of this Constitution for one year longer. He hoped the amendment would not prevail, but that the first election under the new Constitution would take place in June, 1852.

Mr. PETTIT. It seems to me there can be no necessity for re-committing this report. We have had a long debate on the very point suggested by the gentleman, and the matter has been well considered. The committee on the legislative department, I recollect, reported that the first session of the Legislature should be in 1853, but the Convention, after mature consideration and debate, struck out three and inserted two. To be sure it is a matter of no great importance one way or the other; but I see no necessity for reversing what has already been determined upon. This Constitution, if it is to be submitted to the vote of the people, ought to be submitted this coming year. It ought to be submitted as early as June. The Legislature, I have no doubt, will determine upon an early day for its submission. They will, unquestionably, I think, submit it before August, for this reason, that unless they do, the people will have to go on and elect their officers under the old Constitution, and you will have to bring on another election, in two months after. Decidedly the better way will be to submit it before August. Then, sir, let your Legislature be elected, all of them, Senators and Representatives, on the second Tuesday in October. They will come up here and will draw for the longer or shorter term of service, and you will put your machinery of government in operation, without difficulty. And, sir, there is no difficulty about electing a United States Senator. In regard to the time at which he is to be elected; when is it to be? (turning towards the gentleman from Gibson)—for I want to inform the gentleman that I shall be a candidate when this time arrives.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. It will be in 1855.

Mr. PETTIT. I am sorry the time is so far off [a laugh]. But the gentleman from Hancock has well remarked that there is no difficulty about electing a Senator before the vacancy occurs. Indeed it is better, in many respects, that he should be elected before hand. The people will know their Senator—he will have an opportunity to put his business in order, and what is of more importance, he will have an opportunity to inform himself of the public wants, and to acquaint himself with the nature of his public duties—a thing, I regret to say, that is too much neglected. There is too much avidity to obtain office without any solicitude as to fitness for office.

It seems to me, there is no other way than to concur in the report of the committee, unless there is something in that report which is positively wrong—unless there has been some variance made in a matter of substance in one of the sections.

A VOICE. How about the Governor?

Mr. PETTIT. It seems to me there is no difficulty about the Governor holding over. I would as soon have the Governor elected a year previous to the commencement of his term of office, as otherwise. Let the present incumbent remain in office if you please, until the time for the first election for Governor under the new Constitution.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. The gentleman misunderstands everything I said. I only say that you place this Constitution before the people in June, and the first session of the Legislature will be holden the following year; and in 1853, when the term of office of your Governor is to commence, there will be no session. How, then, is he to be inaugurated? Are you to have a called session for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. I believe we have adopted, in the Constitution, somewhere, a provision of this character; that all officers elected by the people, shall continue in office, under the new Constitution, for the term for which they were elected. If that provision remain without an exception being made, in relation to the Governor, the present incumbent will remain in office for a year after the adoption of the new Constitution; and I agree with my friend who has just taken his seat, that there will be a necessity for a called session, for the inauguration of the Governor. I believe it was not the intention of the Convention to make any provision respecting the election of Senators. I think, however, that we ought now to take this matter into consideration.

Mr. EDMONSTON. I, sir, for one, have no reflections to cast upon the committee, and I do not consider, as the gentleman from Tippecanoe seems to do, that there is any reflection cast upon them by the gentleman from Gibson. The committee have adhered strictly to the language of the section as it was sent to them by the Convention. This provision was reported to the Convention by the committee on the legislative department, of which I was a member; and it directed that the first biennial session should be held in 1853. We reported this provision with a view exclusively to the inauguration of the Governor; but the Convention thought proper to change it. And we have adopted a resolution that no new proposition shall be introduced. Now the Convention will see at once the condition in which we are placed. Are we, whenever a Governor is elected, to have a called session for the purpose of his inauguration? We might as well have provided for annual sessions at once. I was satisfied, sir, when the motion was made to amend the report of the committee, by striking out "three," and inserting "two," that we would find ourselves in a difficulty. The committee on revision have done their duty. There is no reflection cast upon them.

The PRESIDENT. The motion is to concur in the report.

Mr. EDMONSTON. Well, sir, in this view of the question, I hope the Convention will not concur in the report at present. If you adopt the report as it is, you cannot introduce any new proposition so as to cut off one year of the Governor's time; you will necessarily be obliged to have a called session. As for the time of electing United States Senators, that, I think, is a matter of no consequence.

The five minutes allotted for remarks, under the rule, here expired.

Mr. BASCOM. I hope the report will be concurred in. We are making reforms, and there are gentlemen who are for postponing those reforms for a year. I think it would be better to shorten the Governor's time a year, than that the Legislature hereafter should be obliged to meet in special session. The more few and far between their meetings are, the better for the public interest, for I contend that they are, this year, doing more injury than good.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman has no right to call in question the motives of members of the Legislature.

Mr. BASCOM. I am speaking now particularly of their course in regard to local legislation.

The PRESIDENT. That is a part of their legislative action which the gentleman has no right to comment upon.

Mr. BASCOM. I will speak, then, of the course pursued by the Legislature generally, and I say it has been productive of more injury than good. I see no harm in shortening the Governor's term for one year, so as, hereafter, to make it harmonize with the time of the meeting of the Legislature.

Mr. FOSTER. It appears to me there is a very easy way of settling all this. I have voted for a section to retain State and county officers in their respective offices for the period for which they were originally elected; but I am willing that that provision should be reconsidered, and let them all go out. If we do this, our way is clear. Members of the Legislature complain that they are legislated out of office, while county officers are not. They say they are entitled to designate the time when the Constitution shall be submitted to the people, and they declare that they will not submit it until August. I prefer that all shall go out—that is the true Democratic doctrine.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether we did not adopt a provision the other day providing for the continuance in office of all State officers.

The PRESIDENT. Those elected by the people only.

The question was then taken on concurring in the report of the committee, and it was, on a division—ayes 40, noes 39—decided in the affirmative.

So the report was concurred in.

Mr. PETTIT. As there is no other report from the committee on revision, to be considered by the Convention, I think we had better adjourn.

The PRESIDENT remarked that the calendar of business was entirely clear.

Mr. WALPOLE moved a suspension of the rules in order to enable him to introduce a section to the effect that the Governor, members of the General Assembly, and other officers elected under the old Constitution, shall continue in office until superseded under the authority of the new.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that under a resolution which has been adopted by the Convention after the Tuesday of this week no new matter can be introduced, unless agreed to by three-fourths of the members.

Mr. WALPOLE. I am aware of that, sir.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and it was agreed to.

Mr. WOLFE. I wish to call the attention of the Convention to one fact. We have now provided that the Constitution shall be submitted to the people at the next August election. We should also make provision that the officers then elected may hold over, and be sworn in under the new Constitution.

Mr. WALPOLE. We have passed a provision that all officers elected by the people shall continue to hold their respective offices until their successors are elected and qualified under the new Constitution, so that no void or vacancy can occur.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. It appears to me that if the Constitution be not adopted until the August election, the officers elected at that election must necessarily be elected under the old Constitution, for the election under the new Constitution does not come on until October.

Mr. WALPOLE. My proposition is, that the Governor, members of the General Assembly, and other officers elected under the old Constitution, shall continue in office until superseded under the authority of the new.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. That is exactly as I understand it; and if the Constitution be adopted by the people at the August election, the officers, Senators, and Representatives, elected at that election, will hold their offices until they are superseded by the elections to be held in October under the new Constitution, so that your election in August will be a nullity and you will hold two elections in the course of the next summer.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. We will have to rely a little, I suppose, upon the good sense of the Legislature. They will, no doubt, submit the Constitution long enough before the August elections to enable the Governor to issue his proclamation dispensing with that election, and then we will have but one election, and that under the new Constitution. But there should be some care exercised in regard to this matter. I think this proposition should not be hastily, and without due consideration, adopted. It should be referred to a select committee, and be examined and reported upon. We ought not hastily to adopt a proposition that we may afterwards be ashamed of; I therefore move that the section be referred to a select committee of nine, and that the gentleman who offered it be the chairman of that committee.

A VOICE. Five are enough.

Mr. READ of Monroe. I most heartily agree with the views of the gentleman last on the floor. It seems to me, especially in regard to the election of Congressmen, there would be a difficulty. If members of Congress are to be elected on the second Tuesday in October, their term of service would very soon commence, and they would hardly have time to make preparations.

A VOICE. Plenty of time.

Mr. READ of Monroe. There is still another difficulty. Here will be an interval from the second Tuesday in March up to October, in those years when we have no called session.

Cries of "All right! Take it back!"

Mr. OWEN. One thing is quite clear to me; and that is, that if this Constitution is submitted as late as the first Monday in August, it will not do to leave this provision in it, that the first session of the Legislature shall be in eighteen hundred and fifty-two, for you require of the people to elect Senators and Representatives on the first Monday in August, with the possibility, at least, before them, that a new election will take place in October. It appears to me that it will not do to hold these elections with this uncertainty hanging over them.

Mr. COLFAX. Every one knows that the Legislature, at its session after the adoption of the Constitution, will have a great deal to do in order to make the laws conform to the new Constitution. If, then, we have one special session and afterwards biennial sessions, it will obviate all difficulty. I concur heartily in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ripley, to refer this section to a select committee, and I was in hopes that the gentleman would propose that the committee should consist of one from each congressional district. [Cries of "Consent! Consent!"] It is a very important matter, and I desire that our Constitution shall be symmetrical.

Mr. BORDEN. Allow me to make another suggestion. This Constitution fixes the time when Congressmen shall be elected; now the Constitution of the United States says that the Legislature of the State shall regulate that matter. A gentleman near me says that this Constitution does not provide when members of Congress shall be elected. I think he will find that the sixth section of report number sixty-six, prescribes the time when they shall be elected.

A VOICE. That was laid on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. I will change my motion so that the committee shall consist of ten members.

The question being taken on the motion of the gentleman from Ripley to refer the section to a select committee of ten,

It was decided in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. BORDEN, report number sixty-six was taken from the table and referred to the same committee.

TAXATION OF STOCK.

Mr. KELSO, from the select committee to whom had been referred the section in relation to taxing the stocks of corporations, reported it back amended, as follows:

"All corporation stocks owned or held in this State by persons residing out of the State, shall be liable to a county tax equal to the tax levied for State purposes, which shall be paid into the State Treasury and distributed to the several counties in this State, for common school purposes; and corporation stocks owned or held by citizens of this State, shall be taxable for county purposes as any other property is taxed, and applied in the same manner in the counties where the same is owned or held; which shall, in either case, be in full force for all taxes for county purposes; and the General Assembly shall pass all necessary laws to carry into effect the provisions of this section."

The question being on the passage of the section,

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. I would inquire of the chairman of the committee whether this section embraces State as well as county taxes?

Mr. KELSO. It has reference only to county taxes.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. It is rather singular that this committee, of which I am a member, should have reported without having previously consulted me on the subject. If there has been any meeting of the committee since the addition was made to our numbers, I was not notified of the meeting. But I do not wish to complain of this mode of doing business, I merely speak of it as an irregular way of proceeding; I can express my dissent to that report here. The section, among other things, provides that in lieu of a county tax on the stock held by non-residents in incorporated companies the State tax shall be doubled on such stock, and the whole amount shall be paid into the State Treasury. This, in my judgment, is manifestly wrong. The property of railroads, plank roads, and of similar improvements, should be taxed like all other property wherever it may be situated. Let us see how the mode of taxation proposed by the committee will operate practically. There is a large brick house across the street worth, say six thousand dollars, owned, we will suppose, by a resident of the city of New York; it is taxed for State and county purposes the same as if the owner resided in this city, and the county tax is paid into the treasury of the county of Marion. The Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company has a depot in this city worth, we will suppose, as much as the house referred to—six thousand dollars. We will suppose that the same resident of the city of New York who owns the house across the street holds six thousand dollars of the stock of the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company, and as his certificate of stock is merely evidence that he owns that amount of the property of the Company, and is entitled to receive a corresponding amount of its net earnings, we may suppose that his stock is represented by the depot. Now can the chairman of the committee explain why the house should pay a tax into the treasury of this county and the depot should not? If an incendiary should be prosecuted for setting fire to either of these buildings he must be prosecuted in the county of Marion, and the people of the county of Marion must pay the expenses of the prosecution. Both the properties are equally under the protection of the laws in this county. Why should the one be taxed for county purposes and the other not?

But there is another objectionable feature in the section reported by the committee. It requires that the stock of non-residents shall be taxed as other property for State purposes, and an equal amount for the benefit of common schools throughout the State, thus making the whole tax twice the amount of the State tax. As this may be more or less than the aggregate of the State and county tax on property similarly situated and of equal value, it violates the section we have adopted which requires that all property shall be equally taxed according to its value.

I know, sir, that the county of Jefferson has had the lion's share of the taxes collected for county purposes on the road between here and Madison; and that has resulted from a provision in the code of eighteen hundred and forty-three, which requires that the stock incorporations shall be taxed for county purposes in the county where such corporation may have its principal office of business. The principal office for doing the business of that road being in Madison, gives the county of Jefferson the tax on a large amount of the stock. I know this gives to our county an undue advantage over the other counties on the line, and I am perfectly willing that the tax should be distributed to all the counties through which the road passes, on equitable terms. The fixing of these terms, and proper provisions for estimating the value of the property of the road, would lead us into more detail than is proper to be inserted in the Constitution. Having declared that all property shall be equally taxed according to value, we may safely and properly leave the mode of assessing and distributing the taxes on corporation property to be provided by law.

Mr. KELSO. There is no part or parcel of the property of any community so hard to be got at, and respecting the collection of revenue, from which it is so difficult to have even-handed justice administered, as the property of corporations. They make it their purpose, first, to steal all they can, and next, to hide all they steal. There is no other instance where the same difficulty exists. While the gentleman from Jefferson is repudiating the county tax over the whole line of the road, there will be in the system he suggests, a necessity for legislating on the subject.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson. I have just stated very differently.

Mr. KELSO. The gentleman complained that he was not consulted in regard to this report before it was brought in; however, in regard to that I have only this to say: that I had shown the gentleman a proposition by which even-handed justice could be meted out, and he repudiated it. He said he would not consent to its being reported; but I obtained the consent of a majority of the committee to report it, for I wanted to get it off my hands, as I did not desire to bring it home with me. The gentleman is desirous that the tax shall be levied in proportion to the cost of the property within each county. But, sir, you may take twenty miles of the road in Johnson county, and the whole of it did not cost so much as the ascent of the hill at Madison. How then are you to determine the value of the road? Why he says "you must tax the property where you find it." But there is the iniquity of it. The county of Jefferson, from the fact of the principal depot of the road being located therein, will claim all the cars; which, together with other apparatus, will perhaps be equal to one-half the entire amount of property to be taxed. Now I ask you if there is anything like justice in such a proposition, when the funds that have contributed to the procuring of this property have been derived, in various proportions, from all the counties through which the road passes?

Mr. GORDON. I think this whole matter can be very safely left to the Legislature; I therefore move that the section be laid upon the table.

The question was then put, and, upon a division—ayes 36, noes 43—it was decided in the negative.

So the section was not laid upon the table.

Mr. KILGORE. The section as reported—I do not know whether it is from a design to embarrass the matter about which we differed yesterday, but it must inevitably have that effect—proposes, or rather has in view, the taxation of the stock owned by non-residents. Gentlemen of the Convention must be aware that we cannot assess a tax here upon non-residents that we are compelled to assess upon our resident citizens. We are expressly prohibited by the Constitution of the United States. The citizens of other States cannot be held liable to be taxed as residents are. This question has been agitated over and over again. If we assess a tax upon the property of non-residents, we are compelled to impose the same amount on resident stock holders. I supposed it was understood that the tax upon the property of the road must be distributed in each county in which it is assessed. But gentlemen insist that the tax must be distributed throughout the State. By a parity of reasoning you might make the person who comes into Marion county, and erects machinery, &c., pay a tax to be distributed in other counties where the same spirit of enterprise does not exist.

Mr. CLEMENTS moved to re-commit with instructions to strike out and insert, that "all corporation stock shall be taxed for State and county purposes the same as other property, and shall be assessed and collected as shall be prescribed by law."

Mr. GIBSON inquired if the section was now on its second reading.

The PRESIDENT replied in the affirmative.

Mr. GIBSON. There is no necessity then for re-committing it.

The PRESIDENT remarked that although there was no necessity for it, the gentleman had a right to make such a motion if he thought proper.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I supposed the article was upon its third reading.

The PRESIDENT. It is on its second reading.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Then, sir, I move to amend in accordance with the instructions that I have offered.

The PRESIDENT. The question will first be on concurring in the report of the committee.

Mr. KELSO. Now let me say to the Convention that this is just precisely the law as it at present stands. All corporate property is now liable to be taxed in the same manner as other property is, whether it be owned by residents or non-residents; and the mode in which it is to be collected is prescribed by law. And what is that mode? It is that any line of the public works shall pay the whole tax to the county where the principal station is located.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me set the gentleman right. The gentleman from Hancock seemed to fall into the same error yesterday. The law is, that the tax shall be levied in proportion to the distance which the road passes through each county.

Mr. KELSO. I am not mistaken as to the Madison and Indianapolis road; the course pursued in regard to it is such as I have mentioned, and the proposition of the gentleman will leave the matter point blank where it is; it will leave the Legislature to do precisely what they have heretofore done. If you want to make "confusion worse confounded" then adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Daviess. But if the Convention desire to make a special distribution of the taxes to the counties through which the road runs, or if they wish to devote them to common school purposes, now is the time to make the necessary provision on that subject. But if they do not desire this, then the gentleman's amendment is a proper one enough.

Mr. SHOUP moved that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT. It is a motion to re-commit with instructions.

Mr. EDMONSTON. Is the question susceptible of division?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly it is.

Mr. MORRISON of Marion. I am willing that the section should be re-committed, for the reason that I desire a great deal of care shall be exercised in forming the section. The gentleman is right in some of his positions in regard to the mode of collecting the tax; heretofore it has been collected at the principal office of the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad Company at Madison, and consequently the county of Jefferson has received all the tax on the property of the road. It is for the purpose of having a proper system matured by which the proportion of tax belonging to a county may be secured to such county, that I desire the section shall be re-committed.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. I am of the opinion that the Legislature under the new Constitution will exercise a sound discretion, and their attention being especially directed to the matter by this provision, they will fix upon a different mode of collecting this tax, so as to do justice to the counties along the line of the road. I think no evil can grow out of the adoption of the provision in its present form.

Mr. SPANN. As this is a matter which is perhaps somewhat difficult to be understood in all its bearings, I think it will be proper to refer it to a committee. One proposition made by the gentleman from Switzerland, appeared to me to be deserving of consideration. We all know that heretofore the counties in which this property lies have received no benefit from the taxes derived from it, and any measure by which we may levy a tax that will benefit each county in proportion to its interest in the work, will receive my cordial support. But there is one feature in the proposition that I do not like, and that is, that the taxes shall be devoted to the use of common schools. Much as I would do for them in the proper way, I am opposed to taking the taxes which belong to Jennings county, for instance, and devoting them to common schools in other counties.

Mr. KELSO. That has reference to the stock owned by non-residents.

Mr. SPANN. It is no matter. If the tax belonging to one county be applied to the uses of another, it is a manifest injustice. No matter from what source the tax may be derived. There is no good reason why it should be taken from one county and given to another. If I vote for the reference of this section, I do it with the expectation and understanding that this part of the proposition will be rejected.

Mr. DOBSON. When this section was first presented here, I was in favor of it, and I might be so yet; I do not say that I am not; but it does seem to me that we are undertaking to do more than we ought to do, and that our action will produce confusion. In the first place I would call attention to a section we have already adopted in relation to uniformity of taxation. From that, it would seem the Legislature will have no right to make special laws in reference to taxation. And we have passed another section which says that the Legislature shall not pass any local or special laws in regard to several matters enumerated; neither should there be any special laws in regard to this. In one section we have declared that there will be no special legislation; and in another section we have provided that taxation shall be equal and uniform all over the State; and in a third we are about to declare that the Legislature shall pass a special law in relation to taxing a particular species of property. I doubt very much whether the Legislature will know what power they have under these conflicting provisions. I am not in favor of making any provision in regard to this matter. If I were a member of the Legislature I should vote for taxing all property equally, and I would have the property belonging to each county taxed within that county. It does appear to me the matter should be more thoroughly examined before we adopt the section, otherwise, a man, when he swears to support the Constitution, would have to "go it blind."

Mr. STEVENSON. There is no question about which I have more clearly made up my mind, than that no such tax as is here proposed should be levied. Now look at it: here is one part of the Convention in favor of one plan, another in favor of a different plan, and a third part doubtful as to what they ought to do. Which of them is in the right? If we adopt a plan which is wrong, it must remain as long as the Constitution stands. It is true, the Legislature may not adopt the proper principle, but if they go wrong, they can retrace their steps. I think we should not provide for levying a particular tax. I do trust the Convention will leave the whole subject of taxation to the Legislature. I do not know but that the proposition may be right; but inasmuch as there is a diversity of opinion on the subject, I think the safer plan will be to leave the matter for legislative action.

Mr. KENT. I think this subject has been discussed long enough; I move the previous question.

Mr. KILGORE. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question in order to enable me to offer a compromise section.

Mr. KENT withdrew the call for the previous question.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to re-commit.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson opposed the re-commitment, and argued in favor of the proposition. He contended that the taxes should be paid in the county in which the stock was owned. If this were not provided for, the result would be that a few individuals would come up to the Legislature from where the stocks were owned, and defeat every proposition for distributing the taxes that might arise from them.

Mr. WALPOLE was in favor of the section. The taxes should be assessed in the county through which the road passed. But (said Mr. W.) it is argued by the gentleman from Owen (Mr. Dobson) that your Constitution will be inconsistent with itself if you adopt this proposition, and that you have passed a section declaring that taxation shall be uniform. But, sir, the section proposed by the gentleman from Switzerland does not contravene that provision. We only contend that the tax shall be applied to the benefit of the several counties. The gentleman also contends that no special law should be passed in reference to this subject. How is it, under the law as it stands on your statute book at present, in regard to State taxes? How is it in regard to the taxes levied on the stock of insurance companies? The taxes go to the counties in which the office is located. I think it is due to the interior counties of the State that at least a portion of the profits on the investment made by them should be thrown back to the people of those counties.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think this question ought to be left to the Legislature; I think it is one which peculiarly belongs to the Legislature. They will be able to adjust it upon equitable principles, whereas it would be impossible for us to adjust it upon principles that would be satisfactory to all.

Mr. COLFAX. It seems to me, that in the middle of the last week of the session, we should not attempt to settle a question concerning which there exists such a diversity of opinion, and one, too, which may be safely left to the Legislature. I therefore move that the section be laid on the table.

The motion was, upon a division—ayes 53, noes 38—agreed to.

And the section was accordingly laid upon the table.

On motion by Mr. MILLER of Gibson,
The Convention adjourned.

THURSDAY, FEB. 6, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. FARROW.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The PRESIDENT submitted to the Convention a communication from the Secretary in relation to the binding of the Journals, setting forth the comparative expense of binding according to different modes.

The communication having been read,

It was ordered, by unanimous consent, that the Journals should be bound in a substantial and durable form, in accordance with the specification submitted.

On motion by Mr. SHOUP, under a suspension of the rules, a resolution was adopted to the effect that each member of the General Assembly be furnished with a copy of the Journal of Debates.

On motion by Mr. SHOUP,

The Secretary was directed to prepare the sheets of parchment—previously ordered—for the signature of members, by Saturday, at 10 o'clock A. M.

Mr. READ of Monroe. I will state to the Convention that I am informed by the printer who is doing the work of the Convention, that the final report of the committee on revision cannot be printed before Saturday morning.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Well, then, get it done somewhere else.

Mr. CARTER (the rules being suspended) proposed the following:

“Resolved, That the committee on revision be authorized to get their printing done at any office where it can be done with the most dispatch.”

The resolution was adopted.

On motion by Mr. HAMILTON,

The rules were suspended for the purpose of enabling him to introduce the following resolution:

“Resolved, That thirty thousand copies of the Constitution be printed in the English, and five thousand copies in the German language.”

Mr. KILGORE moved to amend by striking out the word “thirty” and inserting the word “fifty.”

Mr. DICK moved to add, "three thousand in French."

The latter amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I propose to strike out the five thousand to be printed in the German language and insert "ten." I simply wish to make this remark, that the facilities for distributing the Constitution in the German language are of course not so great as in the English language, because there are but very few newspapers published in the German language.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be first on the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. KENT remarked, that it would cost but little more expense to strike off twenty thousand copies more. He thought fifty thousand, at least, ought to be printed in the English language.

The question was taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware, and it was, on a division—ayes 35, noes 34—decided in the affirmative.

Mr. HOLMAN then renewed his amendment, viz.: to strike out "five" and insert "ten," and it was, on a division—ayes 32, noes 46—not agreed to.

Mr. BASCOM offered the following amendment: "And that the copies be equally distributed among the members of the Convention."

Mr. GRAHAM of Warrick moved to amend the amendment by substituting the following: "And that the Secretary of State is hereby requested to distribute the same among the counties in proportion to the inhabitants in each."

Mr. GRAHAM of Warrick remarked, that he did not know there was any use in having the Constitution printed unless the people could get hold of it. The proper way, he thought, to distribute the printed copies, would be to send them to the county clerks, in proportion to the number of polls in each county.

Mr. BASCOM contended that they would be more equally and properly distributed by the Delegates.

Mr. GRAHAM of Warrick withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BADGER. There is another reason why the amendment of the gentleman from Warrick should not be adopted—

The PRESIDENT. It has been withdrawn.

Mr. BADGER. I was going to remark, that in some counties there are not, perhaps, half a dozen German voters, and Delegates here best know the situation of their own constituencies.

Mr. WATTS. It appears to me this whole thing is wrong. We are proposing to make a very liberal distribution, but we forget that we cannot command the necessary funds. I think that when we have completed our work we should hand it over to the Legislature, and let them make the distribution—let them say how many copies shall be printed, and by whom they shall be distributed, and provide for the payment of the expenses. That duty, it appears to me, belongs to them and not to us.

Mr. HAMILTON. I differ very much with the view taken by the gentleman from Dearborn, and I am sorry to have to differ with him. It appears, from the whole course of the transactions of the Legislature, that their sole object has been to make attacks upon this body; they have traveled out of the line of their duty for that purpose, and I am opposed to putting anything into their hands that we can do ourselves; because it is putting a weapon in the hands of our enemies to do us harm, if harm can be done. I say, let us place the Constitution that we have formed in the hands of the people, so that we may show them what we have done. Let it be distributed by the Delegates themselves. We owe it to ourselves and to the people to take this Constitution in our hands, and to go before the people and explain it to them.

[Cries of "that is the doctrine."]

Mr. GIBSON. Is the resolution open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT. There is an amendment already pending.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to offer an amendment, and it is, that the Address which has been prepared by the committee be printed with the Constitution.

Mr. WOLFE. I would like to see the Address before I give my consent to the proposition of the gentleman from Clark; it may contain something that I would not approve of.

A VOICE. That is right.

Mr. NILES. Mr. President, I hope the motion to publish an Address with the Constitution will not prevail. I desire to see the instrument, simple and unvarnished, submitted to the people for their deliberate action, without any one-sided argument embodying the views of any one man in its favor, whoever he may be. The publication of such an address would, in my judgment, be an undignified proceeding, indicating a want of confidence on our part, either in the Constitution which we have formed or in the people who are to decide upon it. [Applause.]

For myself, I will say, that I believe it will be adopted by a large majority. I have had my misgivings during the entire session, and have suffered no little anxiety lest we should do more harm than good. Several things are not as I wish they were, but on looking over the whole ground, I am compelled to regard it as a marvel that so large a body has been able to agree upon an instrument combining so much of progress and conservatism. [Applause.] It destroys comparatively little that was useful, and in many respects, is an improvement on our old Constitution. Its merits and demerits will be discussed by the press. The principle of trusting the people has been advocated during the entire session. Let us not, then, show our distrust by the last act of the session. The Constitution will read for itself. When it is prepared and submitted to the people our work is done. The people will be just as competent to decide upon its merits as we ourselves.

Mr. GIBSON. The argument of the gentleman from Laporte would have more applicability to the resolution that was passed the other day, by which the Address was ordered to be drafted, than it has to this amendment. We have determined that we will prepare and send forth to the people of the State an Address; and the only question now is, whether or not we will couple that Address with the Constitution. I think if we send out the Address at all, we ought unquestionably to send it with the instrument that it is designed to explain.

With regard to the remarks of the gentleman from Sullivan, I have this to say, that before the Address goes forth, this body will have to pass upon it. If the Address be not adopted, of course it will not be appended to the Constitution. If it be adopted, it is not the Address of an individual, however distinguished he may be, but of this body.

A VOICE. It is not the Address of this body yet.

Mr. GIBSON. When adopted it will be if adopted by only a majority of one. And if we send out the Constitution at all, the Address should accompany it, not only in English but in German, or whatever language in which it may be published.

Mr. COOKERLY (in his seat). Oh, pshaw!

Mr. GIBSON. Then lay aside your demagogical votes for printing in German. Sir, if there is any portion of our citizens for whom we should order the printing of the Constitution, it is for those who have just come into the country, and do not understand our laws and system of government. And if you send out the Address at all, send it as well with those copies of the Constitution that you print in the German language as with those you print in the English.

Mr. STEVENSON. I concur in every sentiment that has been uttered by the gentleman from Laporte (Mr. Niles). This Constitution I believe will be one of the best that has been formed lately in any one of the States of this Union. And, sir, it is an expression of our doubts regarding its merits when we couple an address with it. I want it to go to the people alone, without a remark from us, without any evidence that we are afraid it will not be well received. I believe that the people will adopt it; and we will only endanger it by attaching to it anything that does not legitimately belong to it.

Mr. HOVEY (in his seat). If it cannot stand on its own merits, let it fall.

Mr. STEVENSON. If it cannot stand on its own merits, as the gentleman suggests, let it fall. In a paper published in the county in which I live, I have observed it is charged upon the Convention that we are afraid to let the Constitution go forth alone. It is a paper which, though professedly neutral in politics, is published by a Democrat.

A MEMBER. It must be of the neuter gender.

ANOTHER MEMBER (sotto voce). Or perhaps the epicene. [Much laughter.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, it only shows the feeling of the country; and I for one say that when we publish and lay the Constitution before the people, no arguments of ours should accompany it.

Mr. FOSTER. When the resolution authorizing the preparation of an Address was introduced by the gentleman from Posey, I thought it was right and proper; but at the same time, the gentleman noticed emphatically that it would be attended with no expense, inasmuch as it would be published by all the newspapers in the State. With that understanding I supported the resolution. I certainly supposed that an address emanating from a committee of this Convention might very properly be attached to the Constitution, although I have great confidence in the intelligence of the people, particularly in the American portion. But if we are to incur the expense of having this Address published, as proposed, in connection with the Constitution, I am entirely opposed to the proposition.

For my own part, I am for having it published in the newspapers; and there may be as long and elaborate arguments for and against the Constitution as they may please to publish, and the more of them we have the better. I am willing that the Constitution shall be submitted to the people without any adventitious aids to assist in its adoption; and I venture to say, it will be adopted by fifty thousand of a majority. I have sometimes found that men of established reputation have become convinced that they were in error; yes, sir, and after reflection I have frequently changed my own views—[cries of "consent"]—yes, sir; and none but a fool would refuse to set himself right when he became convinced that he was wrong. But, sir, I am convinced that nineteen-twentieths of my constituents will approve our work; besides, sir, I intend to explain myself on the stump. [Applause.]

Mr. READ of Clark. I am in favor of the adoption of this resolution. The expense will be nothing in comparison with the advantage our constituents will derive from having, in an official form, the exposition that may be drawn up of the benefits that will flow from the changes which have been made in the Constitution. But, sir, whether this resolution be adopted or not, I am for the Constitution that we have made. ["Consent," "consent."] Much, sir, has been said about the complaints made by our constituents in regard to the time that has been occupied in making this Constitution. Sir, all the complaint that I have heard from my constituents is, that they are afraid we will not take sufficient time to do our work as it should be done. Their constant appeal is, to exercise patience and deliberation. I have not heard a murmur from old Clark about a waste of time. [Applause.] They want a good Constitution; and I, sir, as a representative in this Convention, if I did not believe that we had made a good Constitution—if I did not believe that we had made one of the best constitutions on earth—I would ashamed to present myself before my constituents. As to the adoption of the Constitution by the people, as my friend on my right has said, if there be not a majority of fifty thousand dollars in its favor [laughter]—I mean voters [loud applause], I would consider that our time had been spent in vain.

Much has been said about the labors of this Convention. Now permit me to say to you, and through you to the people of Indiana, that I never knew a deliberative body labor harder or closer than the Constitutional Convention of Indiana. ["Consent."] I never knew of an instance, sir. I have served all my life, occasionally, in the councils of the State and Nation, and I declare to you that I never was so closely engaged—that I never lost so little time, in any deliberative body. Why, even, sir, on Christmas day, and on New Year's day, this Convention was in session, and it was the first time in my life that I ever sat in a legislative body, or in a body assembled for deliberative purposes, on either of those holidays. This Convention, sir, in point of labor, has exceeded, far exceeded, any body of the kind that I have ever known or heard of. And, sir, let the people grumble, let them murmur if they will, but we may justly feel a consciousness about our hearts that we have labored long and hard, and we now present to them a Constitution for their approval or rejection. And, sir, whatever their decision may be, whether it be of approval or condemnation of our conduct, I for one am willing to abide the result. Look around at our sister States, in which conventions have been held for a similar purpose, and compare the time that has been consumed by them with that consumed by us; compare the result of their labors with the result of ours, and I will venture to say that before a discriminating constituency we shall be applauded. And, sir, the wonder will be, that a hundred and fifty men have been able to close their labors so satisfactorily, and in such a short space of time.

Mr. COLFAX. As this appears to be a kind of conventional class meeting, and as gentlemen on both sides of the House have expressed their opinion as to the work which we have now about completed, I may be pardoned for adding a few words.

For four months the members of this body have been actively engaged in the performance of the duties they were commissioned to execute; and although for at least two months of that time, they have been the target of attack, of ridicule, and of sneers, I can bear testimony that the great bulk of the delegates here have faithfully and assiduously labored for the good of the whole State—not looking to partizan advantages—not intriguing for personal advancement—not stooping to petty tricks—but aiming to make a Constitution for the whole people now, and for future generations hereafter. And, though it may have been an expensive Convention, the State will bear us witness that it was not ourselves who called together the large number of members now sitting in this Hall, and that we had no agency either in fixing the number who should be elected, nor the compensation they should receive.

Our labors are now virtually at an end, and we can look back at the instrument which, day by day, by the votes of this body, has grown into a Whole. And, in thus looking back at it, surveying the whole ground and recollecting the diverse opinions and interests which had to be adjusted in its formation, I do not hesitate to say now, as I shall hereafter, that it is the most liberal of all the new Constitutions which have been recently framed, and that the whole work, thus cemented together, forms a building of which its workmen need not be ashamed. [Applause.]

I do not say that I agree with every decision that has been made—every section that has passed. Probably no one member can say that every desire and opinion of his has been gratified or adopted. Not even the wise and patriotic men who framed our National Charter, could say that. But they did say, as to their work, as we can say of ours, that it was agreed upon, section by section, in good faith—the voice of the majority ruling, as in a republican Nation State it ever should rule. And, as a Whole—considered all together—believing that this Convention has steered judiciously between Scylla and Charybdis—has avoided the extreme of ultra Radicalism on the one hand and ultra Conservatism on the other—and has been planted on progressive ground, where it looked forward to and acted for the future as well as was benefited by the wisdom and experience of the past—I shall give it my signature and vote without faltering or hesitating. [Applause.]

It is well known, Mr. President, that I have been disappointed with others, in not securing the incorporation of the Homestead Exemption in this Instrument—but I am gratified to add that its principle has been at least faintly recognized—that no prohibition against it is here inserted, and that its friends can still appeal to each succeeding Legislature for its adoption. The persevering friends of Woman's Rights have failed also in securing the insertion of their proposition in the Constitution, but neither was any prohibition against it adopted, and they, with us, have still the power left to appeal to the General Assembly. And more gratifying than all things else, has been the spirit of compromise which has prevailed here, which has governed us in so many of our decisions, and by which, without sacrifice of principle on either side, some of the most difficult questions were adjusted.

We all remember the Grand Jury question, and the debate upon it, when its friends and opponents warred together in the encounter of arguments, and the scale was so nicely balanced, that none could tell which would triumph. And we remember too, that finally, fully three-fourths of the Convention agreed to a compromise—that fairest of all compromises—placing the whole question of its continuance, abolition, or modification with the people themselves.

For weeks we debated the difficult question of the Currency—and the conflicting views of the various portions of the State seemed to forbid its amicable settlement. And yet the spirit of compromise, which has abided constantly with a majority of the members of this body, finally calmed the agitation and adopted a proposition which, subsequently, four-fifths of this body refused to re-consider or impair.

The details of our Judicial System—the jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts—the transaction of the Probate business, &c.—formed another vexed question of debate. And that, like the Grand Jury question, was finally referred to the arbitrament, and placed entirely within the control of the Legislature.

There was still another question—one that seemed impossible to be compromised—which involved, in the minds of many members, a grave question of humanity. I allude to Negro Exclusion. And yet, even there, the final result was to submit it separately to the people, that its positive insertion in the Constitution, might not prevent those from supporting the instrument, who otherwise would have felt themselves prevented from so doing.

In what other Convention has this respect for the feelings, opinions, views of delegates been so strikingly manifested? And, does not this prove that its members have been laboring, not so much to secure the triumph of their own peculiar sentiments, as to adopt harmoniously, faithfully, honorably, such an Instrument as its framers could all approve, and as the people could all endorse? [Applause.]

Thus far, our constituents—the people of the State—whose approval is to breathe the breath of life into this instrument, or whose disapproval is to consign it to oblivion—know comparatively but little of what has been the result of our labors. In a few days they will see it as a symmetrical Whole. They will examine its details, section by section, carefully. They will find its spirit republican. They will find its provisions in regard to our great works, free from any illiberal or antagonistical features. They will find it generally both progressive and liberal. And though each one of them may discover some minor point in which he would have preferred a different decision, I have no doubt but that, taken altogether, they will cheerfully ratify it. And, if not submitted too soon—if time is allowed for the prejudice which has been industriously engendered against the members of this body for its long session, to pass away—if the new Constitution is tested upon its own merits—though other gentleman may attempt to fix the majority it will receive, I can say that I do not believe five counties out of the ninety in the State will cast a majority of their votes against it. [Applause.]

Mr. PETTIT. Gentlemen seem to feel rather sensitive as to what may be said about them in consequence of the length of time that has been spent in performing the work for which they were sent here. I can say for myself, sir, that I have no fear of being blamed for any delay that may have occurred, for any protraction of our work, in fact for anything I have done here; for, sir, I feel a perfect consciousness that I have labored from the commencement of our session to the end, with a purity of motive and intention that has not been surpassed by any other man in this or any other place. Whether the result of our labors may be satisfactory to the people of the State or not, I, more modest than the gentleman from Clark, am not prepared to say. But I have not risen to detain the Convention long. It has been said here, that the proceedings of this Convention have been commented upon, and that we have been traduced in the newspapers for occupying so much time in the performance of a work which seems to be supposed to be a work which can be accomplished in a few days. I scarcely ever take notice of anything that appears in a newspaper, but I wish to show to the Convention that there are two sensible editors in Indiana.

Cries of "Consent! Read it! Read it!"

Mr. PETTIT proceeded to read extracts from comments made by the editors alluded to, in reference to the action of the Convention.

[The reporter was not furnished with the extracts.]

Mr. WOLFE. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Clark, but I do not oppose it upon any other ground than this: that it appears to me it would not be quite becoming in us to vaunt the praise of our own work. Before voting upon the proposition I will say one word in reference to the manner in which the business of the Convention has been conducted. I will not undertake to speak so much for others as for myself, but I can say, so far as I am concerned, that during the four months we have been here I have missed but one vote, and there has never been a call of the Convention that I have not been present. It is true that some gentlemen have been called home by unavoidable circumstances, and others have been occasionally absent from the Convention; but taking the whole session together, I presume there is no body of a similar character the members of which have been more faithful in the discharge of their duties than the members of this Convention. And, sir, I will undertake to say that when the Constitution that we have formed comes to be submitted to the people it will recommend itself, and in recommending itself it will recommend the delegates by whose labor it was constructed. I have no fears on that head. Gentlemen may talk about the indignation of the people being directed against us for a waste of time. In regard to that I have only this to say: that there is no instance within my knowledge, where so much work has been accomplished in the same length of time. If my constituents complain at all, my only apprehension is that they will complain either that our work has been hastily and imperfectly done, or that we have attempted to accomplish too much. But whatever may be the popular sentiment at the moment, I feel an abiding confidence that after an opportunity shall have been afforded for a due appreciation of the merits of the Constitution we have formed, we shall receive that commendation which is the meed of faithful servants. And although temporarily the work of our hands may not be appreciated, yet ultimately it will, like the rose referred to by the French poet, be recognized in all its purity and perfection. I may as well give you the poet's own lines, and with the permission of the Convention I will do so, as more completely illustrating the comparison which I have instituted: "Une roseau que la tempete couche par terre; se releve desque le vent ne souffle pas." [Applause.]

Mr. DOBSON. I do not know whether this debate may be considered a class meeting or a love feast or not; it certainly appears so, if we may judge from the evidence we have had of the gift of tongues. I doubt very much whether anything of the kind has occurred since the days of the Apostles. If any really doubt whether the people of Indiana will ratify or adopt this Constitution, he need only attend the lectures which are being delivered nightly in the legislative Hall by Fanny Lee Townsend, to be convinced. I undertake to say that after all we have heard to-day, that this Constitution will be ratified by so large a majority that the minority will be "no where." As to our remaining in session so long, I have only to say that a large portion, at all events, of the people of the State, and that portion the reflecting portion, expected us to remain here until we had made a good Constitution. It was not expected by them that we would have been able to complete such a work as that in which we have been engaged, within a shorter period than we have occupied. I told my people at the very first, that I had no expectation of being home before the middle of January. When you set about reforming and re-constructing your government from the very foundation, it is to be expected that it will require a considerable time if you intend to do it in a proper manner. And in regard to Constitution-making, or anything else, this way of slighting the work, finishing it up in a hasty manner, is not what the people meant. They do not want it constructed in such a manner that it will fall to pieces by its own weight. They want it made strong and durable. I will say that there are some provisions in it that I would rather not have there, but I have sufficient confidence in the intelligence of this Convention to believe that the judgment of a majority is more to be relied upon than my own, and I am willing to take the Constitution as they have determined it shall be. As to what has been said or done by the Legislature in reference to the length of time that has been occupied by the Convention in its labors, if they can make any capital out of it I am willing they shall do so. Perhaps they have need of some. No doubt they need it more than we do. As to this being a "slaughter house" of politicians, I am of the opinion that more butchery has been committed, or rather self-immolation, in the Hall over the way, when attempting to throw discredit upon the course pursued by this body, than has occurred through any action of ours. I came here with the intention and expectation of remaining and making a Constitution that would be acceptable to the people; and, so far as I am concerned, I am entirely unassailable by any shafts from that quarter. It would have been as well if the representatives of the people, the ai pollos, who were sent here to legislate, had attended to the business of legislation without traveling out of their way to suggest, without any reason, causes of complaint against those who were delegated for a purpose which was altogether beyond their sphere.

Now as to publishing this address in connection with the Constitution, I think the gentleman from Sullivan is right. We do not yet know what the address will be, and I for one am not willing to vote in the dark. I want to examine the address before I vote for its publication. To ask me to vote for it in advance, is asking too much. It appears to me there is no necessity for our pointing out the merits of the Constitution we have made. I do not think we need describe the Constitution. Let it speak for itself.

A VOICE. Move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. DOBSON. I shall not make any motion about it, for it is a matter of indifference to me whether it be adopted or not. There is one thing, however, about which I have not a doubt; and that is, that if we submit our Constitution to-morrow, the people will ratify it.

Mr. GIBSON. At the suggestion of my friends, as there seems to be some opposition manifested and some weight in the arguments thrown out, I will withdraw my motion. ["Consent."] While up, as this seems to be a political class meeting, in which all are giving their experience, I will take occasion to say that I fully agree with the sentiments of the gentleman last up. I believe this is the best Constitution that has been formed on this continent. It is true that there is no one member who is entirely satisfied. Each one of us has, perhaps, been called upon to sacrifice some favorite idea or object, for the good of the whole; but, taking the Constitution in the aggregate, it is perhaps as unexceptionable as it could well be made.

MR. GORDON. Having spent a couple of hours in glorifying ourselves, I think we may very safely omit the balance of the puffing. If we deserve applause, let it be bestowed by our constituents. I therefore move the previous question.

MR. STEELE rose and addressed the Chair.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Withdraw the previous question.

Cries of "Steele! Steele! Hear him! Hear him!"

MR. GORDON withdrew the demand for the previous question.

MR. STEELE. Mr. President, I desire to say to this Convention that my being here among you, is perhaps an incident more extraordinary than that of the presence of any other member of this Convention. I will say further, that I drew up my own platform and presented it to the people, and I have the satisfaction of knowing that of the propositions that I submitted as being proper for adoption by the Convention, the greater part of them have been fully and amply confirmed by this body. [Applause.] And among them the one that I considered of the most importance, that future amendments to the Constitution should be left in the hands of the people without calling another Convention, has received your approbation. That section alone has merit enough to save the Constitution and to insure its adoption, if there were nothing else in it that would recommend it. I have had a desire for the last eight days, and a strong desire, gentlemen, to leave you.

Cries of "No consent."

MR. STEELE (continuing). As a faithful servant of the people, I have been with you during the whole session of the Convention. I had no other object in view than the welfare and advancement of the whole interest of the people of Indiana. [Applause.]

A VOICE. Go it Steele! Them's the licks!

MR. STEELE. I believe in allowing every man to think and act for himself.

A MEMBER. That is the doctrine.

MR. STEELE. I say, let every voter of the State examine the Constitution for themselves, and I pledge myself to-day that the voters of Indiana will adopt the Constitution.

Gentlemen, with these remarks I bid you farewell; but God knows that when I leave you my heart is still with you. I have been associated with you in the best of feelings from the commencement. My wish is that you shall enjoy all the blessings of life, and I am confident that you will not fail to be found always, as you have proved yourselves to be here, devoted to the best interests of the country.

Cries of "Kelso! Kelso! Gregg! Gregg!"

MR. MILROY proposed to amend, so that every newspaper in the State should be authorized to publish the Constitution.

MR. KELSO. I have no doubt but that every newspaper in the State will publish the new Constitution, and I have no doubt that it will be read by every voter in the State, without the necessity for our publishing it in a separate form. I cannot agree with gentlemen who say that this Constitution is so very excellent. If there is anything in it that will save it from utter condemnation, it is the clause spoken of by the gentleman from Wabash, which puts it in the power of the people to make amendments to it without calling another Convention for that purpose; without that clause I would have serious doubts of its being adopted. I deny the position of the gentleman from St. Joseph, that it is the most liberal Constitution that has been adopted within the last six or eight years. I say that it contains a greater amount of stringent provisions, provisions that entrench more on the rights of the people, upon the general liberties and privileges of the people, than any Constitution which has been adopted during the last fifteen years.

A VOICE. That is your opinion.

MR. KELSO. It is an opinion, at all events, that is fearlessly expressed, and I ask no favor of any man who differs with me. It is my privilege to express my opinion here and elsewhere, although I may differ with the greater lights of the Convention. Whether my opinions meet the approval of other members of the Convention or not, I have the satisfaction of knowing that I have not acted in a spirit of hostility towards any man, and where there is an honest difference of opinion there is no occasion for offense. But let me say to you, that if this Constitution goes out to the people containing a clause which prohibits the people themselves through the Legislature from making contracts, borrowing money, &c., when they may deem it proper to do so, my word for it it will meet with opposition.

A VOICE. That provision is the very glory of the instrument.

MR. KELSO. Gentlemen may think it will save it, but I can assure them it will not. Another thing is, the people are prohibited from even arranging or managing their country funds to suit themselves—they are not permitted to transact the smallest matter that has connection with the management of their own money. Such provisions are extremely illiberal, and indeed such is the general character of the instrument—it is illiberal in the extreme. But as to this being the slaughter house of members of this body, it is all a mistake. It is natural enough for men to do what has been done here; it is for them to endeavor to make themselves popular. I would not want a better hobby than this, if I desired to secure for myself a seat in the Legislature permanently. If I had no higher aspirations, I should wish for nothing better than to go before the people with the amendments that have been made to the Constitution.

Mr. BORDEN. What is the proposition before the Convention?

A VOICE. Oh, nothing at all.

[Calls for "GREGG, GREGG."]

Mr. GREGG. I do not know, Mr. President, what is the particular subject now before the Convention. But as this appears to be a kind of general class meeting, in which members are expected to relate their experience, and give in their adhesion to the forthcoming Constitution in advance, it may be expected that Jefferson county should respond on this occasion. I have been waiting to hear from my colleagues on this subject, but as they appear to remain silent, I feel as though I ought to say something. And I feel this necessity the more, as it was intimated to me on yesterday, by a very respected friend of mine in this body, that I was understood to be opposed to the adoption of the new Constitution by the people, and that I was going home to take the stump against it. I take this occasion to say to you, sir, and to this Convention, that the intimation is wholly gratuitous and without the least foundation, as I have never entertained any such intention. It is true there are some provisions that do not entirely meet my approbation, but taking the instrument as a whole, I am satisfied with it, and so I believe are my colleagues, as well as my constituents.

Something has been said about the assiduity with which the members of this Convention have devoted themselves to their public labors during our long protracted session. Now, this is all well enough. To be sure I have heard it intimated that Jefferson county was not always at her post, and that she was not always fully represented upon this floor. But no one here, I apprehend, will give ear to such an unjust and unmerited imputation.

[Cries of "No! no! Certainly not."]

And again, I have heard it more than insinuated, that in regard to certain leading questions, the members from Jefferson—

"Have wired in and wirel out,
And left a body still in doubt,
Whether the snake that made the track,
Was going South, or coming back."

But this I regard as a slander upon myself and colleagues, as we claim to have been not only industrious and vigilant, but as uniformly consistent in all things.

Much has been said, too, about the intelligence and patriotism of the body, all which I am willing to endorse. But as has been remarked by others, heretofore, I am not one of those who believe that all intelligence, patriotism and public virtue will evaporate and expire with the dissolution of this body. I believe there will still be found among this people enough of general intelligence already salted away for future use, without making any very extensive drafts upon this body. I believe there will still be found among the people a little germ of patriotism and public virtue, that shall live and flourish in perennial verdure, long after the principal actors in this Convention shall have gone down politically to the tomb of the Capulets, and been forgotten. With these remarks, I will detain the Convention no longer.

Mr. BORDEN. I hope the Convention will consent to have the new Constitution printed in all the papers of the State, and I think we could not adopt a better course to disseminate a knowledge of its provisions among the people of the State. And, I think that we ought to allow to those newspapers a reasonable compensation. I will state that in Michigan, the Convention there passed a resolution requesting each newspaper in the State to print the amended Constitution, and to publish it in successive issues of their paper, and for doing so, they were allowed twenty dollars each.

In regard to the number of copies which should be printed in the German language, I trust the largest number proposed will be agreed on. There is a large number of Germans in the section of the State in which I reside. I think that at least fifteen thousand copies should be printed in that language. It appears to me that this is due to those persons who have been admitted to the rights of citizenship, and who cannot write or speak the English language. But it is also due to those who by this Convention, may be admitted to the rights of voters.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was decided in the negative.

The question being on the adoption of the amendment, it was concurred in.

The question then being on the adoption of the resolution as amended,

Mr. DOBSON. It does seem to me that the amendment which has been adopted requiring the Debates to be distributed equally among the members, ought to have included a provision directing the distribution to be made at the same time that the laws and journals of the Legislature are distributed.

Mr. WALPOLE. I move to amend the resolution so as to direct the Secretary of State, immediately on the publication of the Constitution, to cause them to be disturbed.

Mr. PEPPER of Crawford. I will state that there is a way by which we can get these documents earlier than the time when the laws are distributed. In the month of March, the Treasurers of the several counties have to come up here to make their reports, and it will be an easy matter for them to convey to each county the number of copies that belong to each and distribute them there.

Mr. WALPOLE modified his amendment so as to direct the Secretary of State to forward to each member of the Convention copies of the Constitution, by such facilities as he may see fit to adopt.

The amendment as modified, was adopted.

Mr. LOCKHART moved to strike out five thousand in German, and insert fifteen thousand. Sir, five thousand will do but little good; there are at least six thousand reading Germans in the judicial circuit in which I reside, but few of whom can read English. I desire to lay the Constitution before them in a language which they fully understand.

Mr. BRIGHT. We are not doing much just now, and there is business to be done by a select committee; therefore, I move that the Convention adjourn. But first, I will say in reference to the printing of the new Constitution in pamphlet form, or otherwise, I think it is a thing that can be provided for at a less expense by the Legislature. It may be provided, no doubt, that the Constitution shall be printed in the three principal newspapers in Indianapolis, and through them be communicated to all parts of the State.

Mr. HAMILTON. I hope it will be printed in a separate form. I am somewhat surprised to hear the suggestions of the gentleman from Jefferson, that he would be in favor of leaving it to be provided for by the Legislature. It is perfectly obvious, I think, that we ought not to leave to them any thing that we can do ourselves. They have kept up a constant series of attacks upon us ever since their session commenced. I have no hesitation in saying that if we do not provide for the publication and distribution of the Constitution ourselves we have not done our duty. We owe it to ourselves to take care that this matter be not neglected, as it certainly will be if left to the Legislature.

Mr. KENT. I will state for the information of the Convention that this very question of printing has been before the Legislature, and they decided to leave it in the hands of the Convention. We would, at all events, unquestionably have the power to authorize the printing and distribution; and it is right that we should direct this matter ourselves.

Mr. WATTS. I am sorry to see my friend from Allen so sensitive on the subject of the action of the Legislature. When he comes to reflect that some members of that body have offered petitions, and moved that they be read a second time now, it should be a sufficient apology for them, and the gentleman should let them pass without further notice, unless we say in the language of Scripture—"Oh Lord forgive them, they know not what they do."

Mr. WALPOLE. I hope the Convention will adjourn so that the select committee will have an opportunity to perform their work.

A MEMBER. The resolution is not yet adopted.

The PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs the Chair that there is nothing more on the files.

Mr. WALPOLE. I was about remarking that there is a committee of ten appointed to report in reference to the time and manner in which the Constitution shall be submitted. I hope that committee will act to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. In reference to the printing and distribution of the Constitution it is a matter that is going to be attended with a great deal of expense, and it will require some consideration. I think the Convention had better let the resolution lie over until to-morrow.

The question being taken on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment, it was decided in the affirmative.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment as amended, and it was decided in the negative.

The question recurring on the adoption of the resolution as amended,

Mr. CLEMENTS moved to amend by adding the words—

"In proportion to the number of voters in each county."

The reason (said Mr. C.) why I propose the amendment is this: I contend that the people are not equally represented here. I represent two thousand voters, whilst some gentlemen here represent but a thousand or eight hundred. If the copies of the Constitution are to be distributed in proportion to the representation on this floor, my people will not get their share.

A DELEGATE. I will give you some of mine.

Mr. CLEMENTS. We do n't want yours, we want our own. All that I ask is that there may be something like an equal distribution, so that all the voters of each county may be supplied.

Mr. KENT demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded by the Convention, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Davies,

It was decided in the negative.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WATTS, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That each surviving member of the Convention of 1816, be tendered a copy of the Debates and of the Journal of the Convention."

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. BRIGHT moved that the Convention adjourn.

The Convention refused to adjourn.

Mr. HITT. I have been extremely anxious to have one copy of the Debates and Proceedings of the Convention deposited in the library of each county; and, with the permission of the Convention, I will offer the following:

Resolved, That one of the three copies of the Debates, &c., directed to be deposited in the office of the clerk of each county, be sent to the county libraries of such counties."

Mr. PETTIT. I want the attention of the Convention for one moment. We are not doing any good here, but are merely wasting our time with these resolutions, and there are three or four important matters yet to be attended to by committees, beside what has to be done by the committee on revision. A committee has been announced this morning that is to take an important subject under consideration. We ought to adjourn and allow those committees to meet, for they will not meet unless the Convention adjourn. I move, therefore, that the Convention adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and,

The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mr. MORRISON of Washington asked leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the State University, New Albany College, Vincennes University, the University of Notre Dame Du Lac, Asbury University, Wabash College, Hanover College, Franklin College, and the North Western University, are each hereby presented through the Secretary of State, on the requisition of their President, with three copies of the Debates, and three copies of the Journal of this Convention, one copy of each for the use of the libraries of said institutions; and one copy of each for the use of the libraries of the literary societies connected therewith; and one copy to each of the States of the Union.

The order of business was suspended and the resolution having been read,

Mr. SHOUP moved to amend so as to distribute one copy to each of the States of the Union.

Mr. MORRISON accepted the amendment.

Mr. KENT moved to amend by inserting "New Albany College."

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Floyd.

Mr. COLFAX. I wish to draw the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is a college in St. Joseph county, at South Bend.

Mr. LOCKHART moved to include "Vincennes University."

Mr. HAWKINS. I move to insert "Fort Wayne College."

Mr. PETTIT. I am afraid we are attempting to imitate Satan, when he took our Savior to the Mount and promised that he would give him all the kingdoms of the world, which lay spread out before him, if he would fall down and worship him. But he was replied to, I believe, that it was none of his to give—that he did not own a foot of it. [Much laughter.]

[Cries of "Try it again."]

[Prolonged laughter.]

Mr. PETTIT. Let the storm calm a little, then I will try it again. [Applause.]

I am afraid, sir, to speak a little more seriously, that we are occupying time in attempting to give that which does not belong to us—we are proposing to give away to those institutions things that are not ours—things over which we have no rightful control. Upon the completion of our work here, we are directed by law, to deposit the result of that work, with a copy of the proceedings of this body, in the office of the Secretary of State. We have nothing more to do with them—it is for those who come after us to say what disposition shall be made of them. I believe that the distribution of our proceedings is a thing we ought not to undertake. We have incurred large expenses, it is true—more, perhaps, than was absolutely necessary, although I am not disposed to cavil about a small expenditure, if we make the proper return by framing a good Constitution. But, I think, we ought not to go to such an extent as it is proposed we shall, in printing, binding, publishing, distributing these documents—it appears to my mind that it would be wrong. Let these institutions come up to the Legislature and ask for a copy, if they want one; or let the Legislature voluntarily distribute them in such a manner as they may see fit. Unless some gentleman desires to make further remarks, I will move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. NEWMAN. A single word, if you please. This resolution may succeed indeed I think it very probable that it will; and for the purpose of making it a little larger, I will move to add the words "the White Water Female College."

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. It was not the design of the mover of the resolution to embrace the female colleges. The object of this resolution was to place the book within the reach of the young men of the State. It is known to every gentleman who understands anything of the organization of colleges, that the young men connected with them, are divided into two literary societies; and they must know, also, that those young men will draw largely from these Debates for subjects of discussion in their societies. And, in order to enlist their sympathies, I think we could not do better than to give the small donations here proposed, to these institutions.

Mr. SPANN. If we have to go the whole figure, and have the means, I would entertain no objection that all these institutions should be included. But while I have no desire to prevent the journals of our proceedings and debates from being laid before the people everywhere, yet I must say to the gentleman that I have no inclination to make a bid for the sympathies of the students of any institution. As the gentleman from Tippecanoe says, I think we are about to give away that which is not ours to give, and what our Secretary tells us to-day, we actually have not; for there will not be a sufficient number to supply all these requisitions. I really cannot see the propriety of our being so very liberal in offering them to literary institutions—they may purchase copies if they want them.

Mr. SHOUP. I think the Clerk announced this morning, that there were about two hundred copies yet undisposed of. I would prefer that the disposition now proposed, should be made of them, than any other that can be suggested.

The PRESIDENT (Mr. McFarland temporarily occupying the Chair). The Chair would state that since the announcement, that there were two hundred copies remaining, one copy has been voted to each member of the Legislature, and one to each of the survivors of the Constitution of 1816.

The SECRETARY. There are yet about a hundred copies remaining.

Mr. KENT. I move to strike out the copies proposed to be given to the several States of the Union.

Mr. BASCOM. I have an amendment that I wish to offer. If this resolution is going to pass, I desire that my county shall not be overlooked. Although we have not gotten a college, yet we have a high school; and I am opposed to this system that seeks to prevail on all occasions, of fostering colleges at the expense of the smaller institutes of learning.

Mr. MORRISON of Marion moved that the amendments be laid upon the table.

Mr. WATTS. I move to amend the motion by including the resolution.

A division of the question was asked for, and, the question being first upon laying the amendments on the table, it was decided in the affirmative.

The question then being upon laying the original resolution on the table, it was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution and amendments were laid upon the table.

Mr. OWEN, from the committee on revision, made a report: He explained the verbal alterations that had been made by the committee, and,

On motion by Mr. PETTIT,
The report was concurred in.

Mr. KILGORE moved that the rules be suspended in order to enable him to introduce the following resolution:

“Resolved, That any member of this Convention, who may have on hand a written speech, or who may desire to prepare one, shall have the privilege of publishing the same in the book of Debates.

[Cries of “No, no, no.”]

A single remark (said Mr. Kilgore). I have no written speech on hand; and, sir—

Mr. PETTIT (without rising from his seat). The question upon suspending the rules, is not debatable.

Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman cannot object without addressing the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETTIT (rising). I hope the gentleman will permit me to explain.

Mr. KILGORE. It is not debatable. [Renewed laughter.]

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules, and it was decided in the negative.

So the rules were not suspended.

Mr. MOORE moved a suspension of the rules in order to enable him to introduce a resolution.

The Convention refused to suspend the rules.

Mr. PETTIT. I am satisfied that no good can result from our remaining here. I believe that there is no report to be made from any committee. I think then we had better adjourn.

Mr. COLFAX. I have a request to make of the Convention. I was appointed on the committee of one from each Congressional district, to prepare an address to the people of the State, relative to the Constitution; but circumstances of an imperative character require that I should leave town to-morrow; I, therefore, ask leave to be excused from serving on that committee.

The gentleman was excused.

Mr. PETTIT. There are two committees that have important business before them, neither of which is prepared to report. There is one committee now out—or they ought to be—attending to their committee business in reference to submitting this Constitution to a vote of the people, and regulating the time when the Governor, and other officers, shall be elected. And, sir, there is another committee which has had an important subject submitted to it—and it must be apparent that this Convention can do no profitable business this afternoon—and as it may be reasonably expected that at the next meeting of the Convention, these committees will be prepared to report, I move you, therefore, that the Convention adjourn.

The PRESIDENT. Before the question on the motion of the gentleman from Tippecanoe is put, the Chair would appoint the gentleman from Laporte (Mr. Niles) to act as a member of the committee, which has been appointed to prepare an address to the people relative to the new Constitution, in the place of the gentleman from St. Joseph (Mr. Colfax) who has been excused from attendance.

The question being put on the motion of the gentleman from Tippecanoe, it was decided in the affirmative;

And then the Convention adjourned.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1851.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. CRESSY.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. OWEN made a report from the committee on revision.

The report having been read, and the changes in the phraseology pointed out and explained by the chairman of the committee, (Mr. Owen,) it was concurred in.

Mr. KELSO. I am about to ask a favor of the Convention, viz.: to be permitted to introduce a resolution.

[Cries of "Read it! Read it!"]

I will do so. It is merely to supply a mistake or an omission in a resolution adopted yesterday. We passed a resolution on yesterday, allowing each member of the General Assembly, a copy of the Debates and Proceedings. That was very right and proper. The custom has been, however, in such cases, that the officers of the legislative body should also be complimented in the same manner. I now take occasion to say that there are some four or five door-keepers to the Convention, and I will venture to say that they have been as faithful in the discharge of their duties, as have been the members of the General Assembly, or of this Convention, and it is due to them that they should each have a copy.

Mr. PETTIT (without rising from his seat). Certainly, there is no objection to it.

The order of business was suspended, and the resolution having been read,

Mr. MORRISON of Washington moved to amend by adding "and that one copy of the Debates and of the Journal of the Convention, be presented by the Secretary of State, to each of the colleges in the State."

This, he remarked, would only require about seven or eight copies.

Mr. KELSO. I am very much inclined to think that it is a good amendment. The students in these institutions will take a great deal of interest in reading the debates.

The question being taken on the adoption of the amendment, it was decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BASCOM moved to amend by adding "one copy to the Bluffton High School."

Mr. GORDON moved that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendment was accordingly laid upon the table,

The question being on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MOORE inquired whether the door-keepers of the Legislature were included.

Mr. KELSO. Certainly; that is the intention.

Mr. MOORE. Then I move to strike out that part of the resolution.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to know whether the proposition of the gentleman from Switzerland includes the Stenographer?

Mr. KELSO. Certainly; he is an officer of the Convention.

Mr. PETTIT. The Stenographer ought, of course, to be included; although I maintain he is not an officer of the Convention.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to amend the resolution by inserting the words "Lawrenceburg Literary Institution."

It will be observed (said Mr. H.) that the resolution in its present shape, has reference to incorporated colleges. I wish to state to the Convention, that Lawrenceburg Literary Institution is not incorporated, yet it is as creditable a literary institution as the State of Indiana can boast of; and there are as many young men there receiving a course of instruction as in any educational institution in Indiana. I hope that gentlemen remembering that a very large section of the State of Indiana is immediately identified with the members of that Institution, will not object to this amendment. I understand that the number of the students in that institution exceeds the number in any other institution in the State, by at least fifty.

Mr. EDMONSTON. Sir, it seems to me that if we undertake to give to all the literary institutions of the State, we shall be obliged to give to all the common schools; and we shall not have a sufficient number of copies for that purpose. Then I say, if we give to any, give to those which are incorporated. If the others want them, let them purchase copies. They have the same opportunity to buy the book that the common schools have. I trust the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. WALPOLE. Before we make these donations, we ought to understand what will be the cost of these Debates and Journals. The other day I took up a newspaper published in Madison, in which I saw an article stating that there would be two volumes of Debates, costing fifteen dollars a set. If this be the case, it will cost rather too much, if we undertake to make so large a distribution; and this is not a time when we should be liberal in expenditures. It appears that there is not enough of money even to pay the per diem of members. As to that part of the proposition which proposes to give copies to the officers and door-keepers of the General Assembly, I move to strike it out.

Mr. FOSTER. Will a further amendment be in order?

The PRESIDENT. It is in order to amend the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to furnish one copy to the "Bloomington Female Academy," and as the gentleman from Washington objects to giving copies to institutions not incorporated, I will inform him that this institution is incorporated.

A VOICE. But it is not a college.

Mr. FOSTER (without noticing the interruption). I will further remark, while I am up, that I cannot coincide with the gentleman from Switzerland. It does appear to me that we are going beyond our depth.

And, sir, I think that when we have given copies to the members of the Legislature—and bye the bye we are not under much obligation to them—I think we have gone far enough without giving copies to their door-keepers, some fourteen or fifteen, perhaps, in number.

Voting copies of the work to the member of the Legislature is one thing, and voting copies to the door-keepers of that body and of this, is quite a different thing. The position which the members of the legislative body, and of this, occupy is entirely different from that which the subordinate officers of those bodies occupy. I think, as I said before, that we have gone quite far enough already.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is requested to remark that if the resolution be not extended, the number of copies which have been ordered will supply the requisition of the resolution.

Mr. MILLIGAN. With the permission of the House, and particularly of the gentleman from Monroe, (Mr. Foster,) I will move that one copy be presented to Fanny Lee Townsend. ["Consent! consent!"]

Mr. KELSO. I have a word to say in reply to the very sensitive gentleman from Monroe, who is very much alarmed about giving a copy of the Debates to the assistant door-keepers. He seems to apprehend that it will put them on a par with ourselves—he seems to think it will be a letting down of our dignity. Now, I undertake to say these men who have bestowed their labor, who have devoted their attention to the wants of members of this Convention, are as good as we are—the gentleman from Monroe not excepted. They have been very attentive, and have discharged their duties as faithfully as have the members of the Convention discharged theirs. And, sir, is it possible that the poor fact of our having a certificate of election as delegates to this Convention, should place us so far above those by whom we were elected. The gentleman from Monroe would place us so high in the scale of dignity that we cannot see those by whom we are surrounded.

[Cries of "Let him have it! Let him have it!"]

Mr. KELSO. He fancies himself so far in the ascending scale that he does not remember the level from which he rose.

A VOICE. Hit him again.

Mr. KELSO. I have made no speech that I am unwilling that the doorkeepers should read. I have made no speech that I am not willing that my constituents shall read, and their wives, and their neighbors' wives shall read. If the gentleman can prevail on a majority of this body to refuse this small acknowledgment of our appreciation of the value of the attention of those who have labored faithfully in our service, let him do so. If he fears that his dignity will suffer let him withhold this expression of his acknowledgment of these services. For myself, I have no hesitation in saying that I feel under an obligation to those who have attended to our wishes, and administered to our wants, during the whole course of the sitting of this Convention. I think it would be pitiful economy on our part to withhold so slight a token of our good wishes towards those who have served us faithfully.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman has spoken so loud that my ears are pained. (A laugh.)

Mr. FOSTER. We all know that it is characteristic of the gentleman from Switzerland to speak in very emphatic language to the last. I am much obliged to him. He has treated me much better than I expected from him. Now I made the remark most distinctly, and I do it with pleasure at all times, that I recognize all my fellow-citizens as being on a par with myself. I esteem no man worse than myself; but I do say and I reiterate that there is a difference in the official stations that individuals hold. And, while I have no objection whatever that the regular officers of the Convention shall have a copy of the Debates, I do object to distributing them among the inferior officers of the Legislature. And, sir, I object also to the distribution of the Debates, &c., among the appointees of our Doorkeeper. I believe he had about nine assistants at the start; how many he has now God only knows; and while we have refused to give copies to the literary institutions of the State, when those copies would have been read by hundreds, we at the same time propose to give a copy to each of the assistant doorkeepers of the Convention and the Legislature, without inquiring even how many there may be who may claim a copy, under the designation of "assistant doorkeeper". Sir, we are all on an equality, politically speaking. As the gentleman intimates, we shall be before the people next August: I wish to God we were before the people now. I am willing to meet him before the people, and I shall show where that gentleman stands. But aside from all this, while we are giving to all the Assistant Doorkeepers of the Convention, and of the General Assembly, why is it that we are refusing to the Secretary and Assistant Secretaries of this Convention. If it be refused to them, certainly we have no apology for giving to the others. I want to make no invidious distinctions. I say again, and in saying it I do not assume to myself any dignity or superiority, but I do say that when an individual is elected to office, as, for instance, the Governor of the State, or a Judge, or a Representative of the people in the Legislature or in this Convention, they are officially, and I do not hesitate to proclaim it, above those who merely wait upon them.

Mr. PRATHER. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. PRESIDENT. There is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

Mr. WOLFE demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Jay,

It was decided in the negative.

The question recurred on the amendment of the gentleman from Dearborn, (Mr. Holman.)

It was decided in the negative.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution, it was, on a division—ayes 41, noes 38—decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. McCLELLAND. It is for the first time—or, perhaps, it may be for the second time—that I have had occasion to ask the indulgence of this body since its session commenced. I should like to have the order of business suspended for the purpose of enabling me to offer a resolution. I should not offer this resolution, were it not from the fact that I was precluded by the previous question from offering an amendment containing the same in substance. My resolution provides that certain clerks, and other officers, shall have copies of the Debates and Journal of the Constitution. Now, sir, I want the Debates and Journal to be distributed as widely as possible; and I believe it is false economy to restrict the number of copies. Although I am in favor of keeping our expenditures within reasonable bounds, yet I think there is no necessity for economizing in a matter where the people will derive more advantage from the expenditure of a small sum of money, than can accrue to them in other instances from the expenditure of a large amount. I move, sir, to suspend the rules for the purpose of enabling me to introduce the resolution to which I have adverted.

The question being taken on suspending the rules,

It was decided in the negative.

So the rules were not suspended.

Mr. OWEN from the committee on revision made a report.

The report was read, and the changes which had been made by the committee in the phraseology of the sections were pointed out and explained by the Chairman.

The question being,

"Shall the report be concurred in?"

Mr. DOBSON suggested an amendment for the sake of uniformity so as to make the provision relating to the continuance in office of all officers until their successors were elected and qualified.

Mr. PETTIT. That will be provided for in a general section in the schedule.

Mr. NAVE. I move that the report of the committee be concurred in, with the following amendment in the section which relates to the appointment of commissioners to revise, abridge, and simplify the rules, practice, pleadings, and forms of the courts of the State, to strike out "shall" and insert "may."

The section is as follows:

"SECTION 19. The General Assembly, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide for the appointment of three Commissioners, whose duty it shall be to revise, abridge, and simplify the rules, practice, pleadings, and forms of the Courts of this State. And they shall provide for abolishing the distinct forms of action at law now in use; and that justice shall be administered in a uniform mode of pleading without any distinction between law and equity. And the General Assembly may also make it the duty of said Commissioners to reduce into a systematic code, the general statute law of this State; and said Commissioners shall, from time to time, report the result of their labors to the General Assembly, with such recommendations and suggestions as to abridgement and amendment as to said Commissioners may seem necessary. Provision shall be made by law, for filling vacancies, regulating the tenure of office, and the compensation of said Commissioners.

I wish to make one remark in reference to this section. If it be necessary that such a provision should be made at all, I think it should be imperative. Such men as the Legislature will select for the purpose of doing this business—if they are, as it is presumed they will be, sensible men—should be permitted to exercise a discretion as to how far it is necessary to go, and how far they may go without doing injustice to the country; and they should be at liberty to omit doing anything, if, in their judgment, it should appear to be unnecessary. But, if you declare that it shall be done, they must necessarily make the change whether it be right or wrong.

Mr. OWEN. I will merely say that when the Convention was full, it was decided by a deliberate vote that this provision should be imperative, and I think it would be wrong to reverse that decision now.

Mr. GIBSON. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know whether we can make the change proposed by the gentleman from Hendricks—whether we can change a matter of substance at this stage of our proceedings?

Mr. PETTIT. It is the very gist of the thing; it is a matter of substance.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the only way in which it can be done is to go back and re-consider the vote by which the section was passed, and that, by a resolution which has been adopted, will require a vote of three-fourths.

The question being put upon concurring in the report of the committee,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the report was concurred in.

Mr. OWEN. I will state to the Convention that the committee on revision will be prepared to make another report at 2 o'clock P. M. to-day.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is important that we should prepare for our transition from the old to the new government. I do not know whether the committee, of which the gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole) is chairman,—and, by the way, I do not now see him in his place—have prepared a schedule; and as no report has been made from that committee, I ask leave to offer the following.

The PRESIDENT. It will not be in order for the gentleman to introduce his proposition unless the Convention rescind the resolution that has been adopted relative to the introduction of new matter.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. I move that the rules be rescinded.

Mr. PETTIT. We shall necessarily have to do this work. We cannot put the Constitution in operation without it. I do not see why we may not suspend the rules, and act upon the proposition of the gentleman from Jefferson.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that it is not a suspension of the rules, but the rescinding of a resolution, that is requisite; and that may be done by a bare majority.

The question was put upon rescinding the resolution, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. BRIGHT sent up his proposition, and it was read by the Secretary.

That no inconvenience may arise from the changes in the Constitution of this State, it is hereby declared and ordained:

First. The laws in force at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, and not repugnant thereto, shall remain in full force until they expire by their own limitation, or are altered or repealed. And all suits, prosecutions, claims, and rights, now pending or existing, shall continue, and may be proceeded upon as if no change had taken place. The several courts, except as herein otherwise provided, shall continue with the like powers and jurisdiction as if this Constitution had not been adopted.

Second. The first election for Governor and Lieutenant Governor, Judges of the Supreme and Circuit Courts, Clerk of the Supreme Court, and Prosecuting Attorneys, Secretary, Treasurer, and Auditor of State, and State Superintendent of public institutions, under this Constitution, shall be held on the second Monday of October, 1852; and such of said officers as are or may be in office when this Constitution goes into effect, shall continue in their places until said second Monday in October, 1852, and until their successors are elected and qualified, unless superseded by law.

Third. This Constitution, if adopted, shall go into effect on the first day of November, 1851.

Fourth. Senators now in office, and holding over under existing organization, and such as may be elected at the next general election, and the Representatives then elected, shall continue in office until the second Monday in October, 1852.

Fifth. There shall be a session of the General Assembly commencing on the first Monday in December, 1851.

Sixth. The first general election under this Constitution shall be held on the first Tuesday of October, 1852; and the first regular biennial session of the General Assembly shall be held in 1853, commencing after the first Monday of January of said year.

Seventh. Vacancies that may occur in offices now existing, prior to the first general election, shall be filled in the same manner as is now prescribed by law.

Eighth. On the taking effect of the Constitution all officers then in office shall, before proceeding in the further discharge of their duties, take an oath to support the Constitution.

Ninth. No article or sections of this Constitution shall be submitted separately to a vote of the people otherwise than in this Constitution provided.

Mr. BRIGHT moved that the sections be read a second time now.

The motion was agreed to, and the sections were accordingly read a second time.

The question being on their engrossment, Mr. BRIGHT moved that the sections be referred to a select committee of three.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. I move that they be referred to the same select committee which already had the subject in charge.

The PRESIDENT. There is no such committee.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. I would like to make a few remarks, then, on the motion of the gentleman.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman has a right to do so.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. There was a committee appointed yesterday to whom this matter was referred; that committee met and deliberated, and are about to present a report. In the mean time the gentleman from Jefferson, who is a member of that committee, in advance of the report brings in a proposition, which is designed to supersede the report of the committee. Now, sir, before acting upon the gentleman's proposition, I should like to have the report of the committee brought in; and in order that we may have the report of the committee laid before us in the first instance, I move that the proposition be laid on the table. [Cries of "no, no."] I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and, being taken, there were, yeas 27, nays 82 :

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Beard, Clements, Cole, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Dick, Foster, Frisbie, Gootee, Hall, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Kilgore, Maguire, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Moore, Nave, Newman, Thomas, Todd, and Watts—27.

NAYS.—Messrs. Allen, Bascom, Biddle, Blythe, Borden, Bourne, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Chenowith, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Coats, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Helmer, Hogin, Hovey, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Niles, Nofsinger, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Schoonover, Shannon, Sherrod, Shoup, Snook, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Stevenson, Tague, Thornton, Wallace, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, Zenor, and Mr. President—82.

So the section was not laid on the table.

The question then being on referring the sections to a select committee of three,

Mr. FOSTER. I move that these sections be referred, with instructions.

The PRESIDENT. There is a motion to commit already pending.

Mr. FOSTER. But I wish to amend that motion.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman cannot make that motion to amend.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I suppose I can talk awhile?

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman can speak for five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well, sir. It appears that the gentleman from Jefferson has introduced this proposition on his own responsibility.

I understand that a select committee has been appointed, and that they have deliberated and directed their chairman to make a report, but he has not as yet made it. And it appears there is considerable incongruity, I understand, between the report that has been agreed upon by the committee, and the proposition that is here introduced. It appears, from intimations which have heretofore been thrown out, that the Constitution is to be submitted to the people in August; and that those officers who shall be then elected, shall retain their offices until the following year. And although this Constitution is to go into operation next October, yet those individuals thus elected to office, members of the General Assembly and others, while they shall have been elected under the provisions of the old Constitution are nevertheless to serve under the new.

A VOICE. That is right.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it does appear to me that we are making an invidious distinction between different classes of officers. Now, sir, I believe the Convention has the power to declare when the Constitution shall be submitted to the people. There has been no instance, that I have been aware of, where a State Convention, assembled for the purpose of forming a Constitution, has not prescribed the time when that Constitution so formed, shall be submitted to the people; and I find that the law itself, under which we are assembled, gives us this power. I do not know that the Legislature has the authority or power, even according to their own enactment, to designate the time when the Constitution shall be submitted, although they are entitled to prescribe the manner in which it shall be submitted. We have the power to fix the time, and we ought to exert it; and it is a usurpation on the part of the Legislature to undertake to dictate to us in regard to this matter. We are the representatives of the people of this State. We reflect, or should do so, the will of the people, as does the Legislature, and we have been elected for this express purpose. I repeat, sir, we have the power, and we ought to exercise it.

There seems to be considerable incongruity in this respect; this Constitution is to go into effect in October, and the Senators will hold over until 1853. Why, sir, when the people determined to call this Convention, did they suppose that a portion of the officers of the State would remain in office two years after the adoption of the new Constitution? No, sir; and here let me remark, that the Constitution of Kentucky was submitted to the people within four months after it was formed, and it was ratified by a majority of more than fifty thousand votes. And, I do not hesitate to say—without instituting any invidious comparison—that ours is not only equal, but I think superior, to the Constitution of Kentucky. I will say further, sir, that the people of Indiana are not only as intelligent, but as far as my observation extends, they are far in advance of their neighbors in point of intelligence.

Mr. PETTIT. I certainly desire to be correct at the conclusion, if I have not been during the former part of our session. Every one must admit that this is a work which cannot be rejected. We must observe some order and propriety, it is true, in our proceedings, and if there were a question of principle involved in it, I would not yield for a moment to depart from a rule of established usage; but this is a mere question of expediency and accommodation. The gentleman from Jefferson has had leave granted him, almost by unanimous consent, to introduce his proposition. And now let me say, for there is no use in disguising it, and if there was any attempt at disguise I would have no part in it, there has been a free conference between members of the Convention and members of the Legislature in relation to the time at which the Constitution shall be submitted, and they have, in a spirit of accommodation, by concessions on both sides, arrived at a determination which I think will be perfectly satisfactory to all parties. The plan determined upon receives the almost unanimous approbation of all the members of the Legislature who are in favor of the new Constitution. It is, that the Constitution shall be submitted to a vote of the people at the August election, with the condition that those Senators who have one year more to serve, shall not be displaced until the expiration of their term of office. And, sir, I would further remark, that this schedule was drawn up to suit the wishes of a majority of the Legislature. A motion is made to refer it to a select committee. In the mean time the other report can come in and be printed; but the proposition it contains to submit the Constitution in June next, will not, in my opinion, meet the approbation of the Legislature. And let me say that it would be highly injurious to have a misunderstanding with them, and that we should go home with feelings embittered against each other, representing us we do the same constituency. Let us lay aside little differences, while no principle is surrendered, so as to meet them in a spirit of accommodation, and everything may be satisfactorily adjusted.

I do not think there is any necessity for referring this matter to a committee. It appears to me that there ought to be no hesitation in adopting the proposition at once.

Mr. DOBSON. There seems to be a slight misapprehension in regard to this matter. The taking effect of the Constitution will be the same at whatever time it will be submitted. The next Legislature will meet after the Constitution shall have gone into effect. Now, sir, one word in regard to the feeling which exists amongst the members of the Legislature towards this body. If there is any one thing that I am proud of, it is that the Convention has pursued "the even tenor of its way," without showing a disposition to have a quarrel with the Legislature. We have gone on in good faith and have nearly completed our labors, and now it is for the Legislature to pass the necessary laws to carry into effect the Constitution that we have formed. If they are desirous of postponing its submission to the people, let them postpone it in their own good time; and if they do not take that course which is best calculated to advance the interests of the country, let them be responsible.

Pending the question to refer the subject to a select committee,

On motion by Mr. PETTIT,
The Convention adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the select committee to whom was referred the schedule, reported back the sections in relation to the time the new Constitution is to go into effect; the provisions in relation to the election of Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and other State officers being substantially the same as introduced by him in the forenoon; which was concurred in.

Mr. CLEMENTS. It is not from any capricious motives that I oppose this report. It is true that on yesterday evening a majority of the select committee to whom was referred this matter, agreed upon such a section as I would have been willing to accept; but that report, from some reason or other, has not been made. Here we have a different one, in regard to which I must say, that before we adopt it we must make many changes.

Mr. PETTIT. All the change necessary to be made will consist of three words; and when that is made everything will go on as regular as clock-work.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I find, sir, that there are certain individuals here who appear desirous of governing and directing this whole matter. Sir, we are now asked, after adopting a stringent rule that no new measure should be adopted; and after a large number of members have left for home on the strength of that declaration, to adopt entirely new measures, in order to accommodate the wishes of a caucus which was held last evening of the members of the Legislature. I rose merely for the purpose of calling the attention of members to the change proposed to be made in this schedule—a change made in departure from the provisions on the same subject already adopted by the Constitution.

Mr. PETTIT. It has been found, Mr. President, in order to put the provisions just reported in operation, that there will be necessary to make but three changes in the Constitution as it now stands.

First, I would refer the Convention to page 17 of the reports of the committee on revision, arrangement, and phraseology, section third and line three, and I propose to strike out "first" and insert "second." It will be recollected by the Convention that the first provision now under consideration requires that the first session of the Legislature shall be held in December next—that will be a long session, but will not be the biennial session. It is provided that the first biennial session shall be held on the 1st of January, 1853, so that we will have two successive sessions, one next winter and one the winter following. Indeed this will be absolutely necessary.

On page 19 of the same report, there is another alteration necessary. In the third line of the sixth section, where it says that the first biennial session shall commence on the first Monday in January, strike out "two" and insert "three," so that the first biennial session will be held in 1853.

On page 27, section thirty-one, there is another alteration necessary in the first line. "The General Assembly, at its first meeting after the adoption of this Constitution," &c.; strike out "first" and insert "second."

Thus, in the adoption of this schedule only three alterations will be needed in the Constitution. And, sir, do the changes proposed involve any change of principle? Can those who have gone away and abandoned their duty, as I think they have, have any just cause of complaint? We introduce no new principle; we merely propose to make these alterations so that we may carry out the provisions of the schedule in harmonious connection with the Constitution. We must not allow ourselves to be laughed at, sir, for inconsistency. There is an absolute necessity for passing this schedule; and its adoption requires that these alterations should be made.

Mr. SMITH of Ripley. The gist of the matter is, Mr. President, by this schedule we are providing for an entire new session not contemplated in the provisions of the Constitution already passed. I would merely remark, that I regret that we were not able to carry out the provisions of the Constitution, and that there should exist any necessity for change in its provisions; however, for the purpose of harmony on this occasion, I am dumb. [Cries of "good," "good," "consent."]

Mr. WALPOLE. Mr. President, what is the question before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon engrossing the article reported by the gentleman from Jefferson (Mr. Bright).

Mr. WALPOLE. Any one can tell from the ear-marks of this report that it came from the gentleman from Jefferson. Upon yesterday this Convention appointed ten persons to take into consideration the subject matter reported upon in that report. All the members of this committee agreed, without any exception, that the present Governor and Senators elect should be superceded under the new Constitution. The Convention previously had adopted a rule requiring three-fourths of the members of this body to suspend the rules in order to receive an additional section; but this report of the select committee was received without a single dissenting voice. The section provided that the present Governor and State Senators should cease their offices from and after the second Tuesday of October next. The committee agreed to that section without a dissenting voice; and I was authorized to report it this morning, but upon conversation with the gentleman from Tippecanoe (Mr. Pettit) I agreed to postpone its presentation until two o'clock this afternoon. The gentleman from Jefferson, the moment the Convention was called to order this afternoon, got up and made his report.

Now, Mr. President, we are responsible for this Constitution. Although there are many things in it which I voted against, yet I feel as if my reputation was involved in it, and therefore it is that I do not desire to have it modified in the manner proposed. The gentleman from Jefferson has all along insisted that the Constitution ought not to go into force until the year 1853; now if there is anything in the present Constitution that I dislike, it is the surrender of sovereign power to corporations, and I do not want to see another session of the General Assembly in Indiana conferring sovereign power upon corporations, as they will do if this Constitution does not operate upon their action before 1853.

Mr. PETTIT. If the gentleman from Hancock will examine the articles of the schedule he will see that the next session of the General Assembly will be under the new Constitution, if it is adopted at the next August election.

Mr. WALPOLE. One of the objects for which this Convention was called, was to effect economy in the administration of our State Government. Now, sir, if we provide that a new session of the General Assembly shall be held, it will cost the State some fifty thousand dollars; and we are to incur this expense in order to accommodate the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, and some thirty-three Senators holding over. I cannot consent to it. Where there is a revolution in government, as the change of Constitution undoubtedly is, all officers go out with that revolution. This is the doctrine contended for by the gentleman from Tippecanoe, (Mr. Pettit,) as it is also advocated by some of the wisest and best legislators in the land. And yet, here, sir, you propose to retain men in power who, by force of revolution, go out of office. This is anti-republican.

I hope, sir, that we will, at the earliest possible hour, place this Constitution before the people for their action in regard to it.

The section which I am to report from the select committee provides that on the 1st Monday in June the Constitution shall be submitted to the people for their adoption or rejection, and if adopted, within thirty days after its adoption it shall be the Constitution of the land; that the Governor, on the second Monday in January, shall go out of office, and his successor be elected at the first election under this Constitution; and that all judges and officers of State shall be elected on the second Tuesday in October. I trust, sir, that what was done last night in caucus will not affect the members of this Convention. We are responsible to the people for our action, and no arrangements made out of this Hall should influence our action here.

Mr. DOBSON. There was nothing agreed upon out of this Hall.

Mr. WALPOLE. Well I have only to say there was a general expression of opinion a short time since in this body, in favor of fixing the time for the submission of the new Constitution to the people on the first Monday in June. I should like to know what has changed the opinion of gentlemen so suddenly, within a few hours, and whether that change has not resulted from some concerted plan of action?

Mr. OWEN. It strikes me that the gentleman from Daviess (Mr. Clements) and the gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole) seem both to have forgotten what we can, and what we cannot do. We cannot declare when this Constitution shall be submitted to the people, for if the Legislature fixes upon a different day from ours, that day of the Legislature over-rides ours. Here is the law on the subject:

"It shall be the duty of the said General Assembly to pass all laws necessary and proper for submitting the same to the qualified voters for their approval or rejection, and also for organizing the government under the amended Constitution, in case it should be adopted and ratified by such voters."

The first part of the section from which I have read, proposes that the new Constitution shall be submitted to the General Assembly at its next session. This provision was made on the supposition that we would conclude our labors before the commencement of the present session of the General Assembly. But any law passed by one General Assembly can be repealed by another, and the present General Assembly can repeal that law. I think, sir, myself, that those who made this Constitution should have the right to decide when it shall be submitted to the people; but the question is not what would have been best, but what really is to be done. It would be folly for us to stand up and oppose the Legislature when they have decided what is to be done, inasmuch as they have the power in their own hands and we have it not, as they took it away from us last winter.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The gentleman from Posey misapprehends the position I take. I do not deny the fact that the Legislature have the right to fix by law the time when this Constitution shall be submitted to the people, but I would ask whether this report does not fix the time, the first Monday in August?

The PRESIDENT. There is no day fixed at all for the submission of this Constitution to the people; there is only a day fixed when it shall go into effect if adopted.

Mr. CLEMENTS. We have formed our Constitution with the view of having it submitted at some early day, previous to the August election, to the people; and we have declared that the first session after its adoption shall be a long session, because in that session it will be requisite to conform our laws to the provisions of the new Constitution, which will be a work of great labor and occupy much time. Now what will be 'the effect of changing this principle? An apportionment takes place this coming winter, and many districts the terms of whose Senatorial Representatives will expire this fall, will be united with other districts, so that during this long session many of the districts will be represented in the Senate without having a vote; and that too, when one of the most important sessions of the General Assembly that has been held for years will take place under this Constitution. In this way Senators will represent counties that they have never been elected from, during this important session. If this is not changing a vital principle with reference to the right of suffrage, I know nothing about principle. And, sir, we are called upon to make this change when a portion of this body have left for home, supposing that no new measures would be introduced here.

Mr. WALPOLE. I move to amend, by striking out all in this article that relates to the election of Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Senators, &c., and inserting a provision that the election for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, &c., shall take place on the first Tuesday of October, eighteen hundred and fifty-one.

Sir, I earnestly desire that this election should take place in fifty-one instead of fifty-two; I am opposed to any postponement whatever. By postponing, sir, the adoption of this Constitution, we are only giving full opportunity to the enemies of this Constitution to rally while its friends are slumbering, not suspecting any danger. The friends of this Constitution may go home reposing upon the integrity of this Convention, and, when it is too late, they will find themselves in the back ground. This fact should be taken into serious consideration, and also the fact that by the present article we are legislating men into office, thus taking away from the people one of their vested rights.

Mr. EDMONSTON. I regret very much, Mr. President, to hear the charge made that the members of this Convention are actuated from improper influences, having their origin outside of this Hall. I cannot envy the feelings of any man who entertains such an opinion. No man who is a true representative of the people, would be influenced by any extraneous influences in his action; and the man who would suspicion others to be thus derelict to their duty, must himself be mean.

MR. WALPOLE. I had the information from the gentleman from Tippecanoe, that the Senators did not wish to go out of office, and it was not thought advisable to wound their feelings.

MR. EDMONSTON. Well, sir, we have here an article proposing to commence biennial sessions in eighteen hundred and fifty-three instead of eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and it will meet the expiration of the term of the Governor and of other officers. It is said that the State Senators have influenced the action of this body to adopt this provision. Now, sir, I hold in contempt any man who would attribute improper influences as operating upon the mind of any member of this body.

The gentleman from Hancock says that the delay in presenting this Constitution to the people will give time for a strong opposition to organize against it. I, sir, have no fears of its adoption. Let its enemies, if they choose, with the gentleman from Hancock at their head, organize themselves into an anti-Constitution party, and the friends of the Constitution will meet them on their own ground.

MR. MOWRER. I move the previous question.

Upon a division—ayes 45, noes 36—the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Hancock (Mr. Walpole).

Upon this question the yeas and nays were ordered, and having been taken the Secretary reported the following result—yeas 33, nays 72:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Ballingall, Beard, Brookbank, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Cole, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Davis of Parke, Farrow, Foster, Gibson, Hall, Hitt, Holman, Huff, Johnson of Dearborn, Kilgore, Maguire, Moore, Morgan, Nave, Newman, Prather, Smith of Ripley, Stevenson, Thornton, Todd, Walpole, and Zenor—33.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Bascom, Blythe, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Tippecanoe, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Hamilton, Harbolt, Hawkins, Helmer, Hogin, Hovey, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Read of Monroe, Ritchey, Schoonover, Sherrod, Shoup, Smith of Scott, Spann, Tague, Tannehill, Thomas, Wallace, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—72.

So the amendment was not adopted.

THE PRESIDENT. The question now is, Shall the article pass?

The yeas and nays were taken, with the following result:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Badger, Bascom, Blythe, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Bryant, Butler, Carr, Carter, Chapman, Clark of Hamilton, Clark of Tippecanoe, Cole, Cookerly, Davis of Parke, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmonston, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Frisbie, Gootee, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Gregg, Haddon, Hamilton, Harbolt, Helmer, Hogin, Hovey, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Jones, Kent, Kinley, Lockhart, Logan, March, Mathis, May, McClelland, McLean, Miller of Gibson, Milroy, Mooney, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Niles, Nofsinger, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Ritchey, Schoonover, Sherrod, Shoup, Smith of Ripley, Smith of Scott, Spann, Tague, Tannehill, Wallace, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Wunderlich, Yocum, and Mr. President—83.

NAYS.—Messrs. Ballingall, Brookbank, Clements, Davis of Madison, Dick, Foster, Gibson, Hall, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Kilgore, Maguire, Milligan, Moore, Morgan, Nave, Newman, Rariden, Read of Clark, Stevenson, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, and Walpole—25.

So the article passed.

MR. WALPOLE, from the select committee to whom was referred article sixty-six, reported the same back, with sundry modifications.

MR. PETTIT said that as the provisions of this article had been superseded by the article already adopted, he would move to lay it on the table.

MR. MORRISON of Marion offered a section providing that the official terms of Governor and Lieutenant Governor shall commence on Monday next succeeding the first Thursday in January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, and every four years thereafter.

Which was read three times, and passed.

Three reports from the committee on revision, arrangement, and phraseology, were then read, and concurred in by consent.

On motion,

The Convention adjourned.

~~~~~
SATURDAY, FEB. 8, 1851.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. ISENSEE.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDRESS TO THE ELECTORS.

MR. OWEN, from the select committee appointed to prepare an address to the electors of the State, explanatory of the provisions of the new Constitution, reported an Address, which had been unanimously adopted by the committee. On making this report,

MR. OWEN remarked, that it was due to one of the members of the committee, the gentleman from Laporte (Mr. Niles), who had been appointed in the place of the gentleman from St. Joseph (Mr. Colfax), to say that he had not been present at the meeting of the committee; and therefore, when it was stated that the Address was unanimously adopted, it should be understood as having been unanimously adopted by all the members of the committee who were then present, and all, with the exception of the gentleman from Laporte, were present.

The Address was then read by the Secretary. It is as follows :

ADDRESS TO THE ELECTORS.

MR. PRESIDENT :—The select committee appointed to prepare an address to the electors of the State, embodying a brief statement of the changes proposed in the amended Constitution, and such other matters in connection therewith as may aid in securing its adoption, have had the subject under consideration, and have unanimously instructed me to report, for adoption by the Convention, the following address to the people of the State of Indiana :

Chosen by the electors of the State of Indiana for the purpose of considering the present Constitution, and of proposing, for adoption or rejection, by the people, an amended Constitution, embodying such changes as we might deem proper, we have completed the task assigned us, and now lay before you the result of our labors.

The chief amendments which we have thought useful to make, are, briefly stated, as follows:

In addition to the guaranties which find a place in the old Constitution, to secure the rights of conscience and prevent the imposition, on the citizen, of any tax to support any ministry or mode of worship against his consent, it is provided, that no person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness in consequence of his opinions in matters of religion; and that no money shall be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious or theological institution. Both of these provisions are found in the Constitutions of Michigan, Wisconsin, and others of recent date.

In the old Constitution the provision as to the taking of private property for public use, is, that it shall not be taken "without just compensation being made therefor;" but is not declared whether or not this property shall be assessed and paid for before it is taken. The provision in the new Constitution is, that when property is thus taken, (except in case of the State) compensation shall be "first assessed and tendered." This is an important change. As the law now stands, an incorporated company, constructing a railroad or other public improvement, may take a man's property first and pay for it afterwards. The change proposed requires that, before taking any property, a tender should first be made of its assessed value. If that tender be rejected by the owner, and he seek his remedy by appeal, the property may be taken; so that one man may not be able, by unreasonable obstinacy, to arrest, for months or years, a work of public importance.

The principle of exempting a reasonable amount of the property of the debtor from seizure or sale, is asserted, but without specifying any amount. There is no provision of this kind in the old Constitution; though the present law, usually called the "hundred and twenty-five dollar law," is based upon the principle thus proposed to be permanently established.

The Legislature is authorized to continue, modify, or abolish the Grand Jury system. Under the old Constitution, provision for retaining it was imperative.

The right of trial by Jury is secured in all cases, civil and criminal. By the old Constitution, where the amount in controversy was less than twenty dollars, and also in prosecutions for petit misdemeanors, this right was not secured.

It is provided that "the General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen or class of citizens, privileges or immunities, which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens." This important provision is new.

AS TO SUFFRAGE AND ELECTION.

By the old Constitution, citizens of the United States were entitled to vote. Under the new, foreigners who have been in the United States one year, and in this State six months immediately before any election, and who shall have declared, under oath, their intention to become citizens, have the right of voting. This liberal provision will undoubtedly tend to increase the wealth and population of our State by attracting emigrants toward it.

Post Masters, if their annual compensation be ninety dollars or less, but not otherwise, may be elected members of the Legislature. In counties with less than a thousand polls, but in no others, the offices of Clerk, Recorder, and Auditor, may be conferred on the same person. Both of these are new provisions.

No one who gives or accepts a challenge, or carries to another a challenge to fight a duel, shall be eligible to any office of trust or profit. This is also new.

IN THE LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The provision in regard to the number of Senators and Representatives remains unchanged. It is not to exceed a hundred in the House and fifty in the Senate, but that number may be at any time reduced by law.

The regular sessions of the Legislature are to be held once only in two years; but the Governor, if he thinks the public welfare requires it, may call special sessions. No regular session is to be longer than sixty-one days; nor any special session longer than forty days.

As the entire expenses of the sessions of our General Assembly, including printing of laws and journals, have averaged, for the last ten years, upwards of forty thousand dollars annually, the saving by the change to biennial sessions may be set down at twenty thousand dollars a year. Thus, if no special session be called during five years, the saving, in that period, by this provision alone, will overpay the entire expenses of the Convention. Thus will also be afforded some opportunity to become acquainted with the laws of one session, before they are followed by the amendments of the next.

The following provisions, tending to check and regulate the legislative branch of government, are not found in the old Constitution:

First. Every bill is to be read throughout on three several days, unless two-thirds, under the ayes and noes, suspend the rule.

Second. On the final passage of a bill, it is forbidden, under any circumstances, to dispense with its reading by sections.

Third. A majority of all the members elected to either branch shall be necessary to pass a law. The present Constitution permits a majority of those present (which may be a bare majority of a quorum) to pass a law.

Fourth. No law is permitted to be revised or amended by mere reference to its title, but the law so revised or amended must be set forth at full length. Great abuses have arisen for lack of such a provision. Amendments have been made, of which the House which enacted them knew the character only by some brief verbal statement from a member interested in their passage.

Fifth. No law is to embrace more than one subject and matters properly connected therewith; and the subject is to be expressed in the title. The tendency of this rule is, to prevent what is familiarly termed "log-rolling." Two provisions having no proper connection with each other, may, under the present Constitution, be embraced in the same bill, and be carried by a combination of their respective friends, though neither, in itself, has merit or strength enough to obtain the vote of a majority, and would fail, as it ought, if voted upon singly.

Sixth. No law is allowed to pass, except under the ayes and noes, entered on the journals. This is one of the most effectual safeguards against hasty and inconsiderate legislation; and secures, under all circumstances, the responsibility of members of the Legislature, to their constituents.

Seventh. All elections by the General Assembly are by a viva voce vote, recorded on the journals.

Eighth. The most important restriction imposed on the legislative branch, is that which provides that, in a variety of enumerated cases, (as the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace, the mode of doing county and township business, the fees of county and township officers, road laws, common school laws, and so forth,) and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be passed. It is an estimate much within the truth, that more than two-thirds of all the laws enacted in this State since her admission into the Union, have been of the character here forbidden. More than two-thirds of our legislation, therefore,—and the most confusing and most mischievous portion of it—is cut off by this single provision. Independently of the intrinsic benefits of such a change, the saving thereby effected of expense, both as regards the time of the Legislature and the cost of printing our laws, will be great.

Ninth. By general law, provision may be made for suing the State, but no special act authorizing suit to be brought against the State, or allowing damages against the State, is permitted. This will remove to courts of justice, where they properly belong, numerous claims which cannot be urged through a legislative body without temptation to demoralizing influences.

Tenth. The Legislature is prohibited from granting divorces.

Eleventh. Representatives hold their offices two years, serving one regular session; Senators hold their offices four years, serving two regular sessions.

Twelfth. The general elections, instead of being held, as now, on the first Monday in August, are to be held on the second Tuesday in October, of each year. This latter period is one of much greater leisure to farmers than the former.

IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

The changes in this department are unimportant, being chiefly these:

The Governor and Lieutenant Governor are elected for four instead of three years, to correspond to the biennial sessions of the Legislature.

Neither of these officers is eligible more than four years in any period of eight years, nor to any other office, during the term for which he has been elected. These provisions are not in the old Constitution.

There is a slight change in regard to the veto power. If a bill is presented to the Governor within three days of the close of the session and he fail to return it, it shall be a law, unless he file the bill, together with his objections, in the office of the Secretary of State, within five days after the adjournment. By the old Constitution, he might hold it over until the next session, and then return it, with his objections.

AS TO STATE AND COUNTY OFFICERS.

The Secretary of State, Auditor of State, and Treasurer of State, who were elected, under the old Constitution, by the Legislature, are now elective by the people. The Secretary held his office for four years, and the Auditor and Treasurer theirs for three years; now, the term of office of all these officers, is two years only; and they are not eligible more than four years, in any period of six years.

In the counties, the term of service of the Clerk, Auditor, and Recorder, is put in the new Constitution, at four years; and they are not eligible more than eight years, in any period of twelve years. The Sheriff and Treasurer hold their offices for two years, and are not eligible more than four years in any term of six years.

IN THE JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

The Supreme and Circuit Judges, heretofore chosen, the former by appointment of the Governor, confirmed by the Senate, and the latter, by joint vote of both Houses, are, by the new Constitution, made elective by the people. There are to be no less than three nor more than five Supreme Judges; each to reside in, and be elected from, his own district; but all to be chosen by the votes of the people at large. Each Circuit Judge is chosen by the vote of the electors of the Circuit.

A Judge is rendered ineligible, during the term for which he may have been elected, to any other than a judicial office. This provision is new.

There is to be elected, by the people, a Prosecuting Attorney for each Judicial Circuit.

AS TO LAW REFORM.

The General Assembly is required, at its first session, to appoint three Commissioners, whose duty it shall be, to revise and simplify the practice and forms of the courts. They are to abolish the separate forms of action now in use; and to provide for a uniform mode of pleading, without distinction between law and equity. The Legislature may also cause these Commissioners to reduce, into a systematic code, the general Statute law.

Every person of good moral character, who is a voter, is entitled to admission to practice law in any of the Courts of this State.

These reforms are of an important character: calculated to diminish the cost, and to correct the delay of law proceedings. As the law now is, a man may prosecute a perfectly just claim, but if he commence suit on what an arbitrary rule calls the wrong side of the court, he cannot recover. So, also, a man may have various demands for money against a neighbor, all of which could naturally and conveniently be set forth in the same declaration; but ancient practice has declared, that there are some ten or twelve different forms of action; and he may have to bring a separate suit, with its separate expenses, for each demand, though varying very slightly in their character. A remarkable example is this. If a man hold two promissory notes against another, payable in current bank paper the one being sealed and the other not sealed, he must bring a separate suit upon each. No reason but a purely arbitrary one, founded on antiquated usage, can be given for such vexatious and cost increasing distinction.

The Legislature is authorized to establish Courts of Conciliation, for the speedy decision of cases that may be voluntarily submitted to them, without the tedious and expensive process of law.

EDUCATION AND STATE INSTITUTIONS.

The principal change in this department, is the abolition of county seminaries, and the application of the funds to common schools. It is also provided, that the Legislature shall establish a uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition shall be free. The swamp lands recently granted by Congress, and which, it is supposed, may be worth half a million of dollars, are added to the common school fund.

A Superintendent of Public Instruction is to be elected by the people, his term of office being two years. The large amount of the school fund, scattered all over the State, and the important interests involved, demand the undivided attention of a competent officer.

The counties are made responsible for such portions of the common school fund as may be entrusted to them. This incorporates into the Constitution a provision for the security of that fund, which has long been the statute law of the State.

The Institution which the benevolence of Indiana has reared for the blind, the deaf and dumb, and the insane, are perpetuated by constitutional provision.

The Legislature is instructed to establish Houses of Refuge, for the correction and reformation of juvenile offenders.

PUBLIC DEBT.

The Legislature is prohibited from incurring any debt, except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to pay the interest on the present State debt, or to repel invasion, or suppress insurrection.

Had this provision, brief and simple as it is, been inserted in the Constitution of 1816, it would have saved the State from a loss of six millions of dollars. Upon that sum we are now paying, without any return, some three hundred thousand dollars of interest, annually; that is, about eight hundred dollars a day; more than enough to maintain, in perpetual session, year after year, with all its expenses of reporting and printing, such a Convention as that which has been engaged for the last four months, in framing a Constitution, which shuts out, for the future, all possibility of similar folly.

No county is allowed to subscribe stock to any incorporated company, unless the same be paid at the time of subscription. The State is prohibited from assuming the debt of any town or county.

AS TO BANKING AND CORPORATIONS.

The Legislature may, or may not, establish banks in his State. If they establish banks, it is to be under the following restrictions:

No bank shall be created, otherwise than by general law, except one bank, with branches.

If the Legislature decide to enact a general banking law, all banks thereby created, are to give ample collateral security, such as may be readily converted into money, for the redemption of all their notes in gold and silver; and this security is to be lodged in the hands of some officer of State. No such security has heretofore been demanded of banks in this State.

If the Legislature decide to charter a bank with branches, the branches are to be mutually responsible, as the branches of our present State Bank now are.

The State is not hereafter to be a stockholder in any bank or other corporation.

All banks are required to redeem their notes, at all times, in gold and silver; and the Legislature is prohibited from ever authorizing a suspension of specie payments.

The stockholders, in all banks, are to be held individually responsible, to an amount over and above their stock, equal to the amount of their stock.

In case of insolvency, holders of bank notes are to have preference of payment over all other creditors.

No bank is to receive a higher rate of interest, than is allowed to individuals loaning money.

Every bank is to cease banking operations within twenty years from the time it is organized, and promptly thereafter to close up its business.

These restrictions on banking, not imposed in the former Constitution, though stringent in their character, will not, it is believed, prohibit banking, under a safe system, by responsible associations. The restrictions on banking under a general law are similar to those of the New York system, as amended according to the provisions of the new Constitution of that State. Under that amended system, not a dollar has been lost to the bill-holders. As to the principle of making the branches of a bank, if established with branches, responsible for each other's liabilities, it has worked so well in the charter of our present State Bank, that it is believed a large majority of the people approve it.

In addition to the above restrictions, applying specially to banks, it is provided, as to corporations generally, that they shall not be created by special act, but may be formed under general laws.

NEGROES AND MULATTOES.

The Article in regard to Negroes and Mulattoes is to be submitted separately to the people. It provides,

First. That no Negro or Mulatto shall come into, or settle in, this State, after the adoption of the new Constitution.

Second. That all contracts made with negroes or Mullaattoes who may come into the State, contrary to the foregoing provision, shall be void, and all persons who shall employ any such Negro or Mulatto, shall be fined in any sum not less than ten, nor more than five hundred dollars.

Third. That all fines collected for any breach of this article, shall be applied to the colonization of so many of the Negroes and Mulattoes, now in this State, as may desire to emigrate.

As to any further provision for colonization, it is left to future Legislation. A majority of the Convention were of the opinion, that the true interests alike of the white citizens of the State and of its colored inhabitants demanded the ultimate separation of the races; and that, as the Negro cannot obtain, among us, equal social and political rights, it is greatly to be desired that he should find a free home in other lands, where public opinion imposes upon color neither social disabilities nor political disfranchisement.

No additional disability, not found in the old Constitution, is imposed by the new, no Negroes or Mullaattoes or their descendants, who may be in the State at the time of the adoption of the amended Constitution.

MODE OF AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION.

Amendments to the Constitution may be proposed in the Senate or House of Representatives. If passed by a majority of all the members elected to either branch, they are referred to the next regular session of the Legislature, to be held two years thereafter. If passed by them, a second time, they are then, at the next general election, to be submitted to the People; and if they pass this final ordeal, they become a part of the Constitution.

In this way, there will always occur a general election of members of the Legislature, during the canvass for which, the amendments that they may have been proposed at the previous session, can be brought in issue: and nearly three years must intervene, from the time an amendment is first proposed, before it can be finally adopted.

There was provided, in the old Constitution, no mode of submitting to the People separate amendments. The advantage of the provision is, that, without the expense of a Convention, the new Constitution, if found faulty or deficient in any of its parts, may be amended and perfected.

With this brief explanatory statement of the more important alterations embodied in the new Constitution, we place our work in the hands of our constituents, who alone can give it vitality.

Those who desire to examine arguments for or against the various charges that have been made, will find them spread at large, throughout the Debates of the Convention; officially reported, in accordance with the law which provided for the call of a Convention, by a corps of stenographers. Of the two volumes in which these Debates are embraced, three copies will be deposited in the Clerk's office of each county throughout the State.

It was our expectation, when we first engaged in the task of revision, to be able to complete it, at an earlier day. But the deliberations of a numerous body necessarily proceed slowly; and it would have been a culpable violation of duty, for the sake of ephemeral popularity, hastily, or without the fullest and most deliberate consideration, to pass upon great questions, involving the dearest rights and most vital interests, not of the present generation alone, but of others that are to succeed.

The question being on concurrence in the report,

Mr. DOBSON. Before the committee concur in the report, there is one subject to be noticed, and perhaps more than one, but I refer particularly to the subject of removals from office, and, I may add, the subject of contested elections. These points have been omitted, and I think they ought to be embraced in the address.

Mr. LOCKHART. There is another subject also that has been overlooked.

No motion to amend being made,

The PRESIDENT put the question, "Will the Convention concur in the report of the committee?"

The report was unanimously concurred in.

Mr. OWEN. I will state to the Convention that I have been compelled to draw up this address in a hasty manner, and I perceive that there is an inaccuracy in regard to a statement of fact, and I ask the permission of the Convention to make the necessary correction.

Mr. CLARK of Tippecanoe. I would suggest also that the omission referred to by the gentleman from Owen ought to be supplied.

Mr. HAWKINS. It appears to me that there is a sufficient amount of words in the address already. The fact is, if we instruct the committee to put everything into the address that may be said, the effect will be that the balance of us will have nothing to say when we get home. (A laugh.) For my part I should like to have the privilege of saying something to my constituents that have not been carved out for me by the committee, that when the time arrives at which I may have occasion to advocate the adoption of the Constitution we have formed—as I most assuredly will do (applause)—there may be some topic left for me to discuss which has not been already commented upon by your committee. From the moment I set my foot upon the soil of my district, I shall feel it obligatory on me to advocate the changes that have been made in our Constitution. I should like to have the honor of originating or at least to be supposed to originate something that has not been put into my mouth by a committee of this Convention. For this reason, I hope the address will go out as it has been reported to us; and then I shall have an opportunity when giving my explanation of the views by which we were actuated in making the various changes that have been made, of at least seeming to advance something original, and not be in the condition of the parrot who repeats what he has been learned to say. ("Consent," "consent.") I do not want to be placed in a condition of dependence on a committee of ten of this Convention, for the explanations that I shall give to my constituents, as to the value and importance of our labors. (Laughter and applause.)

Mr. PETTIT. Is there any question now before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT made an announcement of a notice which he had been requested to give.

SEVERAL VOICES. Let it be read "a second time now." (Prolonged laughter.)

The PRESIDENT. This being Saturday, resolutions are now in order.

Mr. PETTIT. I wish to offer a resolution.

Mr. KELSO. I rise to a question which I believe has precedence over ordinary business. The remark which I wish to make is in regard to a portion of a printed speech which I find in the paper this morning, and in which I am assailed in the most bitter manner—in a manner that has never been attempted on this floor.

A VOICE. What is it about?

Mr. KELSO. It is in a speech that was supposed to have been delivered by the honorable delegate from Floyd (Mr. Thornton). In the published report of that speech, he is made to say in regard to me things that he never dreamed of uttering here in the presence of this Convention.

Mr. PETTIT. I make a point of order, whether that is a privileged question. The gentleman is referring to a speech that was made some weeks ago.

Mr. KELSO. Although the speech was made some weeks ago, it has only been published in the paper of this morning. And what I complain of is, not of the speech as delivered some weeks ago, but of the version of the speech that is published in the paper this morning; and in view of what is stated in the report of that speech, I claim the privilege of making an explanation, that the pretended report may not go out as the bona fide report that was taken of what was said here on that occasion.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would remark that the practice has been if any gentleman finds himself misrepresented in the paper, he may correct it by application to the Stenographer, or to the publisher of the paper.

Cries of "Proceed," "proceed," "Let us know what it is."

Mr. WATTS. I rise to ask a favor of the Convention, and it is one that I had not occasion to ask before during the whole session of the Convention. It is for permission to change my vote upon the concurrence in the report made by the committee on revision this morning.

Leave was granted.

Mr. PETTIT. I offer for adoption the following resolution, in reference to the index to the manuscript copy of the journal, required to be deposited in the office of Secretary of State:

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be authorized to prepare an index to the manuscript copy of the Journal of the Convention, required to be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, and that he receive as a compensation therefor the same as may be allowed for preparing an index for the Journal of Debates.

Mr. BORDEN. It seems to me that there is no necessity for going to the expense of having an index prepared for the manuscript journal, for this reason: that the printed journal will be indexed as a matter of course.

Mr. PETTIT. It must be apparent to the gentleman, if he will consider for a moment, that the pages of the manuscript journal and the printed journal will not be precisely the same. By what means then will you be able to ascertain the contents of one from the index of the other? It is true that for ordinary purposes the printed journal will perhaps be sufficient; but suppose a member of this Convention should be charged with voting for a proposition for which he did not vote, he denies the allegation, and the proof is to be found only in the attested copy of the journal in manuscript.

Mr. HAMILTON. I should like to know what will be the expense attending the preparation of an index for this manuscript journal. If politicians want to exhibit their votes let them do so at their own expense.

Mr. MOORE. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was, upon a division—ayes 44, noes 35—decided in the affirmative.

Mr. GREGG. Yesterday, or the day before, there was a resolution passed ordering fifty-five thousand copies of the new Constitution to be printed; I should like to be permitted to move a re-consideration of that vote, in order that I may offer the following:

Resolved, That the several editors of this State be requested to publish the amended Constitution in their respective papers, and that they be entitled to receive thirty dollars each as compensation therefor."

It will cost less, said Mr. Gregg, to publish the Constitution in this way, than to publish it separately, and it will obtain, if published in the newspapers, more extended circulation. I go for dividing some of the spoils among the publishers of the country, instead of confining all the patronage of the Convention to a few local presses.

Mr. BORDEN. I trust the motion of the gentleman from Jefferson will prevail; but I believe that a less sum than thirty dollars each would remunerate the publishers. There are, I believe, about ninety-six newspapers in the State. And sir, I am inclined to think that twenty dollars each would be sufficient. There are about two hundred thousand voters in the State, and if only fifty-five thousand copies are published there will not be a sufficient number to supply them so that each may have a copy.

Mr. HAMILTON. Perhaps there is some misunderstanding about this matter. I am informed that the cost of publishing fifty-five thousand copies, will not exceed eight hundred dollars. I have a resolution which I intend to offer in relation to this subject; it is, that the Secretary shall contract for the printing, at a reasonable price. And I shall offer it in case this one does not prevail.

Mr. WOLFE. I should have no objection to the mode of publishing proposed here; that is, of having the Constitution published through the medium of the newspapers: but if that be done the people will obtain it only in detached portions, and perhaps before they receive the conclusion the commencement may be lost, consequently it will be necessary to have some in pamphlet form, so that it may be fully examined and understood before being voted upon. I have no doubt the newspapers will publish it at all events, for the benefit of their readers. I do not think we ought to incur a great deal of expense in printing the Constitution, but it is necessary that there should be a sufficient number of copies to enable every voter in the State at least to have a copy.

Mr. KENT. There are between ninety and a hundred newspapers in the State, having an average circulation of about six hundred copies, and if the Constitution be published in all these newspapers they will circulate at least sixty-thousand copies, and it will cost the State something like two thousand dollars to publish it in that way. My own opinion is that we had better publish it in pamphlet form, because in that case it will be more likely to be preserved. It is not usual to be very careful to preserve a newspaper, but a document published by itself is in a proper shape to be preserved, and it will be read by many persons. Although I am interested in a paper, yet I do not hesitate to give my decided preference for having the publication of the Constitution in a more durable form. The cost of publishing fifty or fifty-five thousand copies, cannot much exceed eight hundred dollars. I should have no hesitation to take the printing for eight hundred dollars.

Mr. CARR of Jackson. I was informed yesterday evening, by several gentlemen, that the publication of these fifty thousand copies of the Constitution would probably cost about three thousand dollars. I called this morning upon Mr. Brown, the printer to the Convention, in order to ascertain what the cost would be; and, upon making an estimate, it was ascertained that the expense would be about eight hundred and twenty dollars.

Mr. GREGG withdrew his motion to reconsider.

Mr. HAMILTON offered a resolution to the effect that the Secretary of the Convention be instructed to contract for the printing, upon the most reasonable and just terms.

Mr. BASCOM. How will that resolution accord with a former resolution of the Convention, that fifty-five thousand copies of the Constitution shall be printed?

Mr. HOLMAN moved to amend the resolution, so as to limit the price to be paid to eight hundred dollars.

The amendment was adopted.

The resolution, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. PETTIT. I offer the following resolution, relative to the pay of our Clerk:

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be paid the same per diem as the Clerks of the Senate and House of Representatives were paid at last session of the General Assembly."

Cries of "Consent! Consent!"

If gentlemen say "Consent," it will not be necessary for me to detain the Convention with any remarks.

Mr. KENT. I move the previous question, Mr. Pettit still retaining the floor.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Tippecanoe has the floor.

Mr. PETTIT. A difficulty has occurred in reference to the pay of the Secretary, and I believe there is some doubt in the mind of the President of the Convention in regard to how much he shall receive; it is desirable, therefore, that it shall be distinctly declared. The language of the law is this: "Members of the Convention shall receive three dollars per day," &c., "and the Secretary and other officers in attendance, shall be paid the same compensation that is paid to the officers of the General Assembly for similar services." It does not say what is allowed by law, but what is "paid for similar services." Well, then, what is the fact? This law, you will recollect, was passed last winter, and the provision in regard to paying this officer must, it appears to me, be construed in relation to what the same Legislature paid their officers. Then the inquiry is, how much did they pay them? The book shows that the Principal and Assistant Secretaries each received four dollars a day. This, then, is what was paid by the same Legislature by whom it was declared that our officers should receive the same as was paid to theirs; not the same as was allowed by any provision of law, but the same as was paid. I have shown you that four dollars a day was paid to their Secretaries, thereby determining what ours should have.

Sir, I understand that an objection is raised that there is, in a law passed some six years ago, a provision which declares that the Secretary of the Senate shall be paid three dollars a day for six weeks and a dollar and a half a day after that time. Now, sir, not for a single year have they abided by that law; on the contrary, they have universally paid them four dollars a day. They have not in any year since eighteen hundred and thirty-nine, paid less than four dollars a day. Sometimes it has been four and a half, and sometimes five, according as the specification has been put into the appropriation bill. And they say in express terms, that the Secretary of the Convention, its officers and attendants, shall be paid the same fees as are paid by the Legislature for similar services. They were paying four dollars a day to their Secretaries at the time they adopted the provision to which I have referred; therefore it appears to me the matter is entirely plain.

I would ask, sir, would it be an equivalent for the service of our Secretaries to pay them but one dollar and a half a day? No clerk of the Legislature ever served for that.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I would like to inquire, for information, if the resolution intends to include all the assistants who have been engaged during the session at any time?

Mr. PETTIT. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being taken on the adoption of the resolution,

It was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. OWEN made a report from the committee on revision.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. President, I desire the Convention to favor me with a suspension of the rules, to enable me to introduce a resolution that the address which was reported to us this morning, be signed by the President of the Convention, and published with the Constitution. It is always usual, I believe, that a document of this kind be signed by the officers of the Convention. If the other part of the resolution be objectionable, let it be stricken out.

The rules were suspended, and the question being on the adoption of the resolution,

Mr. FOSTER moved to substitute the following: "That the address to the electors be printed for the use of the Convention."

Mr. BORDEN. The gentleman should add, that it be signed by the officers of the Convention.

Mr. WOLFE moved to amend the amendment, by striking out all that relates to the printing.

The question being on the amendment to the amendment,

Mr. DOBSON. When the question was up the other day in reference to ordering the address to be printed and published with the Constitution, it was determined not to make such order until we had an opportunity to see what it contained. We have had it reported and read this morning, and it appears to me we ought to order its publication. It would be something of an absurdity to direct a committee to prepare an address for the information of the electors of the State and then refuse to order it to be published. As to how many copies it is necessary to publish, that is a question for the Convention to determine. I am for publishing as many copies of the address as of the Constitution.

Mr. OWEN. I will merely say in regard to the address, the select committee had been very careful to frame it as near as possible to serve as an index to the Constitution; and, perhaps, such being its character, it will be appropriate that it go out with the Constitution.

Mr. MORRISON of Marion. I would like to know how much the printed address will make.

Mr. OWEN. It will make from a column to a column and a half.

Mr. MORRISON of Marion. It will add a mere trifle to the expense of printing, and if printed with the Constitution it will be done at a saving of almost two-thirds of the ordinary expense. It will cost not a cent more for press-work and very little more for paper; the whole cost will not exceed a hundred dollars. I am a practical printer, and understand how these things work.

Mr. HOLMAN. I certainly give my hearty approval to the address reported by the Committee. I regard it as an excellent exposition of the Constitution; but it must be recollected that this Constitution has been a great expense to the people of the State, and gentlemen may say what they please on the subject, it is manifest to my mind that the printing of this address to accompany the Constitution must be attended with nearly as much expense as the printing of the Constitution itself. Gentlemen must recollect that every one of the newspapers in the State will publish this address; every citizen will have in his possession a paper containing it. It is a matter of interest with the publishers to publish this address, because it contains interesting information. If it be thought proper that we should publish it at all, three hundred copies will, in my opinion, be quite sufficient.

Mr. PETTIT. I am clearly of opinion that if we publish these copies of the Constitution as is proposed, we ought to send out with them this exposition, showing the difference between the old Constitution and the new. We all know that the farmer and the mechanic have but little time to spare from their labors to make themselves acquainted with those changes; but if specifically pointed out, they will be enabled to form an opinion concerning them, while, on the other hand, they would not have sufficient leisure to search for them: besides, very few are in possession of copies of the old Constitution. I hope the address and Constitution will go together, that it may be seen at once how much better or how much worse the new Constitution is than the old. I desire that the people shall be correctly informed in regard to these things, and have facilities afforded them in order to obtain information respecting those matters. It is much more important, in my opinion, that the index, or exposition, should go out than that the Constitution itself should; because, without it the people will not have before them the contrast between the old and the new. Sir, if we print the one we ought to print the other.

Mr. GORDON. Do I understand the proposition to be to publish the address with the Constitution?

The PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Sullivan.

Mr. GREGG. I desire to amend the amendment, by providing that the additional expense shall not exceed one hundred dollars.

The PRESIDENT. There is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

The question being put on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Sullivan,

Mr. WOLFE demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

I will merely remark (said Mr. W.) that I hope the Constitution will recommend itself to the people; I do not think there is any necessity for sending out a recommendation with it. The people will derive all the necessary information from the newspapers.

Mr. OWEN. I have only to say in reply, that there are many portions of the State that are not reached by newspapers, and I am satisfied that the people of those portions would be glad to have this report.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Gentlemen are certainly talking about what they do not understand. If they will take a practical view of the matter, it will be seen that the printing of this address with the Constitution will occasion but little additional expense.

Mr. SPANN. I would like to explain the reason why I shall vote for the amendment. I desire that the address shall be published, but I object to its being published in connection with the Constitution. If the Constitution is adopted by the people it will become the supreme law of the land, and the courts will have to decide upon it, and the Legislature will have to base its legislation upon it. Now the Constitution should not interpose any other matter, because it may lead to embarrassment. I believe that we should send out to the people the Constitution by itself. There are but few people in the State who will not be able to decide for themselves as to its meaning, and the Legislature and the courts will be left free to decide upon it as it is. I think it will rather undervalue our work if we have to give an exposition of what ought to be so plain.

Mr. OWEN. I will suggest to the gentleman, in the first place, that no address of ours, which is merely an expression of opinion, can have the slightest weight with the courts any more than an expression of opinion given in debate. If the resolution be adopted the address will merely be printed and bound in the same pamphlet, and may at any time be separated.

Mr. GORDON. It appears to me that the reporting and publishing of our speeches on the subject, will cost nearly five times as much as the publishing of the address; I therefore move the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on the amendment of the gentleman from Sullivan, the yeas and nays having been previously ordered, were taken, with the following result—yeas 26, nays 56:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Beard, Bowers, Bracken, Clark of Hamilton, Cole, Crawford, Davis of Parke, Farrow, Foley, Haddon, Hendricks, Holman, Kelso, Kilgore, Kinley, March, Miller of Fulton, Morgan, Nave, Newman, Niles, Tague, Thomas, Watts, and Wolfe—26.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alexander, Allen, Bascom, Blythe, Borden, Bryant, Carr, Chapman, Clements, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Elliott, Fisher, Foster, Gibson, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Hall, Helmer, Hitt, Johnson of Orange, Kent, Kendall of White, Logan, Maguire, McClelland, McLean, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Mowrer, Murray, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Prather, Read of Clark, Schoonover, Sherrod, Smith of Scott, Spann, Tannehill, Wallace, Wiley, and Mr. President—56.

So the amendment was not adopted.

The question being then taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Monroe, it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the resolution, and it was, on a division—aye 43, noes 34—decided in the affirmative.

Mr. BORDEN. As the resolution is imperfect I move to fill the blank with —

The PRESIDENT. The hour allotted to resolutions has expired. The Convention will now take up the

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

Mr. PRATHER. There seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to a resolution to pay our Secretary. If the Convention will indulge me with a suspension of the order of business, I will move the following:

“Resolved, That the resolution adopted this morning in relation to the pay of the Secretary, shall be construed to include the Assistant Secretaries.”

The question being taken on suspending the rules,

It was decided in the negative.

SIGNING THE CONSTITUTION.

In accordance with a resolution making it the special order for this morning at ten o'clock to call the members alphabetically to sign the Constitution, the Secretary was proceeding with the call, when

Mr. PETTIT moved to postpone the special order until two o'clock, P. M., in order to enable the committees to prepare their reports.

The motion was, on a division—aye 46, noes 22—decided in the affirmative.

Mr. OWEN, from the committee on revision, made another report.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. NAVE. I rise to ask the Convention to suspend the rules, that I may offer a resolution. [Cries of “Read it. Read it.”] It is that the member from the county of Union, (Mr. Brookbank,) notwithstanding the absence on account of the contest for his seat, be paid his entire per diem compensation from the commencement to the close of the Convention.

The question being put upon the motion to suspend the rules,

It was decided in the negative.

Mr. ALLEN. If there is nothing now before the Convention, I will ask the privilege of signing the Constitution, as it is necessary I should leave for home this afternoon. [Cries of “Consent. Consent.”]

Mr. WATTS. I presume there is no further business on the calendar; I move, therefore, to re-consider the vote by which the special order was postponed.

The motion was agreed to, and the vote was accordingly re-considered.

The question recurring on the motion to postpone,

It was decided in the negative.

The calling of the roll and signing of the Constitution was then proceeded with, until the usual hour of taking a recess.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mr. PETTIT moved that the order of business be suspended in order to enable him to introduce a resolution to the effect, that the President and Secretary of the Convention be requested to remain at Indianapolis until the completion of the enrollment of the manuscript copy of the Journal, and that they receive their usual per diem compensation during that time.

The order of business was suspended, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. There is another resolution which it is due to one of the members of this Convention we should pass. It will be recollected that there was a contested election, and that both contestants went back to the people and a new election was held. It is an universal rule in every deliberative body to pay the actually incurred expenses in such cases; for instance, the expense of taking depositions, and so on; because the people are concerned in the matter; it is a thing in which they have a direct interest. I move a suspension of the order of business. [Cries of "no," "no."]

The question being put on suspending the order of business, it was decided in the negative.

So the order of business was not suspended.

Mr. BORDEN. I will state to the Convention, that several gentlemen have left town before they had an opportunity to sign the Constitution. I desire to offer a resolution to the effect that any time within a year, they may be permitted to sign it.

The order of business was suspended by consent.

The resolution having been read,

Mr. EDMONSTON. I rather doubt the propriety of adopting this proposition. I have no desire to accommodate gentlemen who may hesitate to take the responsibility of signing the Constitution now, and who, after it shall have been ratified by the people, will come forward and subscribe their names to it. If the gentleman will modify his proposition so as to give the privilege of signing the Constitution at any time before it is ratified, I shall be able to vote for it; otherwise I shall not.

Mr. BORDEN. I will say to the gentleman that the fact of signing the Constitution is no evidence of approval; it is only an attesting act. But I will alter the resolution according to the suggestion of the gentleman from Dubois (Mr. Edmonston).

Mr. EDMONSTON. I should prefer to have it in that shape. I am prepared, so far as

I am concerned, not only to sign the Constitution, but to defend it through good and ill report; and I am not willing to let gentlemen come in, after we have secured for it the favor of the people, and express their approval at that late period, after leaving it so long in doubt whether they were for or against it.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. OWEN, from the committee on revision, made a report.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. CHAPMAN asked a suspension of the order of business to enable him to introduce a resolution relative to the disposal of the property which had been purchased for the purpose of fitting up the Hall for the accommodation of the Convention.

The order of business was suspended, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. President, I desire the Convention to favor me with a suspension of the rules, to enable me to make a motion to fill a blank in a resolution that passed this morning. The resolution was offered by me, and it provides for the publication of the address reported by the committee appointed for that purpose. It also provides that a certain number of copies shall be printed in the German language. After offering the resolution, and before I had an opportunity to move to fill the blank, the previous question was demanded and ordered on the passage of the resolution; and I was unexpectedly deprived of the opportunity to move to fill the blank. I desire, sir, to fill the blank, and for that purpose I ask the Convention to suspend the rules in order to enable me to offer a motion to that effect. I look upon the address, sir, as one worthy of publication, and desire that it shall be published in German as well as in English, for the reason that I have a good many constituents who read only in German. I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose which I have indicated.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson stated that he had discovered a variance between one of the sections, as reported back by the committee on revision, and the section as it stood when it was referred to that committee, and the variance was a material one. It was in relation to the requiring of a specie basis upon the passing of any act authorizing banking. I move (said Mr. M.) that the vote by which the report was concurred in be re-considered.

Mr. BORDEN remarked, that if the committee had reported the section differently, if they had omitted a material part, he hoped the attention of the body would be directed to it.

Mr. WOLFE. All that provision in relation to the specie basis is omitted.

Mr. KELSO. It is passing strange, indeed, that the committee on revision would assume to themselves the right to make a change of this kind. It is certainly beyond precedent that the committee should take upon itself to strike out an important provision which had been adopted by the Convention. When the provision in relation to banking was adopted, it was considered one of the most important that we had incorporated into the new Constitution. Now, however, without even an intimation of their intention, when not one in ten of the friends of the State Bank knew anything of the matter, the committee comes in and asks us to submit to a change of this description! It seems to me it is asking rather too much.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been usual to concur in the reports of the committee on arrangement and phraseology, from the fact that the duties of that committee did not embrace the power of making substantial alterations in the sections as adopted by the Convention, and no gentleman could have anticipated any effort on the part of that committee to change the spirit of sections referred to it for revision; but in this instance I must call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the entire spirit and meaning of the section heretofore adopted touching the right of any banking company to continue its business after twenty years, has been vitally changed by the section as reported back by the committee. I had, sir, the honor of submitting the original section, as an amendment to the section proposed by the gentleman from Jefferson (Mr. Dunn). I cannot but believe that the Convention, in its adoption, entertained the same view of its effects as those entertained by myself, and which influenced me in bringing it forward. The object was to require every banking company to close up its entire business within twenty years after its organization. If it was solvent, its peculiar franchises had existed long enough; if it was not, the sooner the people knew it the better, and this limitation would aid in preventing the exercise of too much power by the combined moneyed institutions of the State. The section, as reported back, in effect, leaves the franchises and powers of banking institutions, except as to the issue of their own paper, open to the caprice of legislation. I undertake to say, that the entire spirit of the section is changed, and I call upon that committee to say whether they intentionally assume the right to make substantial innovations upon the sections as adopted by the Convention. If not, I insist on the section as originally adopted; and, for one, I insist, that in the absence of near one-third of our number, no committee, however prominent it may be, should arrogate to itself powers not contemplated in its organization. I am satisfied that the large number of Bank men who are now here are in favor of the section as changed by the committee, and I only insist upon the original section as it was adopted by the deliberate voice of the Convention when its numbers were full; and I now deny any power on the part of the committee to make the change. The original section was an important restriction on banking; the committee wish to destroy its restrictive character, and while, sir, I have been opposed to the ultra restrictive policy of the majority of this Convention—while I oppose every restriction which will circumscribe the free exercise of power by the people, more especially in their primary organizations—at the same time I am in favor of every limitation and restriction which may secure the people from the ruinous consequences of wild, reckless, and unprincipled banking.

Mr. OWEN. If the Convention will give me their attention for five minutes, I will explain this whole matter. Now, in the first place, these reports have always been laid on the tables of delegates, whenever it was possible, at least half a day before they were taken up and passed upon. On the left hand page every word was printed of every section that was referred to us, precisely in the shape in which it was referred. On the right hand page was printed every section as revised and arranged by the committee. I say this has been done in every instance, even to the very minutest particular. It has been the endeavor of the committee not to follow their own opinions in the slightest degree, but to report back what they believed to be the intention of a majority of the Convention.

Now it must be in the recollection of the Convention that the phraseology of this section, as it stood originally, was this: "Specie basis, actually paid in." This was passed before what was called "the compromise section" was adopted. A motion was made to re-consider it, and it was voted down. It will be recollected, also, that the gentleman from Putnam (Mr. Stevenson) made a motion that the wording of the section should be changed to this effect; "that their notes shall be at all times redeemable in gold and silver." His motion was ruled out of order, because a motion to re-consider had previously been made and failed, and his object could not be reached in that way; and it was said by some gentlemen that the matter might be left to the committee on revision.

Now, after the most deliberate consideration, a majority of the committee—indeed I believe that every member of the committee who was then present—concurred in the opinion that the intention of the Convention, after the compromise section passed, was, that a specie basis should be construed to mean that the notes of the Bank should at all times be redeemable in gold and silver. The committee reported back this provision in accordance with what they conceived to be the true meaning of the Convention in regard to the specie basis. It was again and again stated on this floor, that if the specie basis, according to the original idea of that basis, were exacted, there could be no banking in Indiana; that it would amount to an effectual prohibition. The committee came to the deliberate conclusion that what we ought to report was substantially this provision, namely: that the notes put into circulation as money shall be redeemable in specie.

Mr. WALLACE. This is a very important amendment; one altogether too important to be made by the committee on revision; it is putting the cart before the horse completely. The gentleman says they have changed the section so as to require the notes to be redeemable in gold and silver; but the proposition originally was, to secure a specie basis actually paid in. That was the true intention, but where the committee now place it, they take away the foundation of banking. What security shall we have that the basis upon which their paper is to be issued will be such a basis as to secure its redemption in gold and silver? Well, sir, it is not proper that we should undertake to argue this question over again. The committee have undertaken to reverse the action of this Convention, and the gentleman says the object is to make the paper redeemable in gold and silver. I might go on and show you that this is an entire fallacy—that you can have no security for its redemption in gold and silver unless you require a specie basis actually paid in.

Mr. OWEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. Inasmuch as this is a matter of mere interpretation, I would ask the gentleman what he understands this to mean: "that there shall be specie basis actually paid in?" Is there anything positive or definite about such a provision as that?

Mr. WALLACE. I will answer the gentleman by referring him to the explanation given by the delegate from Tippecanoe when the question was debated, viz.: "that is a matter which must necessarily be within the power of the Legislature when they proceed to act upon the general directions contained in the Constitution."

Mr. OWEN. And if the Legislature should omit?

Mr. WALLACE. The gentleman is only endeavoring to rid himself of a stumbling block. Now I am free to acknowledge that I care not what additional securities you throw around the banks, if you in the first instance make the foundation right; if you make it substantial. I care not how many guards there be about it, but if it stand upon a slight foundation, your guards will never protect it.

Mr. OWEN. If it is to be left to the Legislature to decide as to the amount of the specie basis—whether it shall be an hundred cents to the dollars, or ten cents, or five cents, I appeal to the common sense of the Convention, if the whole matter is not left to them, and whether your provision, under such circumstances, would not be a mere piece of waste paper? If the Convention had determined that a dollar should be paid in for every dollar issued, the committee would have inserted it. But having left it out and having decided in regard to one class of banks at least, the security should be of a particular character, the committee thought they were bound to deduce the meaning of the Convention from the separate provisions.

Mr. HAMILTON. This question has unfortunately come up at a bad time. The question in itself is a simple one; but we are foolishly attempting to carry out too many details, and to leave nothing to the Legislature. I think there can be no difficulty about the matter. Private banking is to be predicated upon stocks; they will be compelled to have a sufficient and secure basis. The friends of the bank will be secure enough. Then, sir, as to the State bank, the next question is, what will be the "ample security" there? Now the gentleman from Marion, (Mr. Wallace,) to use a familiar expression, is afraid of their "bursting up."

Mr. WALLACE. Allow me to say to the gentleman this: there is a provision that there may be a State bank chartered: and what kind of security is required from the State bank? There should be the same in the one case as in the other: and I would ask is not the best kind of security that which is based upon gold and silver?

Mr. CHAPMAN. How much?

Mr. WALLACE. Dollar for dollar.

Mr. HAMILTON. This, however, must be left to future legislation. It seems to me to be a singularly inappropriate time at which to bring up this subject for re-discussion.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson. If you leave it to the Legislature and they say that nothing but stocks shall be the basis of banking, how are you to secure a safe basis? Under the provisions of the section as reported by the committee, they can commence banking without a dollar; so with free banks. Such a provision could never have passed this body, and I ask how it is that it has made its appearance now? I had the fullest confidence in the committee on revision, and still have; but, sir, I want to know why it is that while we are putting confidence in this committee to report back matters just as they were sent to them, they report them to us in a very different form. Sir, I for one cannot avoid expressing my entire disapprobation of such a course.

Mr. EDMONSTON. Sir, as a State bank man I must confess that I am with my friend from Gibson. I had such implicit confidence in the committee that I did not consider it necessary to examine the reports carefully; and had not my attention been called to this matter last night, it would have escaped my notice altogether. Now I ask any gentleman whether banking operations, to afford the necessary security to the community which is desired, must not necessarily be formed on a sufficient specie basis, so as to be able at any time to redeem their paper? Sir, such was the intention of the Convention. If I mistake not a motion was made to strike out that provision, and it was voted down by a large majority. Sir, it was the will and the wish of a majority of this Convention that all banks should be required to conduct their business on a sufficient specie basis: that was the ground taken by the majority. Now, sir, what has been done by the committee? The gentleman from Posey says the words stricken out were words of no meaning—that they would have no practical operation. If that be the case why so much eagerness to strike them out? They had been deliberately inserted by the Convention, and I believe they were in accordance with the wishes of the people of the country. But, as the provision has been reported back to us, we shall have banks created, doing business on one promise to pay, based on another promise to pay.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that there is a section which declares that specie payments shall never be suspended.

Mr. EDMONSTON. Oh, yes, you may declare that specie payments shall never be suspended, and that all bills shall be redeemable in gold and silver; but how are you to know that the gold and silver are forth-coming? how are you to know that it is provided for the redemption of all the bills put in circulation? Bills may come in for redemption, and there may be nothing but State bonds in the possession of the bank; what sort of security is this to the bill-holders? Sir, the people in calling this Convention were impressed with the idea that suitable provision was to be made for future banking operations, so that they would not be subjected to any risk of loss by means of the banks. They had an entire belief that we would make such provision for their security, that they would be saved from even the apprehension of loss, and as I regard it, such provision was made. I know what the feeling of the people I represent is in regard to this subject. They scorn and detest such a system of banking as has prevailed in many parts of the Union, and under which system frauds have been perpetuated from day to day. I say that the committee on revision have taken a step which is beyond their legitimate duty: they have assumed a responsibility which this Convention never conferred upon them. I trust that the Convention will deliberately consider the propriety of reversing the action of the committee, and that the proposition which was adopted by the Convention be inserted in its proper place.

Mr. KELSO. I have very little to say on this subject. But this I do say, that all banking operations, whether by a State bank or any other, should be conducted upon a specie basis. I voted in favor of that proposition, and I think the affirmative vote upon it was one hundred and nine. After that had been adopted, I felt at liberty to accord with the compromise section offered by the gentleman from St. Joseph; but without that I never would have given my vote in favor of the compromise section. With the requirement of a specie basis, we had every reason to presume that the Legislature would adopt such a course as would compel the banks to redeem their issues dollar for dollar in specie. With that provision I would have been satisfied that the Legislature should be authorized to establish free banks; and that they should, if they saw proper, establish a State bank with branches. The gentleman from Posey came forward with a proposition that the security for free banks should be State stocks: with that, a majority of the Convention were content; and I believe the people would be content. But the committee, and that too without any instructions from the Convention—without even a hint from this body in any shape—take the responsibility of striking out the very foundation we have laid for our banking system. Now I say that is taking rather too much liberty; it is exercising a power which does not belong to them; it is making a radical change that nobody ever dreamed of being made. And we are told that it is all right. Yes, sir, it is “all right” with those who want it so, but with those who do not, it is not “all right.”

Mr. NILES. If the committee had changed the substance of this provision at all, I should deem it worthy of spending sometime about it. But it does seem to me that the report of the committee is quite as strong as anything the Convention have adopted. It will be found, if practically considered, that the clause about the specie basis being paid in, is only a guide for the Legislature. The whole object was to secure the redemption of the bills in specie; it was merely to give a direction to the Legislature in passing a law authorizing banking, to make provision for the security of the bill-holders, by requiring a sufficient amount of capital upon which the business of banking could be conducted.

Mr. BORDEN. Sir, I desire to call the attention of the Convention to an article in the old Constitution, regulating the subject of banking. Gentlemen will see by turning to it, that no bank shall go into operation in this State, unless upon a specie capital actually paid in.

SECTION 1. There shall not be established or incorporated, in this State, any bank or banking company, or moneyed institution, for the purpose of issuing bills of credit, or bills payable to order or bearer: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the General Assembly from establishing a State Bank, and branches, not exceeding one branch for any three counties, to be established at such place, within such counties, as the directors of the State Bank may select; provided there be subscribed, and paid, in specie, on the part of individuals, a sum equal to thirty thousand dollars: Provided, also, That the bank at Vincennes, and the Farmers' and Mechanics' bank of Indiana, at Madison, shall be considered as incorporated banks, according to the true tenor of the charters granted to said banks by the Legislature of the Indiana territory: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the General Assembly from adopting either of the aforesaid banks as the State Bank: And in case either of them shall be adopted as the State Bank, the other may become a branch, under the rules and regulations hereinbefore prescribed.

It is said by those who sustain the committee in the alteration which they have made in the article on the subject of banking, "that the banks are required to redeem their notes in specie." But, sir, the gentleman from Marion, (Mr. Wallace,) has well replied to this when he said that there is a vast difference between requiring them to have a specie capital actually paid in and requiring them to redeem their notes in specie. I think that it is essentially necessary that they should be required to have the specie in the first instance that they may be prepared to redeem their notes. It is true as we all know, that the specie may be drawn out soon after it is put there; yet it is, to a certain extent, a security against persons going into banking without any specie whatever.

Sir, I am surprised that the committee should have made this change, and I am well satisfied that the provision in the old Constitution, so far as this matter is concerned, is preferable to the new one. And I hope that the vote will be reconsidered, and the clause which has been left by the committee, will be reinstated. It is well known that I am not very favorable to that portion of the new Constitution, which relates to the subject of banking. I look upon the system there authorized, as a mongrel system, and I fear that it will finally prove not very favorable to the best interests of the people of the State. It was bad enough with this clause which the committee have left out, and without it, it is still worse.

Mr. WATTS. As I introduced this provision, I feel disposed to say a word or two in reference to it. It will be recollected that a great deal of the capital on which our banking operations are conducted—that, especially, which furnishes a specie basis for the redemption of our bank notes—is owned by foreigners. Whenever they find it to their interest to withdraw their capital, of course they will do so, and then the bill holders will have nothing to rely upon more than their mere confidence in the honesty of the managers of the bank. It was for this reason I desired that a specie basis should be secured which would not be liable to be removed.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg leave to remark that it seems to me to be a work of supererogation to attempt to revive the discussion on the bank question. The only question for us to determine at present, it seems to me, is whether the committee have violated the confidence reposed in them by the Convention, and have left out what they ought to have inserted. I say it seems to me that is the only question; and there is nothing to be done but to take a direct vote, and say whether or not what has been omitted, shall be restored. I do not impugn the motives of the committee—I only say let the words that have been left out by them, be restored. I move that the words that have been left out by the committee, be re-inserted.

Mr. PETTIT. So far as regards violating the confidence of the Convention, it is a thing that does not reach me. I have not acted with the committee. It is known that all the revisions have been made by the assiduous labors—the very arduous labors of the gentleman from Posey, (Mr. Owen,) the gentleman from Monroe (Mr. Reed,) and the gentleman from Wayne (Mr. Newman). And I undertake to say in their behalf, that they have most faithfully performed their duties, and that in no instance has the substance of a section been changed, except it may be in this; and it has been clearly owing to a misapprehension of what was the precise meaning of the Convention. And, in this very case, I am inclined to the opinion that no harm whatever has been done, for the section referred to by the gentleman from Laporte (Mr. Niles) makes it more imperative on the Legislature to place the proper guards on banking, than the idle and unmeaning words here employed. You may put in one "fip" if you choose, and that would serve as a basis upon which to issue one hundred dollars of paper. By such a provision as this requiring a specie basis, the Legislature is not bound to require a specie basis equal to the amount of the issue. Now, look at the seventh section; it more effectually guards the bill holders than that which has been omitted by the committee. What is it? [Mr. Pettit read the section.] Now, sir, if all bills issued as money, are at all times to be redeemable in gold and silver—as provided by this section—what better basis for banking do you want? Your Legislature cannot establish or charter any bank upon any other basis, than that its bills shall, at all times, be redeemable in specie. Sir, if there be any advantage in this matter, it will accrue to the public, for it requires that the banks shall pile up and keep on hand a sufficient amount of capital to redeem their issues. The clause is a stronger one than the specie basis clause. But as to the censure on the committee, which the gentlemen have thrown out, they had better censure themselves and the balance of the Convention for not attending to this matter. The report of the committee of revision was laid upon our tables, and it was our business to examine it. Will any gentleman say that he has stultified himself by being ignorant of what the committee reported? Did the gentleman from Monroe (Mr. Foster) not know? Did not every member of the Convention know what was reported? Let any gentleman say that he did not know what he voted upon, and he proclaims to the whole people of Indiana, his own ignorance and inattention to his duty.

Mr. KELSO. Does not the gentleman know that the practice has been to allow the reports from the committee on revision to remain sometime on the tables of members, before being acted upon, but in this instance, the question of concurrence was immediately put.

Mr. PETTIT. I do not know how that may be, but even if it was as the gentleman states, members have the same privilege of examining the reports. But, sir, it was read at the clerk's table and was approved of. And, sir, it is infinitely improved in language. The section as referred to the committee, meant nothing. "A specie basis," indeed! Leave it to the Legislature to say what the basis shall be! Nothing can be more absurd. But now it declares that all the issues of the bank shall be redeemable in gold and silver; this is infinitely better.

Mr. HOLMAN said: Gentlemen have become all at once, extremely sensitive on the subject of substantial changes being made by the committee on "revision, arrangement, and phraseology." On yesterday, when this same report was before the Convention for its concurrence—and I opposed that concurrence on the ground that a vital change had been made in the section limiting banking operations to the period of twenty years—gentlemen were then riotous for the adoption of the report, because the change though substantial, met their approval. Now, after more than twenty-four hours have elapsed, for the first time they discover that one of their favorite banking features has been slightly modified in the same report, and they all at once become astonishingly excited at the assumption of such power by the committee; and although but eleven men voted against concurring in the report on yesterday, after full opportunity to examine the report today, many who voted to concur are most vehement in their expressions of astonishment that the report is not in exact conformity with the sections as referred. One hundred and eight members voted on yesterday: scarcely a quorum is present on to-day. If an improper act has been done, let those who on yesterday voted to concur, bear the blame.

Mr. WOLFE. I can say for one, that when the report was read, I had it not on my table.

Mr. BRACKEN demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on re-considering the report by which the report of the committee was concurred in.

It was, upon a division—yeas 34, nays 46—decided in the negative.

So the vote was not re-considered.

Mr. BRACKEN. I believe there is no business at present to be done. I move that the Convention take a recess.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. If the Convention is not afraid to receive a report from the committee on revision, five minutes after the printed copies have been laid upon their tables, a report will be ready within that time.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. KELSO. I believe it is about time for me to call the attention of the Convention to a celebrated speech that made its appearance this morning. It is scarcely necessary for me to say that I refer to the pretended speech of the gentleman from Floyd (Mr. Thornton).

A VOICE. He is not here.

Mr. KELSO. I cannot help that. I cannot consent to lose the opportunity to notice that speech, containing as it does, what was never uttered on this floor, and the report of which has been kept back since the 21st of January, evidently for the purpose, as it seems to me, of inserting what was not spoken in debate, and of preventing me by the lateness of its publication, from replying to that part which relates to myself. The speech was directed chiefly against me; but it also contained attacks upon the gentlemen from Laporte, (Mr. Niles,) the gentleman from Vanderbug, (Mr. Blythe,) the gentleman from Crawford, (Mr. Pepper,) and the gentleman from Owen, (Mr. Dobson). On the part of these gentlemen, as well as on my own behalf, I think it necessary at all events, to state the fact that no such language as it contains was delivered here. And, sir, I trust the Convention will see the propriety of directing that it be kept out of the Book of Debates. At all events it shall not pass without a printed reply, and I intend that the reply shall be about as bitter as the speech itself. I will ask the Convention to order that the speech be not put into the book.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the objection to it?

Mr. KELSO. That it contains language which was never uttered here; that is the objection.

A VOICE. Read it.

Mr. KELSO. I will read that part which was never spoken.

A VOICE. Read it all. Let us have the whole of it.

Mr. KELSO. Here, then, are a few specimens of the manner in which the delegate, in his fabricated speech, has chosen to treat his fellow members of this Convention:

"In reference to the manner in which the measure has been assailed by those who have thought proper to oppose it, I cannot but admire the address and tact exhibited by them in the conduct of it. When the attack was about to be made, we could see them putting forward, as a van-guard, the very respectable, good looking, and able gentleman from Vanderburg, (Mr. Blythe,) to commence. His fair, plausible, and imposing manner, was well calculated for effect, and to carry alarm into the ranks of its friends. Fortunately, however, for our cause, although in making his onslaught there was a pretty loud roar of small arms, the shots fell short of the mark, and no injury was sustained by any one. Soon after this, however, you could see the beligerents industriously mustering and arraying their forces. You might see them rising, like so many genii, in every part of the Hall. Even the gentleman from Crawford, whom I had hoped to see in the ranks of our friends, took sides with the enemy, and was not the last forward in the fray; when I saw this, I must confess, it gave me sincere pain, and I felt almost disposed to cry out, in the language of Julius Cæsar when receiving the parricidal stab from the hand of Brutus, et tu Brute. It was a just cause for the anxious friends of this measure to congratulate themselves that the formidable demonstration of the gentleman did not terminate in its total annihilation. I must confess, when I saw the young man fire off his little pop-gun, with a look of such self-complacency as if he had effected something prodigiously great, I was strongly reminded of the case of one of the African negro kings who once took it into his head to declare war against the king of Great Britain, and in the prosecution of hostilities fired his shot-gun across the ocean at him, and after the smoke of his piece had dissipated inquired of his astonished attendants if he had not killed him!"

Another precious morceau:

"And now a few words as to the learned gentleman from Laporte, (Mr. Niles,) who is one to whom I ever listen with great gratification and deference, whenever he undertakes to address the Convention on any subject of interest. He, it seems, has seen fit to throw his weight into the scale against this great beneficent measure. From the high moral tone of this gentleman's arguments generally, they had justly acquired a most enviable influence over the opinions of the members of this Convention for being orthodox. I can assure you, Mr. President, I was truly disappointed when I found him raising his voice against it. I must confess, too, my disappointment was converted into alarm when I saw him rise with such a solemn look and in such a hollow, oracular tone, depict the evils which would inevitably flow from its adoption. I felt myself involuntarily assuming a position to brace myself against the advent of some direful, overwhelming calamity. The manner of the learned gentleman was sufficient to inspire one with the most awful forebodings, and to cause him to come to the conclusion that he ought at once prepare himself for his exit from this world. After having had time, however, to recover from the effect of these astounding announcements, made in such strong and glowing terms by the gentleman, I cannot but come to the conclusion that my learned, and I must be permitted to say, esteemed friend, has, in making his remarks, drawn more upon the stores of his imagination than his usually sound judgment and discrimination. I entertain no apprehensions of the evil results flowing from the adoption of the measure which he has, in such strong language, predicted."

The gentleman is extremely facetious! Hear him:

"I have said I expected to meet with opposition from gentlemen of the bar, and I regret to say that my apprehensions and predictions have been but too fully verified. I had no expectation, however, of encountering hostility from any other quarter, and more especially from the members of another learned profession, whose sympathies and countenance I hoped we should receive. You can imagine, then, what I felt at seeing my very sensible friend from Owen (Dr. Dobson) giving indications that he was also about poisoning his lance for an attack on us. Formidable as lawyers may be deemed in intellectual conflict, I feel more at home in a rencounter with them, as I am vain enough to believe that I have some knowledge of their mode of warfare, and can be better enabled to parry their thrusts; but I must say that I feel some secret dread coming over me when I discover that I must have a gentleman of the "pill and lance" pitted against me. They are so much better skilled in the art of killing, that I should feel almost disposed to come down ere awaiting a fire from one of them, especially from one possessed of the skill and experience of the gentleman from Owen." [Loud laughter.]

And now let us see in what manner the honorable member chooses to treat such an humble individual as myself:

"I cannot but be surprised at the bitterness with which this proposition is assailed by the gentleman from Switzerland (Mr. Kelso). Not satisfied with denouncing the measure as one which should not be entertained by the Convention, he chooses to throw out some illiberal and unmerited imputations against me, as the originator of it. He has gone out of the usual road to arraign my motives for introducing it, as intended for something like buncombe, and has very modestly assumed the part and tone of a very learned member of the legal profession indeed, whilst he placed me amongst the class of humble pettifoggers. He also rants about "party," and affects to deprecate the consequences growing out of it. I do not think considerations of this kind should weigh very seriously with that gentleman, or cause him any uneasiness; for if I have read his political history correctly, "party" considerations would give him no trouble—as, if necessary, he could vault from one side to the other with the most perfect facility, according to whichever he discovered to preponderate in strength. He has also chosen (which seems to be perfectly in keeping with him) to descend to the use of language with which I would not defile my lips by repeating here."

A part of that he said, but he has taken care to write it out more fully. But here, I say, is what I affirm he never uttered in my hearing, nor was it uttered at all:

"I admit the member has an advantage over me, in one particular at least; that whilst my humble name may be consigned to a state of oblivion his will have acquired an immortality of infamy, by being classed among the Judases, the Arnolds and Ravilliacs of a by-gone age; and the only difference between his and theirs, will be that he will occupy a lower and more humble niche in the scale of infamy. I admit the extraordinary powers of the member which enables him so successfully often to annoy an adversary; knowing this I have felt an insurmountable repugnance to be brought into conflict with him, feeling that I must be over-matched. But it is somewhat consoling to reflect that whatever his powers in that way may be, they resemble that of a certain diminutive though formidable animal, with which no one is desirous of being brought into association or contact; a power, however, which no one will ever envy the owner the possession of."

I say that the delegate from Floyd never uttered any such language on this floor.

Mr. GORDON. I am inclined to think that he did.

Mr. KELSO. I believe, sir, that my ears are as good as those of any gentleman here, and I say that he did not use any such language; if he had, I should have replied to him on the spot.

Mr. GORDON. As my old friend is not present to answer for himself, I will state that while he was making his speech, although there was at the time some degree of confusion prevailing in the Hall, I was seated so near to him that the greater part of what he said was heard by me distinctly. It was perfectly well known throughout the Hall that he was skinning some one most unmercifully.

Mr. HAMILTON. From my recollection of the remarks of the gentleman from Floyd, the speech as printed, is in substance the same as that delivered.

Mr. KELSO. Which part?

Mr. HAMILTON. The whole of it.

Mr. KELSO. I say it is radically different, and I repeat my request that the Convention prevent the publication of those parts of the speech which have been interpolated. I ask this as much on behalf of the gentleman from Laporte, the gentleman from Vanderburg, the gentleman from Crawford, and the gentleman from Owen, as on my own behalf, because it is about equally as severe on them as it is on me.

The PRESIDENT. Does the gentleman ask that the entire speech be left out?

Mr. KELSO. Yes, sir. I would ask that the entire of it be excluded.

Mr. BLYTHE. So far as concerns myself, I believe there is nothing in that part of the speech which relates to me, to which I make any very serious objection. I am satisfied with my own part of it; I have no apprehension that its publication can do me any very serious injury. There is nothing in it that I regard as personally offensive to me, and therefore I care nothing about it. I think, however, that a portion of that which relates to the gentleman from Switzerland, is not entitled to a place in our Debates, as well as a remark applying to the gentleman from Crawford, who, I will take this occasion to say, is, in every sense of the word, a gentleman. I think that the gentleman from Floyd was trespassing too far in giving publicity to such remarks as he has introduced into his speech. I think he should have stricken from the report those objectionable passages.

Mr. McCLELLAND. I was sitting near the gentleman from Floyd when he made his speech, and I have only to say that, so far as my recollection goes, the report that is published is a tolerably accurate one. I thought there was some little acerbity in his tone and language towards the gentleman from Switzerland, but it was drawn out, the Convention will recollect, by an attack that was made on him.

Mr. KELSO. I will ask if you did not help to write it?

Mr. McCLELLAND. No, sir. I never saw the manuscript or the notes, or any part of the report of the speech, until I saw it this morning in the paper.

Mr. KELSO. I should not feel aggrieved at Major Thornton if he had allowed his remarks, even as written out, to have been published in a reasonable time. I could, and would have found an opportunity to have made a suitable reply; and, so far then as I was concerned, the matter might have rested, or the Major might have chosen his own course. But the pretended speech was delayed from the twenty-first of January until the eighth of February, a lapse of eighteen days. This delay was wholly unnecessary, for Major Thornton has not been over-laborious, nor has he been busy, active, or very efficient in the Convention, and certainly eighteen days was more time than was necessary to prepare such a speech for the press. The delay was, most unquestionably, an unnecessary one.

I therefore feel authorized to make the charge that the pretended speech was purposely delayed until the Saturday (to-day) before the adjournment, (which is on Monday,) so that I might be absent, (for I had set this morning to go home,) and that the base and cowardly fraud might be practiced upon the public and have its desired effect before I should have an opportunity to counteract or contradict it.

Men who are themselves honest, and who are actuated by pure and honorable motives, never resort to such means. It is only for the low and contemptible portion of mankind, thus to conduct an attack.

I now assert that I never gave Major Thornton any cause to make such an attack upon me, and I am certain in twenty-three years' acquaintance I have never knowingly crossed his path in any way; and it is my fixed opinion that the malice belongs much nearer home, but the lack of moral courage causes it to be concealed. Hence the low, cowardly attempt, to make the stab in my absence.

Should any man doubt the cowardice with which I charge the getters up of this malignant and black-hearted slander, let him read what has been published for Major Thornton's speech in the "Journal" of the eighth. He there pretends he said of me everything vile and vituperative that one man could well say of another; he then proceeds to rate me as to my powers, &c., with a small filthy animal, &c., and in the next breath he plasters me all over with fulsome praise. He speaks of me as a man of talent and ability, and that in great questions of public policy I am generally right, &c. Now, sir, if I abuse a man either with my tongue or the pen, I must first at least believe he deserves it, and then I will not seek to shelter myself behind a fulsome eulogy nor seek to quiet his outraged feelings by praising his many virtues, when I have but a moment before denied that it was possible for him to have any. Major Thornton is not at the bottom of this cowardly attack. He has suffered himself to be used as a cat's paw, to do the dirty work of dirtier men than himself, if possible, and not of his own party.

And I charge, unequivocally, that Major Thornton never uttered the speech which has appeared in the paper of this morning, at any time in the Convention; that, so far as the abusive language against me is concerned, the pretense that it was ever uttered by Major Thornton upon the floor of the Convention, is a base fabrication and a libel.

Major Thornton did say some bitter things about political vacillation on that day, which were directed at me, to which I replied on the same day; but that he ever charged me upon the floor of the Convention with treason or treasonable conduct, or compared me to Judas, or Arnold, or Ravalliac, is basely false; and I now say that any man, be he whom he may, who will make such a charge against me, politically or otherwise, I pronounce him an infamous liar and an unmitigated scoundrel. But, on the contrary, I have always acted boldly and above board in all my political dealings, with all parties and under all circumstances, and he who asserts to the contrary is a base slanderer.

In the election of Mr. Hannegan, about which so much complaint has been made, I boldly assert that no man in the Legislature of either party was deceived by me, nor was any man deceived at all, unless he was too stupid to understand the plainest kind of plain English; for the day before the election took place, and in the morning of the same day on which it did take place, I repeatedly stated to divers persons that I should vote for Ned Hannegan. And when I was asked how long I would continue to vote for him, I replied, "Until the last star shall fall from heaven, unless the election should be sooner brought to a close." All hands knew who I intended to vote for. There was no deception used in the case.

The question being on excluding the speech from the Book of Debates,

Mr. GREGG. I have only to say that we can get along without any action in regard to this matter. I think I can say for Major Thornton, that he will take care the objectionable portions of the speech shall not appear in the Book of Debates; I therefore move that the subject be passed by.

Mr. PETTIT. Since questions of personal attack and bitterness and vituperation in debate are brought up, I beg leave to say to the Convention that we have had less of it during the four months that we have been in session than might have been anticipated, or than has been found in any other body of the same number of delegates. In a body consisting of a hundred and fifty members, coming together from different parts of the State, among whom such a diversity of opinion existed, it could hardly be expected that all irritation could be avoided, that some degree of warmth would not be exhibited. I believe, however, that the members of this body are going to part with more good feeling existing among them than the members of any other such body ever did part on earth. [Applause.] I am truly glad to see that it is so. We have been engaged in a work that concerns not only ourselves but posterity, and I am satisfied that the result of our labors will redound to their good; and I will take this occasion to say that if, in the course of debate, I have been betrayed into warmth and irritation, if I have thrown a pointed shaft at any one, I now most sincerely and earnestly beg his pardon. I do not desire to wound the feelings of any gentleman, and if mine have been wounded on any occasion it is forgotten.

Mr. KELSO. I do not complain of any wound to my feelings, for I have made it a rule through life to expect to meet annoyances and to disregard them. I have only this to say, that if any man can gain any advantage over me by his tongue, he is at liberty to do it if he can. I am the last man to ask a single particle of favor, and if any such remarks as are here published had been made in my hearing, or had they been published at the time, they would have received a suitable reply—but I am forced to come to the conclusion that they were kept back in the hope that I might be away. If the gentlemen who are attacked in the same speech are willing that it shall go into the book, I will withdraw my motion. I can take care of myself, though it must be apparent that if inserted it will be a disgrace to the book.

Mr. BLYTHE. The gentleman from Switzerland has perhaps misunderstood what I said. I said that so far as I was myself concerned, I was willing that it should be published; but I said at the same time, that I thought it improper that it should go into the book in consequence of the passages it contained in reference to the gentleman from Switzerland and the gentleman from Crawford.

Mr. KELSO. And the gentleman from Laporte, too.

Mr. BLYTHE. That I have not observed so particularly.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on excluding the speech from the journal of the debates.

The question being put,

It was decided in the negative.

Mr. MILLER of Gibson moved to reconsider the vote concerning report number ten of the committee on revision.

Mr. BRACKEN demanded the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question being on the motion of the gentleman from Gibson,

The yeas and nays were demanded, and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 34, nays 46—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Bascom, Borden, Bowers, Butler, Clark of Hamilton, Clements, Crawford, Edmonston, Fisher, Foster, Gordon, Haddon, Hardin, Hitt, Hogin, Kelso, Kilgore, Kinley, Logan, March, McClelland, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Moore, Mower, Nave, Schoonover, Spann, Tague, Wallace, Watts, and Wolfe—34.

NAYS.—Messrs. Beard, Blythe, Bourne, Bracken, Brookbank, Carr, Chapman, Cookerly, Davis of Madison, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Elliott, Farrow, Foley, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hawkins, Helmer, Kent, Lockhart, Maguire, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Milroy, Mooney, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Pettit, Rariden, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Smith of Scott, Tannehill, Thomas, Todd, Wiley, Yocum, and Mr. President—46.

So the vote was not re-considered.

Mr. BRIGHT moved a suspension of the rules, in order to enable him to introduce a resolution.

The motion was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. PEPPER of Crawford, leave was granted him to sign the name of Mr. S. FRISBIE (he being absent) to the Constitution, having been requested to do so by that gentleman.

On motion by Mr. BADGER,

The Convention adjourned.

[The following report was omitted at its proper place, and is inserted here by request.]

REPORT BY MR. BIDDLE,

From the select committee of the Convention on the University Fund, made Jan. 21.

The select committee to whom it was referred to inquire into the expediency of dividing the University Fund among the several Colleges of the State; and also, into the right and expediency of appropriating the said Fund to common schools, have directed me to make the following report:

“The fund denominated the ‘University Fund’ originated in a grant by Congress contained in the act of April 19, 1816, enabling ‘the people of the Indiana Territory to form a State government.’ The grant is in the words following: ‘That one entire township, which shall be designated by the President of the United States in addition to the one heretofore reserved for the purpose, shall be reserved for the use of a seminary of learning, and vested in the Legislature of said State to be appropriated solely to the use of such seminary by the said Legislature.’

No language declaring a trust could be more direct and explicit; leaving in fact no room for construction, and as will at once be seen, it excludes the idea of the application of the means derived from the trust to either of the purposes named in the resolutions of inquiry submitted to the committee.

No part of the fund originated from any gift or grant of the State of Indiana. Even the expense of managing it, has been paid from the fund itself. The State is simply the trustee of the fund which, according to the terms of the grant, is to be ‘appropriated solely to the use of the seminary.’

In pursuance of the trust, the management of which the State undertook, the site of the seminary, since denominated the Indiana University, was established on one of the townships granted by Congress for its endowment. This was done for the expressed purpose of increasing the prices of the seminary lands. All the sales of lands in this township (the one in Monroe county) were made subsequently to the said location of the seminary; purchasers were advised thereof, and in consequence, the land was sold at greatly enhanced prices. The diversion of the fund would seem to inflict a serious injury without corresponding public benefit upon a portion of our own citizens, who contributed to its increase, upon the faith of the advantages which they were to derive from the location of the institution in their midst, and which, in fact, formed a part of the consideration for which they paid in the purchase of their lands.

By the aid of the fund, buildings have been erected for the use of the University, and library, apparatus, and minerals, have been purchased. The institution is now in successful operation, with the different departments of instruction usual in such institutions. A town has grown up around the University, with boarding houses, and other accommodations adapted to the institution.

In addition to the benefits conferred upon young men of our own State, of whom the annual number of sixty from different counties are educated in the institution, free of the cost of tuition, which exemption together with the provision of a College Boarding House, designed to reduce boarding to the lowest possible rate, brings the advantages of the University within the attainment of most young men of enterprise; those resorting to the University from other States, expend among our citizens each year, a sum larger than the whole annual expenditure for the support of the University.

It may likewise be remarked, that the policy of the General Government on this subject, has been uniform for a period of more than half a century. Each State, upon entering the confederacy, has, by act of Congress, received a large gift of public lands for common schools, and a very small grant in comparison therewith for the endowment of a literary institution of a higher grade, which might afford to young men in the new settlements of the country the opportunity of literary and scientific training.

So far as relates to the seminary endowment, Indiana has not had her equal proportion with the other new States. She has in fact received less than any one of them. Thus Ohio received three College townships, and Michigan, Wisconsin, and Iowa, were permitted to select their seminary lands in quarter sections from the whole State, thus in fact more than doubling the value of the endowment. California, upon her recent admission, received no less than four townships of land for the endowment of a University.

The number of acres in Indiana for common schools was 1,113,761, besides the saline lands which have also been given to common schools, while the number of acres reserved for the use of the seminary was but 42,080—4000 acres less than the State was entitled to under the grant.

Could the University fund now be appropriated to common schools, it would, with the present population of the State, amount to but about a cent a year to each child, and in a few years not to half a cent a year.

The object to be gained, even if consistent with good faith and the nature of the trust, would seem to be too small for an attempt to produce the disturbing effects in the relations of a community, which would ensue from a diversion of the fund, and would by no means compensate for the destruction of an institution which ranks among the first of our country.

Besides, it is not doubted by the committee that by the establishment of a Normal school in the University or department, for the special training of teachers, more good would be achieved for common schools, in the training of a class of professional teachers, than could result by dispersing the fund in an infinitesimal proportion over the State.

And the committee recommend the indefinite postponement of the subject, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

MR. THORNTON'S REMARKS

In Convention, January 20th, 1851.

The article in relation to the trustees of the town of Clarksville was taken up on its second reading.

MR. THORNTON. This is an article which I had the honor to report as chairman of the select committee, which was composed of the delegation from the two counties of Clark and Floyd, to which the subject was referred; and it may not be improper therefore that I should make a brief explanation to the Convention as to the motives that induced the committee to report it. I stated on a former occasion that the town of Clarksville was laid out in pursuance of an act of the Legislature of Virginia, granting to Col. George Rogers Clark and his regiment a tract of land, containing one hundred and fifty thousand acres, of which one thousand acres was authorized to be laid out as the town of Clarksville. Certain individuals were appointed trustees, and those individuals and their successors have acted as trustees of the town of Clarksville ever since. It was remarked the other day, when this question was up, that these trustees had been regarded as an independent and irresponsible corporation, over which the authorities of the State have no control. I have stated on a former occasion that the gentlemen who represent the county of Clark are more immediately interested in this matter than I am. But I wish to say to the Convention that the provisions that are here proposed for the adoption of the Convention are in accordance with the wishes of the corporation. The trustees themselves, it seems, desire that something of this kind should be done. I have taken the liberty of sending copies of this article to all the parties concerned, and have received replies from them that it is entirely satisfactory. So far as the trustees are concerned, they are, I believe, satisfied with it. I consulted with Mr. Crawford, who is their counsel, and in fact this article was drawn up in accordance with his suggestions. I will say further that it is necessary that such a provision should be adopted in order to enable the authorities of the town of Clarksville to collect certain debts, for which suits are now pending. The Convention will recollect that there was a special exemption in the old Constitution, in the article which required that all officers should live within the township or county in which they were elected, in favor of the trustees of Clarksville.

When a similar exception was sometime ago proposed by my friend from Clark, (Judge Read,) to be inserted in the new Constitution, it was opposed by me, and the provision herein contained suggested, which meets the concurrence of the whole delegation from Clark and Floyd counties. The town of Clarksville is principally situated in the county of Clark, although a small portion of it lies in Floyd county, and in the immediate vicinity of the city of New Albany. It is now proposed to appoint three trustees, two of whom to reside in Clark county, one of which to reside in the town of Clarksville, and the other in Floyd county, as substitutes for the present trustees, which, I believe, are nine in number, though seventeen was the number at first when the town was laid out. I will say to gentlemen who entertain doubts as to the propriety of the measure, that the sole object is to place the property of the town in a way that it can be applied for the benefit of the persons who are justly entitled to it—the citizens of the said town. The trustees who have heretofore acted as such are none of them residents of that town, and feel no interest in common with the citizens of the place. It seems that they are all residents of Jeffersonville—at all events they have ever been non-residents of said town. The citizens complain of this, and I think justly. They charge that the trustees, though frequently called on for the purpose, have never appropriated one dollar for the benefit of the people of the place, or for its improvement. It seems that there are several suits pending, and debts outstanding which are liable to be lost unless something of the kind here proposed is done.

I understand therefore that all those who are interested in this matter are in favor of the adoption of the article as reported. I do not wish to detain the Convention by reading some documents which would conduce to present the matter in its proper light. As I understand it this Convention has the power, and I believe it to be our duty, to make the article under consideration a part of the new Constitution. I presume that the State Legislature might legitimately exercise control over the subject, but doubts have been entertained as to it, and therefore we had best settle the thing at once. This corporation has been in existence for upwards of a half century, and I suppose it may be said with truth, that there has not been a single act done for the benefit of the town for the last twenty or thirty years, although the acting trustees were in possession of a large amount of means and funds belonging to the town which should have been applied for the benefit of its citizens. I am aware that some gentlemen here feel doubts as to the power of this Convention, or the authorities of this State, to interfere with it. I do not understand that a corporation of this character occupies the same footing with a private corporation. It is a municipal corporation, over which the Legislature has control to change, modify, enlarge, or restrict it, &c.—(See 4 Wheat. 659, 694; 2 Kent's Comm. 245; 4 Ham. O. R. 427; 15 Mass. 197; 13 Wend. 325; 7 Con. R. 585; 5 Greenl. 342). If the provision here proposed for adoption becomes a part of the Constitution, it will authorize the Legislature to modify the charter of the town of Clarksville, which will place it in the power of the corporate authorities to collect the debts and demands due it, and for which suits are pending, and upon the collection to apply them to some useful purpose, such as a school, public ground, &c., which seems to be desired by all those concerned.

I have personally no kind of interest in the matter, but knowing the circumstances and believing it to be indispensably necessary to accomplish the objects before stated, I have, at the request of the citizens of said town, agreed to submit the matter to the Convention, and use my agency in trying to effect its accomplishment in conjunction with the immediate representatives of the county of Clark. I have no doubt but the proposed arrangement will receive the approbation of all the persons in any way concerned. I hope, therefore, that the article will become a part of the Constitution. It is proposed to insert it under the head of miscellaneous provisions.

Mr. THORNTON. I have heretofore indicated, Mr. President, that I am a warm and decided advocate for something like a reformation in the practice of the law; and I am fully aware, sir, that I am opposed in this opinion by many members of my own profession. But, sir, this is not to be wondered at; for, if you look into the whole history of the legal world, you will find that the most bitter opponents of everything in the way of change or reformation in the law, have been found among the members of the legal profession. It has lately been remarked on the floor of the Parliament of Great Britain, by an English attorney, if you wish to effect any reformation in the laws of the country, you must never look to lawyers to aid you in the accomplishment of it.

Now, sir, I have some experience at the bar, and I fully believe that the present system does not favor the promotion of the ends of justice. I am by no means, however, an advocate for the appointment of commissioners as the only mode to effect this object, but we unquestionably, I think, ought to take such action in the premises, as will enable the Legislature to require this reformation to be made.

Now the objection of the gentleman from Hancock would seem to indicate that the object of this article was to delegate the power of making law to a commission, and so he would appear to be desirous of impressing the Convention. Sir, I will not do the shrewd and masterly intellect of that gentleman the injustice to suppose that the objection he made a few moments ago, was made in all sincerity. The argument which he used and the style he adopted, may be very well adapted to the course of a rabble-rouser, and I admit the eminent qualifications of the gentleman from Hancock in that respect, to the fullest extent, [laughter,] but such declamation and sophistry as he has used on this occasion, are not the most successful means to be used in preventing the adoption of the necessary reforms. And, sir, after all, in regard to this commission, I believe it is the only way in which we can procure a correct system of reform in the practice of law. The gentleman from Hancock says, "Let the Legislature do this." He says he would leave it entirely to the General Assembly; not remembering, however, that the unwieldy character of that body would render such a thing wholly impracticable. Now, sir, we know very well that there is no other mode of effecting a codification of our laws except by a commission. The example of some of the first States of the Union is enough for me. Virginia has ever pursued that course, and in one instance the immortal Jefferson composed one of a commission for that purpose. The great Empire State of New York has done the same, and that eminent jurist, James Kent, was one of the commission; and I call upon every member here who knows anything of the matter, to say whether the fruits of that commission were not good. Sir, this is calculated to bring about a result which has been approved of by the best judges of law, and the most experienced statesmen and members of the legal profession. In New York they have recently appointed three gentlemen as commissioners to prepare a code of procedure, and they have gone on and in pursuance of their appointment they have completed a code which has been approved by the Legislature; and the bench and bar of New York are now practicing upon that principle, and I believe it is well liked by all, except some of the old hunker members of the bar. [Laughter and applause.] And, sir, you will find that these are the very gentlemen now here who, if they dared, would rise in opposition to this attempt at reform. I was somewhat surprised, however, to see my very learned and judicious friend from Delaware (Mr. Kilgore) rise in his place and make the motion which he did; but I must confess that I was not at all astonished to see my friend from Hancock, who is so notorious a rabble-rouser, engage in opposition to this measure.

Sir, the constituency whom I represent feel a very great interest in this matter, and I promised them when they honored me with this trust, to endeavor to carry out in practice the principles which I believed to be correct in reference to law reform.

Now let us read this article again. [Mr. T. read the article.] I would remark to the Convention that the committee on the practice of law and law reform, of whom Judge Borden is chairman, has reported this article. I believe, however, that Mr. Borden dissented from this report, and submitted a minority report, pretty much the same in substance. The delegate from Wayne (Mr. Newman) also dissented from this report, and presented another minority report to the Convention. So far as I am concerned, however, I approve of the report made by the majority of the committee. One great objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Wayne is, that it puts the matter off. I admire my friend from Wayne very much for his clearheadedness and great law learning, but at the same time I must remark that I fear he belongs to that class who cherish strong attachments to old, obsolete systems, and which are so very difficult to overcome or get rid of. His plan, I apprehend, is only a covert effort at staving off and defeating the contemplated reform, by proposing to leave it discretionary with the Legislature to engage in something of the kind at some future, and perhaps distant day. I cannot agree to this, for I am now becoming an old man and I am extremely anxious to see something in the way of salutary and rational reform adopted ere I close my earthly career.

Now, sir, the article provides that "the General Assembly shall at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, (yes, sir, I hope it will be at its first session,) provide for the appointment of three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to revise, reform, simplify, and abridge the rules and practice, pleadings, forms, and proceedings, both civil and criminal, of the courts of this State, and they shall provide for the abolition of the distinct forms of action."

Here is the provision which is presented for the consideration of the Convention:

"They shall provide for the abolition of the distinct forms of actions at law now in use, and that justice may be administered in a uniform mode of pleading without reference to any distinction between law and equity."

There it is, sir. Now the only objection which I have to the plan proposed, is that it will incur some expense to have a commission to effect the object contemplated, but I hope that will not be an insurmountable objection. We are also seeking to abolish the distinction between law and equity. This, I think, is a reform which is absolutely necessary, and imperiously demanded. With the permission of the Convention I will take the liberty of stating a case, by way of illustrating the workings of our present system. Some years ago a lady, who had considerably passed the year of her majority, took it into her head—which, by the way, is nothing very unusual—to get married. She was the owner of a little patrimony left her by her father, being a small farm consisting of fifty or sixty acres, worth about three hundred dollars and upwards; and the intended husband having been married before and having several children by his first wife, was gallant enough to propose to the lady in case of any difficulty arising that she should be sole possessor of her own estate. She immediately turned in and sold her farm to a brother-in-law, for which she executed to him a deed, and he was to execute his notes in payment thereof payable to a trustee for her use. She was, however, in such a hurry to get married that she did not take the precaution to see to the execution of the notes, and they never were executed until after the lapse of five years; when, her brother-in-law refusing to pay or execute the notes for the payment of the purchase money, a suit in chancery was instituted by her husband and her to compel the payment of it, and to subject the land for it. The bill was drawn by eminent and able counsel, and, as I conceive, with great legal skill. A demurrer was interposed to the bill, which, after a very elaborate argument, was overruled by the court and the defendant ruled to answer, which he did. Exceptions were filed to his answer, which were sustained, and the defendant ruled to answer over. After this the defendant died and letters of administration were taken out, and the administrator was made a party to the suit. The lady having died the suit was revived by her husband, as administrator. Various other steps were taken in the cause, and a great mass of testimony taken. After the cause had been pending for some twelve or fourteen years it was finally brought to a hearing, when the cause was dismissed by the court upon the ground that the complainant's remedy was at law and not in equity. A heavy bill of costs was the consequence, which the complainant was ruled to pay. In accordance with the decision of the court the complainant then instituted his action at law in the same court, when behold, the unfortunate plaintiff was met with the statute of limitations as a defense, which was sustained by the very same court which had previously decided the remedy of the plaintiff was at law instead of in equity, and the case, together with the debt, was lost! The case has been taken to the Supreme Court, where it is now pending and undetermined, but what is to be the final result is uncertain. It is, however, of little consequence to the complainant, as most of the parties are dead and the estate of the defendant wasted and gone, so that the debt may be considered as irrecoverably lost. About twenty years have been spent, together with an amount in costs, including the original debt. All this delay, difficulty, and expense, grew out of the circumstance of making a distinction between law and equity and having a separate form for each. This is an outrage upon common sense, and violates the plainest principles of right and justice, and well merits the denunciation of every individual whose notions are untrammelled by sophistry and the senseless, unmeaning quibbles of the law, as now and heretofore administered.

Thus, then, I say that this distinction between law and equity is calculated to close the door of justice, for no man who wishes to appeal to a tribunal to decide a question of right or wrong, can see the necessity of having two distinct forms.

This article, then, contemplates abolishing the distinction between law and equity, as well as all distinction in the forms of actions. As it is now, a man may bring an action of assumpsit instead of an action of debt, and a demurrer may be interposed and the action lost, although the debt is perfectly just. Now this article proposes that there shall be three commissioners appointed to prepare a system of law procedure which contemplates abolishing these useless distinctions. I do sincerely hope that we will adopt a system which seems to be obtaining in all the most enlightened States of the Union, and is receiving the sanction of the most able statesmen and profound jurists of the age.

Sir, I hope then, that this article will not be indefinitely postponed. If any mode can be resorted to to avoid the expense which will be incurred I should be glad; but whether or not, I should regret to see the present antiquated system, which is not at all adapted to the exigencies of the times, any longer kept up. I should regret to hear the State of Indiana spoken of as clinging to old institutions and obsolete usages, while some of the most distinguished of her sister States are progressing in the high road of reform in the science and practice of the law. Georgia, Missouri, Iowa, and other States, have done so. Texas has adopted the same system; and, as I remarked before, the great Empire State of New York has set us a glorious example for our imitation.

Mr. President, I am sorry at any time to trouble the Convention, but this is a matter about which I feel a deep interest. I do not expect myself to practice much longer, for I am now an old man; and although I never made much at the bar myself, yet I am anxious to leave behind me, in the State of my adoption, a system of practice which the people will approve of. I feel myself fully instructed upon this subject—more than upon any other. It is demanded of me by my constituents, that I should use my best efforts, however humble they may be, to effect this reform; for upon it the people had set their hearts more, perhaps, than upon any other, and sooner or later it must and will be brought about by the stern voice of our constituency. I say to gentlemen with confidence, but in the kindest spirit, that we had better try and meet the wishes of those who are anxiously looking to us for this great, salutary, and beneficial measure of reform, as so vital to the public interest. If we should recklessly disregard the wishes of our people and procrastinate the proposed reform, we will soon hear their voice coming up in thunder-tones unconditionally demanding its adoption.

REMARKS OF MR. KINLEY, In the Constitutional Convention.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb. 7, 1851.

MR. DEFREES—Sir: My speech of November 8, 1850, is reported so unlike anything I did say, I hope you will place in the errata the following true transcript, written off immediately after the speech was delivered.

ISAAC KINLEY.

MR. PRESIDENT: I know, sir, it is very difficult to form a law that will produce the greatest good to society, and avoid, at the same time, all attendant evil. A law so perfect man never had; a law so perfect no human wisdom can devise. Why, the river sometimes overleaps its natural barriers. Let it then be our aim to secure the greatest good, and produce the least possible evil. When we have done this, if, at the same time, we have provided a recompense for the injured party, we have, in my opinion, come as nearly to perfection as it is possible for human wisdom to attain. For, first, you have done the greatest possible good; second, you have produced the least possible evil, and third, you have recompensed the injured party.

Our laws should correspond with the genius and spirit of the people. Gentlemen should remember that we live in an age of enterprise, that we represent enterprising constituents. If we should insert a clause in the Constitution crippling the energies of the people, better had it been if this Convention had never met.

Public works, such as railroads, turnpikes, canals, &c., are the veins and arteries through which the wealth of the country circulates. As the blood must flow freely through the natural veins, in order to the health of the physical system, so there must be no clog to the healthy flow of the blood of the body politic. Let me not be misunderstood. I will go as far as the farthest, in protecting the individual against the encroachments of associated wealth. I would have us form a Constitution by the wise provisions of which every right may be protected and every wrong redressed.

We came here to declare the organic law, not to legislate in detail. Certain principles which time and experience have exemplified, have established beyond a reasonable doubt, may become a part of this Constitution. Further than this, in my opinion, we should not go. We cannot foresee the wants of this country in all time to come. A restraint wise and salutary to-day, within twenty years may oppress the very class you would now protect. Whereas that which is essentially organic law, principle is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. But if we commence legislating where will it end? Is there any other subject on which we will be called to act, demanding less of special law than the one now in debate? When will our labors close if we must make a Statute Book instead of a Constitution? I can see no reason for distrusting the Legislature. The members of that body may be as patriotic, as devoted to the interest of their constituents, as jealous of the rights of the people as the members of this Convention. Let us leave these matters purely legislative to the proper legislative authority.

I propose, Mr. President, if a proper opportunity offers, to move an amendment to this effect:

“No man’s personal services shall be demanded, nor private property taken, without just compensation.”

It will be seen that I prefer the word “personal” to that of “particular.” If we have had the services of a man, equity and justice demand that he should be paid. You pay your Judges, Justices, and other legal officers, but of the witness—contrary to every rule of justice and equity—you demand service and give him no compensation.

Whatever meaning was originally intended by the word particular, we know that our courts have given it a very restrictive signification. With the language which I have used, while every one who serves the public will be paid for his services, the meaning will be so explicit that there will be no possibility of its being misunderstood.

The section in relation to the apportionment and representation being under consideration upon its third reading,

MR. HAWKINS said: Mr. President, I was not in my seat yesterday when this section was ordered to be engrossed, or I would have offered an amendment to the section. I have had one drawn up several days, and also an amendment to the next section to the same purport; and I shall now move to re-commit with instructions. It appears to me a plain proposition the force of which cannot well be met and resisted in reason, "that the entire population of any state or country should be the basis of its Representation; all who are the subjects of the law, whose rights are to be protected and guarded by its operations, should be entitled to representation." It is the principle recognized by the General Government, in its apportionment of representation to the several States; the same principle is adopted by Illinois in her new constitution, as well as by some of the other states. I know, sir, that some object to a change because it will make additional expense in ascertaining the number; but the additional expense will be trifling, the individual who takes down the number of inhabitants and over the age of 21 years, can about as easily, with the same trouble, ascertain the entire number residing in each family, and thereby obtain the result of the whole. By adopting this principle, counties in this state, that have a large transient population, in their towns and cities, would lose from their present representation, to the advantage of the interior farming counties; this is a result that I am in favor of bringing about. I move, therefore, that the section be re-committed with instructions, to amend in accordance with the above suggestions.

MONDAY, FEB. 10, 1851—6 o'clock A. M.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. FARROW.

On motion by Mr. BORDEN,

The reading of the Journal of Saturday was dispensed with.

Mr. OWEN, from the committee on revision, made a final report.

On motion,

The report was concurred in.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the committee on accounts made a report relative to the various allowances made to the members of the Convention for mileage, &c. The report also embraced a detail of sundry claims examined and allowed by the Convention, &c., &c., &c.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. DUNN of Jefferson offered for adoption a resolution directing the Secretary of State to furnish the Governor and other State officers with copies of the Debates and the Journal of the Convention, as also the Judge and Marshal of the United States Court for this District, and the Judges of the Supreme Court.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BRIGHT offered a resolution to the effect that the Secretary be authorized to have five thousand copies of the Constitution and Address published in the German language, the additional expense not to exceed the sum of five hundred dollars, &c., &c.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MAGUIRE submitted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the chairman of the committee on accounts, and the Auditor of State, be empowered to examine and pass on such accounts as may not yet have been rendered, the same to be approved by the President of the Convention."

The question being on the adoption of the resolution,

It was decided in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. BRACKEN,

The thanks of the Convention were unanimously tendered to the committee on revision for the able manner in which they had discharged the duties which had devolved upon them.

The various parts of the new Constitution being now completed and arranged, it is as follows:

PREAMBLE.

TO THE END, that justice be established, public order maintained, and liberty perpetuated; WE, the People of the State of Indiana, grateful to ALMIGHTY God for the free exercise of the right to choose our own form of government, do ordain this Constitution.

ARTICLE I.

BILL OF RIGHTS.

SECTION 1. WE DECLARE, That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that all power is inherent in the People; and that all free governments are, and of right ought to be, founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, and well-being. For the advancement of these ends, the People have, at all times, an indefeasible right to alter and reform their government.

SEC. 2. All men shall be secured in the natural right to worship Almighty God, according to the dictates of their own consciences.

SEC. 3. No law shall, in any case whatever, control the free exercise and enjoyment of religious opinions, nor interfere with the rights of conscience.

SEC. 4. No preference shall be given, by law, to any creed, religious society, or mode of worship; and no man shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support, any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry, against his consent.

SEC. 5. No religious test shall be required as a qualification for any office of trust or profit.

SEC. 6. No money shall be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious or theological institution.

SEC. 7. No person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness, in consequence of his opinions on matters of religion.

SEC. 8. The mode of administering an oath or affirmation, shall be such as may be most consistent with, and binding upon, the conscience of the person to whom such oath or affirmation may be administered.

SEC. 9. No law shall be passed restraining the free interchange of thought and opinion, or restricting the right to speak, write, or print, freely, on any subject whatever : but, for the abuse of that right, every person shall be responsible.

SEC. 10. In all prosecutions for libel, the truth of the matters alleged to be libelous, may be given in justification.

SEC. 11. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable search or seizure, shall not be violated ; and no warrant shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the person or thing to be seized.

SEC. 12. All courts shall be open ; and every person, for injury done to him in his person, property, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law. Justice shall be administered freely, and without purchase ; completely, and without denial ; speedily, and without delay.

SEC. 13. In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right to a public trial, by an impartial jury, in the county in which the offense shall have been committed ; to be heard by himself and counsel ; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof ; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor.

SEC. 14. No person shall be put in jeopardy twice, for the same offense ; and no person, in any criminal prosecution, shall be compelled to testify against himself.

SEC. 15. No person arrested, or confined in jail, shall be treated with unnecessary rigor.

SEC. 16. Excessive bail shall not be required. Excessive fines shall not be imposed. Cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted. All penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense.

SEC. 17. Offenses, other than murder or treason, shall be bailable by sufficient sureties. Murder or treason shall not be bailable, when the proof is evident, or the presumption strong.

SEC. 18. The penal code shall be founded on the principles of reformation, and not of vindictive justice.

SEC. 19. In all criminal cases whatever, the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts.

SEC. 20. In all civil cases, the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate.

SEC. 21. No man's particular services shall be demanded, without just compensation. No man's property shall be taken by law, without just compensation ; nor, except in case of the State, without such compensation first assessed and tendered.

SEC. 22. The privilege of the debtor to enjoy the necessary comforts of life, shall be recognized by wholesome laws, exempting a reasonable amount of property from seizure or sale, for the payment of any debt or liability hereafter contracted : and there shall be no imprisonment for debt, except in case of fraud.

SEC. 23. The General Assembly shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities, which, upon the same terms, shall not equally belong to all citizens.

SEC. 24. No ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall ever be passed.

SEC. 25. No law shall be passed, the taking effect of which shall be made to depend upon any authority, except as provided in this Constitution.

SEC. 26. The operation of the laws shall never be suspended, except by the authority of the General Assembly.

SEC. 27. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, except in case of rebellion or invasion ; and then, only if the public safety demand it.

SEC. 28. Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against it, and in giving aid and comfort to its enemies.

SEC. 29. No person shall be convicted of treason, except on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or upon his confession in open court.

SEC. 30. No conviction shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture of estate.

SEC. 31. No law shall restrain any of the inhabitants of the State from assembling together in a peaceable manner, to consult for their common good ; nor from instructing their representatives ; nor from applying to the General Assembly for redress of grievances.

SEC. 32. The people shall have a right to bear arms, for the defense of themselves and the State.

SEC. 33. The military shall be kept in strict subordination to the civil power.

SEC. 34. No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house, without the consent of the owner ; nor, in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

SEC. 35. The General Assembly shall not grant any title of nobility, nor confer hereditary distinctions.

SEC. 36. Emigration from the State shall not be prohibited.

SEC. 37. There shall be neither slavery, nor involuntary servitude, within the State, otherwise than for the punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted. No indenture of any Negro or Mulatto, made and executed out of the bounds of the State, shall be valid within the State.

ARTICLE II.

SUFFRAGE AND ELECTION.

SECTION 1. All elections shall be free and equal.

SEC. 2. In all elections, not otherwise provided for by this Constitution, every white male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have resided in the State during the six months immediately preceding such election; and every white male, of foreign birth, of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, who shall have resided in the United States one year, and shall have resided in this State during the six months immediately preceding such election, and shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, conformably to the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization; shall be entitled to vote, in the township or precinct where he may reside.

SEC. 3. No soldier, seaman, or marine, in the army or navy of the United States, or of their allies, shall be deemed to have acquired a residence in the State, in consequence of having been stationed within the same; nor shall any such soldier, seaman, or marine, have the right to vote.

SEC. 4. No person shall be deemed to have lost his residence in the State, by reason of his absence, either on business of this State or of the United States.

SEC. 5. No Negro or Mulatto shall have the right of suffrage.

SEC. 6. Every person shall be disqualified from holding office, during the term for which he may have been elected, who shall have given or offered a bribe, threat, or reward, to procure his election.

SEC. 7. Every person who shall give or accept a challenge to fight a duel, or who shall knowingly carry to another person such challenge, or who shall agree to go out of the State to fight a duel, shall be ineligible to any office of trust or profit.

SEC. 8. The General Assembly shall have power to deprive of the right of suffrage, and to render ineligible, any person convicted of an infamous crime.

SEC. 9. No person holding a lucrative office or appointment, under the United States or under this State, shall be eligible to a seat in the General Assembly; nor shall any person hold more than one lucrative office at the same time, except as in this Constitution expressly permitted: Provided, that offices in the militia to which there is attached no annual salary, and the office of Deputy Postmaster where the compensation does not exceed ninety dollars per annum, shall not be deemed lucrative: And provided, also, that counties containing less than one thousand polls, may confer the office of Clerk, Recorder, and Auditor, or any two of said offices, upon the same person.

SEC. 10. No person who may hereafter be a collector, or holder of public moneys, shall be eligible to any office of trust or profit, until he shall have accounted for, and paid over, according to law, all sums for which he may be liable.

SEC. 11. In all cases in which it is provided that an office shall not be filled by the same person more than a certain number of years continuously, an appointment pro tempore shall not be reckoned a part of that term.

SEC. 12. In all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, electors shall be free from arrest, in going to elections, during their attendance there, and in returning from the same.

SEC. 13. All elections by the people shall be by ballot; and all elections by the General Assembly, or by either branch thereof, shall be viva voce.

SEC. 14. All general elections shall be held on the second Tuesday in October.

ARTICLE III.

DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS.

SECTION 1. The powers of the Government are divided into three separate departments; the Legislative, the Executive including the Administrative, and the Judicial: and no person, charged with official duties under one of these departments, shall exercise any of the functions of another, except as in this Constitution expressly provided.

ARTICLE IV.

LEGISLATIVE.

SECTION 1. The Legislative authority of the State shall be vested in a General Assembly, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives. The style of every law shall be: "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana;" and no law shall be enacted, except by bill.

SEC. 2. The Senate shall not exceed fifty, nor the House of Representatives one hundred members; and they shall be chosen by the electors of the respective counties or districts, into which the State may, from time to time, be divided.

SEC. 3. Senators shall be elected for the term of four years, and Representatives for the term of two years, from the day next after their general election: Provided, however, that the Senators elect, at the second meeting of the General Assembly under this Constitution¹ shall be divided, by lot, into two equal classes, as nearly as may be; and the seats of Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of two years, and of those of the second class at the expiration of four years; so that one-half, as nearly as possible, shall be chosen biennially forever thereafter. And in case of increase in the number of Senators, they shall be so annexed, by lot, to one or the other of the two classes, as to keep them as nearly equal as practicable.

SEC. 4. The General Assembly shall, at its second session after the adoption of this Constitution, and every sixth year thereafter, cause an enumeration to be made of all the white male inhabitants over the age of twenty-one years.

SEC. 5. The number of Senators and Representatives shall, at the session next following each period of making such enumeration, be fixed by law, and apportioned among the several counties, according to the number of white male inhabitants above twenty-one years of age, in each: Provided, that the first and second elections of members of the General Assembly, under this Constitution, shall be according to the apportionment last made by the General Assembly, before the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 6. A Senatorial or Representative district, where more than one county shall constitute a district, shall be composed of contiguous counties; and no county, for Senatorial apportionment, shall ever be divided.

SEC. 7. No person shall be a Senator or a Representative, who, at the time of his election, is not a citizen of the United States; nor any one who has not been, for two years next preceding his election, an inhabitant of this State, and, for one year next preceding his election, an inhabitant of the county or district, whence he may be chosen. Senators shall be at least twenty-five, and Representatives at least twenty-one years of age.

SEC. 8. Senators and Representatives, in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, shall be privileged from arrest, during the session of the General Assembly, and in going to and returning from the same; and shall not be subject to any civil process, during the session of the General Assembly, nor during the fifteen days next before the commencement thereof. For any speech or debate in either House, a member shall not be questioned in any other place.

SEC. 9. The sessions of the General Assembly shall be held biennially at the capital of the State, commencing on the Thursday next after the first Monday of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, and on the same day of every second year thereafter, unless a different day or place shall have been appointed by law. But if, in the opinion of the Governor, the public welfare shall require it, he may, at any time, by proclamation, call a special session.

SEC. 10. Each House, when assembled, shall choose its own officers, (the President of the Senate excepted,) judge the elections, qualifications, and returns of its own members, determine its rules of proceeding, and sit upon its own adjournment. But neither house shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any place other than that in which it may be sitting.

SEC. 11. Two-thirds of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may meet, adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members.

A quorum being in attendance, if either House fail to effect an organization within the first five days thereafter, the members of the House so failing, shall be entitled to no compensation, from the end of the said five days until an organization shall have been effected.

SEC. 12. Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and publish the same. The yeas and nays, on any question, shall, at the request of any two members, be entered, together with the names of the members demanding the same, on the journal: Provided, that on a motion to adjourn, it shall require one-tenth of the members present to order the yeas and nays.

SEC. 13. The doors of each House, and of Committees of the Whole, shall be kept open, except in such cases as, in the opinion of either House, may require secrecy.

SEC. 14. Either House may punish its members for disorderly behavior, and may, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member; but not a second time for the same cause.

SEC. 15. Either House, during its session, may punish, by imprisonment, any person not a member, who shall have been guilty of disrespect to the House, by disorderly or contemptuous behavior, in its presence; but such imprisonment shall not, at any one time, exceed twenty-four hours.

SEC. 16. Each House shall have all powers necessary for a branch of the legislative department of a free and independent State.

SEC. 17. Bills may originate in either House, but may be amended or rejected in the other, except that bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

SEC. 18. Every bill shall be read, by sections, on three several days, in each House; unless, in case of emergency, two-thirds of the House where such bill may be depending, shall, by a vote of yeas and nays, deem it expedient to dispense with this rule; but the reading of a bill, by sections on its final passage, shall, in no case, be dispensed with; and the vote on the passage of every bill or joint resolution shall be taken by yeas and nays.

SEC. 19. Every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith; which subject shall be expressed in the title. But if any subject shall be embraced in an act, which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be expressed in the title.

SEC. 20. Every act and joint resolution shall be plainly worded, avoiding, as far as practicable, the use of technical terms.

SEC. 21. No act shall ever be revised or amended by mere reference to its title; but the act revised, or section amended, shall be set forth and published at full length.

SEC. 22. The General Assembly shall not pass local or special laws, in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say:

Regulating the jurisdiction and duties of Justices of the Peace and of Constables;

For the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors;

Regulating the practice in courts of justice; Providing for changing the venue in civil and criminal cases;

Granting divorces;

Changing the names of persons;

For laying out, opening, and working on, highways, and for the election or appointment of supervisors;

Vacating roads, town plats, streets, alleys, and public squares;

Summoning and empanneling grand and petit juries, and providing for their compensation;

Regulating county and township business;

Regulating the election of county and township officers, and their compensation;

For the assessment and collection of taxes for State, county, township, or road purposes;

Providing for supporting common schools, and for the preservation of school funds;

In relation to fees or salaries;

In relation to interest on money;

Providing for opening and conducting elections of State, county, or township officers, and designating the places of voting;

Providing for the sale of real estate belonging to minors or other persons laboring under legal disabilities, by executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees.

SEC. 23. In all the cases enumerated in the preceding section, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general, and of uniform operation throughout the State.

SEC. 24. Provision may be made, by general law, for bringing suit against the State, as to all liabilities originating after the adoption of this Constitution; but no special act authorizing such suit to be brought, or making compensation to any person claiming damages against the State, shall ever be passed.

SEC. 25. A majority of all the members elected to each House, shall be necessary to pass every bill or joint resolution; and all bills and joint resolutions so passed shall be signed by the Presiding Officers of the respective Houses.

SEC. 26. Any member of either House shall have the right to protest, and to have his protest, with his reasons for dissent, entered on the Journal.

SEC. 27. Every statute shall be a public law, unless otherwise declared in the statute itself.

SEC. 28. No act shall take effect until the same shall have been published and circulated in the several counties of the State, by authority, except in cases of emergency, which emergency shall be declared in the preamble or in the body of the law.

SEC. 29. The members of the General Assembly shall receive, for their services, a compensation to be fixed by law; but no increase of compensation shall take effect during the session at which such increase may be made. No session of the General Assembly, except the first under this Constitution, shall extend beyond the term of sixty-one days, nor any special session beyond the term of forty days.

SEC. 30. No Senator or Representative shall, during the term for which he may have been elected, be eligible to any office, the election to which is vested in the General Assembly; nor shall he be appointed to any civil office of profit, which shall have been created, or the emoluments of which shall have been increased during such term; but this latter provision shall not be construed to apply to any office elective by the People.

ARTICLE V.

EXECUTIVE.

SECTION 1. The executive power of the State shall be vested in a Governor. He shall hold his office during four years, and shall not be eligible more than four years, in any period of eight years.

SEC. 2. There shall be a Lieutenant Governor, who shall hold his office during four years.

SEC. 3. The Governor and Lieutenant Governor shall be elected at the times and places of choosing members of the General Assembly.

SEC. 4. In voting for Governor and Lieutenant Governor, the electors shall designate for whom they vote as Governor, and for whom as Lieutenant Governor. The returns of every election for Governor and Lieutenant Governor shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government, directed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall open and publish them in the presence of both Houses of the General Assembly.

SEC. 5. The persons, respectively, having the highest number of votes for Governor and Lieutenant Governor, shall be elected; but in case two or more persons shall have an equal and the highest number of votes for either office, the General Assembly shall, by joint vote, forthwith proceed to elect one of the said persons Governor or Lieutenant Governor, as the case may be.

SEC. 6. Contested elections for Governor or Lieutenant Governor, shall be determined by the General Assembly, in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 7. No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor or Lieutenant Governor, who shall not have been five years a citizen of the United States, and also a resident of the State of Indiana during the five years next preceding his election; nor shall any person be eligible to either of the said offices, who shall not have attained the age of thirty years.

SEC. 8. No member of Congress, or person holding any office under the United States or under this State, shall fill the office of Governor or of Lieutenant Governor.

SEC. 9. The official term of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor shall commence on the second Monday of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three; and on the same day every fourth year thereafter.

SEC. 10. In case of the removal of the Governor from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the duties of the office, the same shall devolve on the Lieutenant Governor; and the General Assembly shall, by law, provide for the case of removal from office, death, resignation, or inability, both of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, declaring what officer shall then act as Governor; and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed, or a Governor be elected.

SEC. 11. Whenever the Lieutenant Governor shall act as Governor, or shall be unable to attend as President of the Senate, the Senate shall elect one of its own members as President for the occasion.

SEC. 12. The Governor shall be commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces, and may call out such forces, to execute the laws, or to suppress insurrection, or to repel invasion.

SEC. 13. He shall, from time to time, give to the General Assembly information touching the condition of the State, and recommend such measures as he shall judge to be expedient.

SEC. 14. Every bill which shall have passed both Houses of the General Assembly, shall be presented to the Governor; if he approve, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to the House in which it shall have originated, which House shall enter the objections, at large, upon its journals, and proceed to reconsider the bill. If, after such reconsideration, a majority of all the members elected to that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, with the Governor's objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered; and, if approved by a majority of all the members elected to that House, it shall be a law. If any bill shall not be returned by the Governor within three days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general adjournment shall prevent its return, in which case it shall be a law, unless the Governor, within five days next after such adjournment, shall file such bill, with his objections thereto, in the office of Secretary of State, who shall lay the same before the General Assembly, at its next session, in like manner as if it had been returned by the Governor. But no bill shall be presented to the Governor, within two days next previous to the final adjournment of the General Assembly.

SEC. 15. The Governor shall transact all necessary business with the officers of government, and may require information in writing from the officers of the administrative department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

SEC. 16. He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

SEC. 17. He shall have the power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, after conviction, for all offenses except treason and cases of impeachment, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law. Upon conviction for treason, he shall have power to suspend the execution of the sentence, until the case shall be reported to the General Assembly, at its next meeting; when the General Assembly shall either grant a pardon, commute the sentence, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. He shall have power to remit fines and forfeitures, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and shall report to the General Assembly, at its next meeting, each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, and also the names of all persons in whose favor remission of fines and forfeitures shall have been made, and the several amounts remitted: Provided, however, That the General Assembly may, by law, constitute a council to be composed of officers of State, without whose advice and consent the Governor shall not have power to grant pardons, in any case, except such as may, by law, be left to his sole power.

SEC. 18. When, during a recess of the General Assembly, a vacancy shall happen in any office, the appointment to which is vested in the General Assembly; or when at any time a vacancy shall have occurred in any other State office, or in the office of Judge of any Court, the Governor shall fill such vacancy, by appointment, which shall expire when a successor shall have been elected and qualified.

SEC. 19. He shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies as may have occurred in the General Assembly.

SEC. 20. Should the seat of government become dangerous from disease or a common enemy, he may convene the General Assembly at any other place.

SEC. 21. The Lieutenant Governor shall, by virtue of his office, be President of the Senate; have a right, when in committee of the whole, to join in debate, and to vote on all subjects; and, whenever the Senate shall be equally divided, he shall give the casting vote.

SEC. 22. The Governor shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the term for which he shall have been elected.

SEC. 23. The Lieutenant Governor, while he shall act as President of the Senate, shall receive, for his services, the same compensation as the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and any person acting as Governor, shall receive the compensation attached to the office of Governor.

SEC. 24. Neither the Governor nor Lieutenant Governor shall be eligible to any other office, during the term for which he shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VI.

ADMINISTRATIVE.

SECTION 1. There shall be elected, by the voters of the State, a Secretary, an Auditor, and a Treasurer of State, who shall, severally, hold their offices for two years. They shall perform such duties as may be enjoined by law, and no person shall be eligible to either of said offices more than four years in any period of six years.

SEC. 2. There shall be elected, in each county by the voters thereof, at the time of holding general elections, a Clerk of the Circuit Court, Auditor, Recorder, Treasurer, Sheriff, Coroner, and Surveyor. The Clerk, Auditor, and Recorder shall continue in office four years, and no person shall be eligible to the office of Clerk, Recorder, or Auditor more than eight years in any period of twelve years. The Treasurer, Sheriff, Coroner, and Surveyor, shall continue in office two years; and no person shall be eligible to the office of Treasurer or Sheriff, more than four years in any period of six years.

SEC. 3. Such other county and township officers as may be necessary, shall be elected, or appointed, in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 4. No person shall be elected, or appointed, as a county officer, who shall not be an elector of the county, nor any one who shall not have been an inhabitant thereof during one year next preceding his appointment, if the county shall have been so long organized; but if the county shall not have been so long organized, then within the limits of the county or counties, out of which the same shall have been taken.

SEC. 5. The Governor, and the Secretary, Auditor, and Treasurer of State, shall, severally, reside and keep the public records, books, and papers, in any manner relating to their respective offices, at the seat of government.

SEC. 6. All county, township, and town officers, shall reside within their respective counties, townships, and towns; and shall keep their respective offices at such places therein, and perform such duties, as may be directed by law.

SEC. 7. All State officers shall, for crime, incapacity, or negligence, be liable to be removed from office, either by impeachment by the House of Representatives, to be tried by the Senate, or by a joint resolution of the General Assembly; two-thirds of the members elected to each branch voting, in either case, therefor.

SEC. 8. All State, county, township, and town officers, may be impeached, or removed from office, in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 9. Vacancies in county, township, and town offices, shall be filled in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 10. The General Assembly may confer upon the boards doing county business in the several counties, powers of a local, administrative character.

ARTICLE VII.

JUDICIAL.

SECTION 1. The Judicial power of the State shall be vested in a Supreme Court, in Circuit Courts, and in such inferior Courts as the General Assembly may establish.

SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of not less than three, nor more than five Judges; a majority of whom shall form a quorum. They shall hold their offices for six years, if they so long behave well.

SEC. 3. The State shall be divided into as many districts as there are Judges of the Supreme Court; and such districts shall be formed of contiguous territory, as nearly equal in population, as, without dividing a county, the same can be made. One of said Judges shall be elected from each district, and reside therein; but said Judges shall be elected by the electors of the State at large.

SEC. 4. The Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction, co-extensive with the limits of the State, in appeals and writs of error, under such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed by law. It shall also have such original jurisdiction as the General Assembly may confer.

SEC. 5. The Supreme Court shall, upon the decision of every case, give a statement in writing of each question arising in the record of such case, and the decision of the Court thereon.

SEC. 6. The General Assembly shall provide, by law, for the speedy publication of the decisions of the Supreme Court, made under this Constitution; but no Judge shall be allowed to report such decisions.

SEC. 7. There shall be elected by the voters of the State, a Clerk of the Supreme Court, who shall hold his office four years, and whose duties shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 8. The Circuit Courts shall each consist of one Judge, and shall have such civil and criminal jurisdiction as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 9. The State shall, from time to time, be divided into judicial Circuits; and a Judge for each Circuit, shall be elected by the voters thereof. He shall reside within the Circuit, and shall hold his office for the term of six years, if he so long behave well.

SEC. 10. The General Assembly may provide by law, that the Judge of one Circuit may hold the Courts of another Circuit, in cases of necessity or convenience; and in case of temporary inability of any Judge, from sickness or other cause, to hold the Courts in his Circuit, provision may be made, by law, for holding such courts.

SEC. 11. There shall be elected, in each Judicial Circuit, by the voters thereof, a Prosecuting Attorney, who shall hold his office for two years.

SEC. 12. Any Judge or Prosecuting Attorney, who shall have been convicted of corruption or other high crime, may, on information in the name of the State, be removed from office by the Supreme Court, or in such other manner as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 13. The Judges of the Supreme Court and Circuit Courts shall, at stated times, receive a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

SEC. 14. A competent number of Justices of the Peace shall be elected, by the voters in each township in the several counties. They shall continue in office four years, and their powers and duties shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 15. All judicial officers shall be conservators of the peace in their respective jurisdictions.

SEC. 16. No person elected to any judicial office, shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, be eligible to any office of trust or profit, under the State, other than a judicial office.

SEC. 17. The General Assembly may modify, or abolish, the Grand Jury system.

SEC. 18. All criminal prosecutions shall be carried on, in the name, and by the authority, of the State; and the style of all process shall be: "The State of Indiana."

SEC. 19. Tribunals of conciliation may be established, with such powers and duties as shall be prescribed by law; or the powers and duties of the same may be conferred upon other Courts of justice; but such tribunals or other Courts when sitting as such, shall have no power to render judgment to be obligatory on the parties, unless they voluntarily submit their matters of difference, and agree to abide the judgment of such tribunal or Court.

SEC. 20. The General Assembly, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide for the appointment of three Commissioners, whose duty it shall be to revise, simplify, and abridge, the rules, practice, pleadings, and forms, of the Courts of justice. And they shall provide for abolishing the distinct forms of action at law, now in use; and that justice shall be administered in a uniform mode of pleading, without distinction between law and equity. And the General Assembly may, also, make it the duty of said Commissioners to reduce into a systematic code, the general statute law of the State; and said Commissioners shall report the result of their labors to the General Assembly, with such recommendations and suggestions, as to abridgement and amendment, as to said Commissioners may seem necessary or proper. Provision shall be made, by law, for filling vacancies, regulating the tenure of office, and the compensation of said Commissioners.

SEC. 21. Every person of good moral character, being a voter, shall be entitled to admission to practice law in all Courts of justice.

ARTICLE VIII.

EDUCATION.

SECTION 1. Knowledge and learning, generally diffused throughout a community, being essential to the preservation of a free government; it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to encourage, by all suitable means, moral, intellectual, scientific, and agricultural improvement; and to provide, by law, for a general and uniform system of Common Schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge, and equally open to all.

SEC. 2. The Common School fund shall consist of the Congressional Township fund, and the lands belonging thereto;

The Surplus Revenue fund;

The Saline fund and the lands belonging thereto;

The Bank Tax fund, and the fund arising from the one hundred and fourteenth section of the charter of the State Bank of Indiana;

The fund to be derived from the sale of County Seminaries, and the moneys and property heretofore held for such Seminaries; from the fines assessed for breaches of the penal laws of the State; and from all forfeitures which may accrue;

All lands and other estate which shall escheat to the State for want of heirs or kindred entitled to the inheritance;

All lands that have been, or may hereafter be, granted to this State, where no special purpose is expressed in the grant, and the proceeds of the sales thereof; the net proceeds of the sales of the Swamp Lands, granted to the State of Indiana by the act of Congress of 28th September, 1850, after deducting the expense of selecting and of draining the same;

Taxes on the property of corporations, that may be assessed by the General Assembly for Common School purposes.

SEC. 3. The principal of the Common School fund shall remain a perpetual fund, which may be increased, but shall never be diminished; and the income thereof shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of Common Schools, and to no other purpose whatever.

SEC. 4. The General Assembly shall invest, in some safe and profitable manner, all such portions of the Common School fund, as have not heretofore been entrusted to the several counties; and shall make provision, by law, for the distribution, among the several counties, of the interest thereof.

SEC. 5. If any county shall fail to demand its proportion of such interest, for Common School purposes, the same shall be re-invested, for the benefit of such county.

SEC. 6. The several counties shall be held liable for the preservation of so much of the said fund as may be entrusted to them, and for the payment of the annual interest thereon.

SEC. 7. All trust funds, held by the State, shall remain inviolate, and be faithfully and exclusively applied to the purposes for which the trust was created.

SEC. 8. The General Assembly shall provide for the election, by the voters of the State, of a State Superintendent of Public Instruction; who shall hold his office for two years, and whose duties and compensation shall be prescribed by law.

ARTICLE IX.

STATE INSTITUTIONS.

SECTION 1. It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to provide, by law, for the support of Institutions for the education of the Deaf and Dumb, and of the Blind; and also, for the treatment of the Insane.

SEC. 2. The General Assembly shall provide Houses of Refuge, for the correction and reformation of juvenile offenders.

SEC. 3. The county boards shall have power to provide farms, as an asylum for those persons, who, by reason of age, infirmity, or other misfortune, may have a claim upon the sympathies and aid of society.

ARTICLE X.

FINANCE.

SECTION 1. The General Assembly shall provide, by law, for a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation; and shall prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real and personal, excepting such only for municipal, educational, literary, scientific, religious, or charitable purposes, as may be specially exempted by law.

SEC. 2. All the revenues derived from the sale of any of the public works belonging to the State, and from the net annual income thereof, and any surplus that may, at any time, remain in the Treasury, derived from taxation for general State purposes, after the payment of the ordinary expenses of the government, and of the interest on bonds of the State, other than Bank bonds; shall be annually applied, under the direction of the General Assembly, to the payment of the principal of the Public Debt.

SEC. 3. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in pursuance of appropriations made by law.

SEC. 4. An accurate statement of the receipts and expenditures of the public money, shall be published with the laws of each regular session of the general Assembly.

SEC. 5. No law shall authorize any debt to be contracted, on behalf of the State, except in the following cases: to meet casual deficits in the revenue; to pay the interest on the State Debt; to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or, if hostilities are threatened, provide for the public defense.

SEC. 6. No county shall subscribe for stock in any incorporated company, unless the same be paid for at the time of such subscription; nor shall any county loan its credit to any incorporated company, nor borrow money for the purpose of taking stock in any such company; nor shall the General Assembly ever, on behalf of the State, assume the debts of any county, city, town, or township; nor of any corporation whatever.

ARTICLE XI.

CORPORATIONS.

SECTION 1. The General Assembly shall not have power to establish, or incorporate, any bank or banking company, or moneyed institution, for the purpose of issuing bills of credit, or bills payable to order or bearer, except under the conditions prescribed in this Constitution.

SEC. 2. No banks shall be established otherwise than under a general banking law, except as provided in the fourth section of this article.

SEC. 3. If the General Assembly shall enact a general banking law, such law shall provide for the registry and countersigning, by an officer of State, of all paper credit designed to be circulated as money; and ample collateral security, readily convertible into specie, for the redemption of the same in gold or silver, shall be required; which collateral security shall be under the control of the proper officer or officers of State.

SEC. 4. The General Assembly may also charter a bank with branches, without collateral security as required in the preceding section.

SEC. 5. If the General Assembly shall establish a bank with branches, the branches shall be mutually responsible for each other's liabilities upon all paper credit issued as money.

SEC. 6. The stockholders in every bank or banking company shall be individually responsible, to an amount over and above their stock, equal to their respective shares of stock, for all debts or liabilities of said bank or banking company.

SEC. 7. All bills or notes issued as money shall be, at all times, redeemable in gold or silver; and no law shall be passed, sanctioning, directly or indirectly, the suspension by any bank or banking company, of specie payments.

SEC. 8. Holders of bank notes shall be entitled, in case of insolvency, to preference of payment over all other creditors.

SEC. 9. No bank shall receive, directly or indirectly, a greater rate of interest than shall be allowed, by law, to individuals loaning money.

SEC. 10. Every bank or banking company shall be required to cease all banking operations within twenty years from the time of its organization, and promptly thereafter to close its business.

SEC. 11. The General Assembly is not prohibited from investing the Trust Funds in a bank with branches; but, in case of such investment, the safety of the same shall be guaranteed by unquestionable security.

SEC. 12. The State shall not be a stockholder in any bank, after the expiration of the present bank charter; nor shall the credit of the State ever be given, or loaned, in aid of any person, association, or corporation; nor shall the State hereafter become a stockholder in any corporation or association.

SEC. 13. Corporations, other than banking, shall not be created by special act, but may be formed under general laws.

SEC. 14. Dues from corporations, other than banking, shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporations, or other means, as may be prescribed by law.

ARTICLE XII.

MILITIA

SECTION 1. The militia shall consist of all able-bodied white male persons, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, except such as may be exempted by the laws of the United States, or of this State; and shall be organized, officered, armed, equipped, and trained, in such manner as may be provided by law.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall appoint the Adjutant, Quartermaster, and Commissary Generals.

SEC. 3. All militia officers shall be commissioned by the Governor, and shall hold their offices not longer than six years.

SEC. 4. The General Assembly shall, by law determine the method of dividing the militia into divisions, brigades, regiments, battalions, and companies, and fix the rank of all staff officers.

SEC. 5. The militia may be divided into classes of sedentary and active militia, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

SEC. 6. No person, conscientiously scrupulous of bearing arms, shall be compelled to do militia duty; but such person shall pay an equivalent for exemption; the amount to be prescribed by law.

ARTICLE XIII.

NEGROES AND MULATTOES.

SECTION 1. No Negro or Mulatto shall come into, or settle in the State, after the adoption of this Constitution.

SEC. 2. All contracts, made with any Negro or Mulatto coming into the State, contrary to the provision of the foregoing section, shall be void; and all persons who shall employ such Negro or Mulatto, or otherwise encourage him to remain in the State, shall be fined in any sum not less than ten dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars.

SEC. 3. All fines which may be collected for a violation of the provisions of this article, or of any law which may hereafter be passed, for the purpose of carrying the same into execution, shall be set apart and appropriated for the colonization of such Negroes and Mulattoes and their descendants, as may be in the State at the adoption of this Constitution, and may be willing to emigrate.

SEC. 4. The General Assembly shall pass laws to carry out the provisions of this article.

ARTICLE XIV.

BOUNDARIES.

SECTION 1. In order that the boundaries of the State may be known and established, it is hereby ordained and declared, that the State of Indiana is bounded, on the East, by the meridian line, which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio; on the South, by the Ohio river, from the mouth of the Great Miami river to the mouth of the Wabash river; on the West, by a line drawn along the middle of the Wabash river, from its mouth to a point where a due north line, drawn from the town of Vincennes, would last touch the north-western shore of said Wabash river; and, thence, by a due north line, until the same shall intersect an east and west line, drawn through a point ten miles north of the southern extreme of Lake Michigan; on the North, by said east and west line, until the same shall intersect the first mentioned meridian line, which forms the western boundary of the State of Ohio.

SEC. 2. The State of Indiana shall possess jurisdiction and sovereignty co-extensive with the boundaries declared in the preceding section; and shall have concurrent jurisdiction, in civil and criminal cases, with the State of Kentucky on the Ohio river, and with the State of Illinois on the Wabash river, so far as said rivers form the common boundary between this State and said States respectively.

ARTICLE XV.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SECTION 1. All officers, whose appointment is not otherwise provided for in this Constitution, shall be chosen in such manner as now is, or may hereafter be, prescribed by law.

SEC. 2. When the duration of any office is not provided for by this Constitution, it may be declared by law; and, if not so declared, such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment. But the General Assembly shall not create any office, the tenure of which shall be longer than four years.

SEC. 3. Whenever it is provided in this Constitution, or in any law which may be hereafter passed, that any officer, other than a member of the General Assembly, shall hold his office for any given term, the same shall be construed to mean, that such officer shall hold his office for such term, and until his successor shall have been elected and qualified.

SEC. 4. Every person elected or appointed to any office under this Constitution, shall, before entering on the duties thereof, take an oath or affirmation, to support the Constitution of this State, and of the United States, and also an oath of office.

SEC. 5. There shall be a Seal of State, kept by the Governor for official purposes, which shall be called the Seal of the State of Indiana.

SEC. 6. All commissions shall issue in the name of the State, shall be signed by the Governor, sealed with the State Seal, and attested by the Secretary of State.

SEC. 7. No county shall be reduced to an area less than four hundred square miles; nor shall any county under that area, be further reduced.

SEC. 8. No lottery shall be authorized; nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed.

SEC. 9. The following grounds owned by the State in Indianapolis, namely: the State House Square, the Governor's Circle, and so much of out-lot numbered one hundred and forty-seven, as lies north of the arm of the Central Canal, shall not be sold or leased.

SEC. 10. It shall be the duty of the General Assembly, to provide for the permanent enclosure and preservation of the Tippecanoe Battle Ground.

ARTICLE XVI.

AMENDMENTS.

SECTION 1. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution, may be proposed in either branch of the General Assembly; and, if the same shall be agreed to by a majority of the members elected to the two Houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall, with the yeas and nays thereon, be entered on their journals, and referred to the General Assembly to be chosen at the next general election; and if, in the General Assembly so next chosen, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each House, then it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to submit such amendment or amendments to the electors of the State; and if a majority of said electors shall ratify the same, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of this Constitution.

SEC. 2. If two or more amendments be submitted at the same time, they shall be submitted in such manner that the electors shall vote for or against each of such amendments separately; and while an amendment or amendments, which shall have been agreed upon by one General Assembly, shall be awaiting the action of a succeeding General Assembly, or of the electors, no additional amendment or amendments shall be proposed.

SCHEDULE.

This Constitution, if adopted, shall take effect on the first day of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, and shall supersede the Constitution adopted in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixteen. That no inconvenience may arise from the change in the government, it is hereby ordained as follows:

First. All laws now in force, and not inconsistent with this Constitution, shall remain in force, until they shall expire or be repealed.

Second. All indictments, prosecutions, suits, pleas, complaints, and other proceedings, pending in any of the courts, shall be prosecuted to final judgment and execution; and all appeals, writs of error, certiorari, and injunctions, shall be carried on in the several courts, in the same manner as is now provided by law.

Third. All fines, penalties, and forfeitures, due or accruing to the State, or to any county therein, shall inure to the State, or to such county, in the manner prescribed by law. All bonds executed to the State, or to any officer, in his official capacity, shall remain in force, and inure to the use of those concerned.

Fourth. All acts of incorporation for municipal purposes shall continue in force under this Constitution, until such time as the General Assembly shall, in its discretion, modify or repeal the same.

Fifth. The Governor, at the expiration of the present official term, shall continue to act, until his successor shall have been sworn into office.

Sixth. There shall be a session of the General Assembly, commencing on the first Monday of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one.

Seventh. Senators now in office and holding over, under the existing Constitution, and such as may be elected at the next general election, and the Representatives then elected, shall continue in office until the first general election under this Constitution.

Eighth. The first general election under this Constitution, shall be held in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two.

Ninth. The first election for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Judges of the Supreme Court and Circuit Courts, Clerk of the Supreme Court, Prosecuting Attorneys, Secretary, Auditor, and Treasurer of State, and State Superintendent of Public Instruction, under this Constitution, shall be held at the general election in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two; and such of said officers as may be in office when this Constitution shall go into effect, shall continue in their respective offices, until their successors shall have been elected and qualified.

Tenth. Every person elected by popular vote, and now in any office which is continued by this Constitution, and every person who shall be so elected to any such office before the taking effect of this Constitution (except as in this Constitution otherwise provided), shall continue in office until the term for which such person has been, or may be elected, shall expire: Provided, that no such person shall continue in office, after the taking effect of this Constitution, for a longer period than the term of such office in this Constitution prescribed.

Eleventh. On the taking effect of this Constitution, all officers thereby continued in office, shall, before proceeding in the further discharge of their duties, take an oath or affirmation to support this Constitution.

Twelfth. All vacancies that may occur in existing offices, prior to the first general election under this Constitution, shall be filled in the manner now prescribed by law.

Thirteenth. At the time of submitting this Constitution to the electors, for their approval or disapproval, the article numbered thirteen, in relation to Negroes and Mulattoes, shall be submitted as a distinct proposition, in the following form: "Exclusion and Colonization of Negroes and Mulattoes," "Aye" or "No." And should a majority of the votes cast be in favor of said article, then the same shall form a part of this Constitution; otherwise, it shall be void, and form no part thereof.

Fourteenth. No Article or Section of this Constitution shall be submitted, as a distinct proposition, to a vote of the electors, otherwise than as herein provided.

Fifteenth. Whenever a portion of the citizens of the counties of Perry and Spencer, shall deem it expedient to form, of the contiguous territory of said counties, a new county, it shall be the duty of those interested in the organization of such new county, to lay off the same, by proper metes and bounds, of equal portions as nearly as practicable, not to exceed one-third of the territory of each of said counties. The proposal to create such new county shall be submitted to the voters of said counties, at a general election, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. And if a majority of all the votes given at said election, shall be in favor of the organization of said new county, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to organize the same, out of the territory thus designated.

Sixteenth. The General Assembly may alter or amend the charter of Clarksville, and make such regulations as may be necessary for carrying into effect the objects contemplated in granting the same; and the funds belonging to said town shall be applied, according to the intention of the grantor.

Mr. FOLEY moved that the Convention do now adjourn sine die.

The yeas and nays were demanded on the motion to adjourn sine die, and they were ordered, and, being taken, resulted—yeas 74, nays 5—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Alexander, Badger, Beard, Blythe, Borden, Bowers, Bracken, Bright, Brookbank, Bryant, Carr, Clements, Crawford, Davis of Madison, Davis of Vermillion, Dobson, Dunn of Jefferson, Dunn of Perry, Duzan, Edmondson, Elliott, Farrow, Fisher, Foley, Gordon, Graham of Miami, Graham of Warrick, Gregg, Hall, Hamilton, Hardin, Hawkins, Hitt, Holman, Johnson of Dearborn, Johnson of Orange, Kelso, Kent, Kilgrrre, Lockhart, Maguire, March, McLean, Miller of Fulton, Miller of Gibson, Milligan, Milroy, Mooney, Moore, Morgan, Morrison of Marion, Morrison of Washington, Nave, Newman, Niles, Owen, Pepper of Crawford, Prather, Read of Clark, Read of Monroe, Schoonover, Sherrod, Smith of Scott, Spann, Tannehill, Thomas, Thornton, Todd, Wallace, Watts, Wiley, Wolfe, Yocum, and Mr. President—74.

NAYS.—Messrs. Berry, Chapman, Dick, Gibson, and Pettit—5.

Biddle, Ristine, and Hogin, sick—3.

[Messrs. Ristine, Biddle, and Hogin were in the city, but unable to attend by reason of severe indisposition.]

So the Convention agreed to adjourn sine die.

The PRESIDENT then rose and said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION:

The object for which this body was called together being completed, and the time fixed for a final adjournment having arrived, we are now about to separate, and again return the power with which for a time we have been entrusted, to those to whom it legitimately belongs, and render an account of our stewardship, and submit, as the result of our deliberations, a new Constitution or organic law of the State, to the sovereign people for their approval or rejection. I think I may say for it, without disparagement to others, or egotism to ourselves, that, taken as a whole, it may justly be regarded as one of the very best Constitutions that has yet been framed for any State in this Union; by it, the rights of the individual citizen, in his person and property, are well secured; the freedom of speech, and of the press; the liberty of conscience is guaranteed to all the people of the State; in it will also be found some very necessary and wholesome checks against hasty, inconsiderate, or reckless legislative enactments, and an effectual remedy for that most injurious evil in our legislation for many years past, known as local and special enactments. We hold it to be a correct principle in government, that every community united together by the same organic law, should have upon all general subjects the same statutory provisions; and I may here remark, that of the three departments into which governments are usually divided, that of the legislative or law making department or power, is the one above all others the most likely to encroach upon the rights of the citizen, and to subvert the liberties of the mass of the people ; hence the necessity to restrain, (within proper and safe limits,) not the people themselves, but those to whom their power for a time may be delegated for the purpose of making laws for their government. I think it may justly be inferred, from the fact that as no particular sect or party in politics has given shape to the general provisions of this instrument, they therefore have been settled and agreed upon within a proper medium, to advance generally the interests of this growing State, and promote the prosperity and general welfare of the whole people.

This session, although regarded by many as a long one, will be found, by a comparison with the sessions of other Conventions in other States, to be positively a short session : and I here remark, without intending any disparagement to others, that this Convention; from its commencement to the close, has been the most assiduously industrious deliberative body I have ever seen, and therefore really merit praise for having accomplished their labors in the time they have, rather than censure for having wantonly protracted its sitting beyond its proper limit. It is alike gratifying to all and creditable to yourselves that your consultations and deliberations have been uniformly entirely free from those party feuds and animosities which but too frequently divide and distract the counsels of deliberative bodies to the great injury of the public ; and notwithstanding feelings may occasionally have been produced in the excitement of debate, I have never seen a deliberative body close its labors with a more general good feeling than has marked the close of this Convention.

For myself, permit me to return to you my grateful acknowledgments for the general kind and courteous treatment I have received from you, and for the generous aid and support uniformly afforded by you, which has materially assisted me in the discharge of those duties devolving on the Chair. The high compliment you were pleased to award to me by the adoption of a resolution referring to the manner in which I have discharged the duties of the position you assigned me, will ever be gratefully remembered by me. I, however, have not the vanity to suppose that in the discharge of my official duty I have been free from errors, but on the contrary feel assured I have committed many. But I trust you will believe me sincere when I say, I have intentionally committed none.

I now wish each member and officer of this body a safe journey to their respective places of abode ; and I desire, whenever it may be my fortune hereafter to meet with any member or officer of this Convention, personally to hail him as a friend.

I now discharge the last official duty incumbent upon me, by declaring this Convention adjourned sine die.

INDEX.

VOLUME I.

A.
ALEXANDER, C.	- - - 4
ALLEN, H.	- - - 3, 672
ANTHONY, S. J.	- 3, 723, 802, 857, 858
B.
BADGER, O. P.	- 4, 119, 830, 982
Resolution by,	- - - 119
Remarks concerning the rights of married women,	511, 815, 823, 825, 826
BALINGALL, G. H.	- - - 4
BANKS,	- - - 134, 219
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Pepper of Ohio,	- - - 218
Read of Monroe,	- - - 221
BARBOUR, C. W.	4, 255, 295, 346, 660, 735, 766, 799
Resolution by,	- - - 254
RASCOM, E. K.	3, 11, 20, 21, 22, 34, 47, 55, 60, 91, 130, 131, 141, 170, 255, 261, 264, 293, 329, 339, 340, 352, 353, 387, 396, 454, 534, 635, 609, 638, 651, 654, 656, 708, 797, 798, 800, 838, 839, 847, 942, 943, 951, 952, 979
Resolution by,	- - - 130
Remarks concerning the abolition of Grand Juries,	- - - 212
On the State debt,	- - - 711, 737
BEACH, W. E.	- - - 4
BEARD, JOHN	- - - 4, 77, 78
BEESON, O.	- - - 4
BERRY, GEO.	123, 128, 239, 244, 257, 375, 382, 394, 433, 689, 718, 965
Resolution by,	- - - 244
BICKNELL, T. P.	- - - 4, 127
BIDDLE, H. P.	- 3, 144, 171, 325, 857
Remarks concerning the claims of the State Printer to the printing of the Convention,	- - - 64, 70
Concerning biennial sessions of the Legislature,	- - - 95
Concerning the abolition of Grand Juries,	- - - 173, 183
BLYTHE, J. E.	7, 530, 531, 534, 633, 634, 635, 721, 798, 820
Remarks concerning the rights of negroes,	- - - 635
Concerning the rights of married women,	- - - 798, 808
BORDEN, J. W.	3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 11, 14, 17, 20, 23, 29, 35, 42, 43, 45, 46, 47, 51, 53, 55, 56, 61, 62, 77, 99, 107, 108, 113, 114, 123, 124, 131, 172, 199, 218, 222, 228, 242, 243, 244, 257, 258, 260, 261, 262, 293, 300, 324, 336, 338, 343, 346, 362, 371, 374, 375, 380, 556, 559, 560, 561, 576, 664, 718, 725, 738, 739, 744, 758, 761, 795, 800, 801, 802, 833, 835, 836, 840, 841, 843, 844, 845, 846, 851, 352, 853, 855, 856, 858, 860, 861, 867, 872, 893, 894, 900, 912, 916, 917, 952, 957, 965
Resolutions by,	7, 9, 13, 42, 43, 51, 62, 261, 858
Remarks concerning the number and powers of standing committees,	14, 17, 19
Concerning the publication of the debates,	- 132, 345, 346, 377, 379
Concerning the State debt,	665, 725, 727, 730, 736, 737
Concerning the homestead exemption,	754, 784
BOURNE, T. J.	- - - 4
BOWERS, H. J.	- - - 4, 57, 865
Resolution by,	- - - 865
BRACKEN, W.	4, 61, 444, 559, 642, 735
BRIGHT, M. G.	4, 32, 98, 225, 256, 362, 837, 951, 965, 989
Resolution by,	- - - 225
Remarks concerning rights of property,	- - - 359, 372, 388
BROOKBANK, B. F.	4, 501, 740, 801, 848
Remarks concerning the compromise measures of Congress,	- - - 923
BRYANT, J. R. M.	- - - 4
BUTLER, THOS.	- 4, 838, 839, 937
C.
CARR, J. F.	3, 51, 113, 114, 280, 776, 847
Resolution by,	- - - 113
CARTER, H. E.	- 4, 536, 546, 555
Remarks concerning the abolition of Grand Juries,	- - - 142
On a resolution restricting debate,	537, 546, 554
CHANDLER, S.	- 3, 285, 324, 329, 964
CHAPMAN, J. P.	4, 46, 62, 79, 216, 286, 459, 540, 680, 843, 844, 845, 862, 953
Resolution by,	- - - 261

Remarks concerning the number of members to compose the Legislature,	270
Concerning the rights of negroes,	590
Concerning a Sinking Fund,	717
CHENOWITH, THOS.	4
CLARK, H. W. of Hamilton,	4, 41
CLARK, O. L. of Tippecanoe,	4, 11, 23, 44, 56, 61, 79, 94, 103, 114, 276, 285, 300, 325, 344, 371, 536, 796, 804, 820, 831, 839, 844, 862, 893, 951
Remarks concerning the abolition of Grand Juries,	116
Concerning the rights of married women,	470, 806
Concerning the rights of negroes,	568
Concerning the compromise measures of Congress,	883, 896
CLERK, COUNTY, appointment of, pro tem. ,	841
Remarks by—
Mr. Borden,	842
Kelso,	841, 843
Wolfe,	841, 342, 843
COATS, JOSEPH	4, 894, 912
COLE, ALBERT B.	4
COLFAX, SCHUYLER	7, 78, 85, 123, 124, 172, 199, 223, 228, 236, 244, 256, 329, 343, 344, 376, 432, 433, 501, 653, 721, 724, 746, 817, 917, 982, 988
Resolution by,	228
Remarks concerning the removal of the Convention to Madison,	82
On negro suffrage,	228, 240
Concerning the homestead exemption,	746
Concerning the rights of negroes,	455, 458, 607, 615
COMMITTEES, distribution of subjects to,	13
Remarks on, by—
Mr. Borden,	14, 17, 19
Kelso,	17
Morrison of Marion,	20
Pettit,	18
Rariden,	20
Read of Monroe,	17
Additions,	77
Announced,	57
Select,	22, 32, 34, 41, 51, 492, 643, 744
COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE, a resolution prohibiting any part of the present Constitution, or amendment thereto, being referred to,	34
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Borden,	36
Dobson,	35
Foster,	39
Hall,	34, 37
Nave,	36
Owen,	38
Pettit,	39
Read of Clark,	35
Read of Monroe,	38
COMMITTEES, STANDING, organization of,	53

Remarks on the, by—
Mr. Pettit,	53
Read of Monroe,	54
COMPROMISE MEASURES OF CONGRESS, resolutions in relation to,	744, 857, 865
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Bascom,	872, 920
Biddle,	897, 901
Blythe,	879
Brookbank,	923
Clark of Tippecanoe,	883, 896
Coats,	912
Colfax,	914
Cookerly,	875
Crumbacker,	907
Dobson,	921, 923, 925
Farrow,	910
Foley,	907
Foster,	884, 913, 919, 920
Gordon,	907
Hamilton,	909
Holman,	902
Howe,	895
Kelso,	876, 898, 913
Kent,	918
Kilgore,	869, 885, 888, 889, 909
Mather,	911
McFarland,	913
Morrison of Marion,	926
Murray,	882
Newman,	878
Niles,	868, 887, 895
Owen,	873, 874, 895, 896, 913, 925
Pettit,	865, 866, 874, 882, 886, 888, 889, 890, 896, 905
Rariden,	886, 869, 872, 874, 876, 878, 882, 886, 887, 891, 895, 914
Read of Clark,	927
Read of Monroe,	917
Ritchey,	922
Robinson,	901
Sherrod,	880
Smith of Ripley,	882, 905, 915
Steele,	884
Taylor,	874, 900
Wallace,	899
Walpole,	873, 879, 885, 886, 890
Watts,	911
CONDUIT, A. B.	171
CONVENTION PRINTER, election of,	114
Protest against the election of,	160
CONVENTION, removal of, to Madison,	80
Remarks in relations to, by—
Mr. Colfax,	82
Dobson,	84
Dunn of Jefferson,	85
Gregg,	92
Kelso,	85, 89
Maguire,	88, 90
Owen,	87
Rariden,	81
Ritchey,	90
Steele,	87

COOKERLY, G. F. 4, 11, 14, 44, 47, 57, 101,
102, 112, 120, 124, 222, 223, 224, 227, 228,
263, 276, 336, 352, 375, 377, 432, 454, 491,
538, 540, 542, 545, 546, 550, 554, 555, 929,
942, 943, 990

Resolutions by, - - - 42, 223, 262

Remarks concerning the rights of negroes, - - - 607

CORRECTIONS, - - - 344, 363, 572, 744

COUNTIES, size of, - - - 846, 913

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Brookbank, - - - 848

Gootee, - - - 935

Holman, - - - 937

Huff, - - - 931

Kelso, - - - 933, 935

Niles, - - - 939

Owen, - - - 939

Robinson, - - - 847, 935

Smith of Ripley, - - - 937

Watts, - - - 933, 934

CRAWFORD, JAMES - - - 4, 171

CRUMBACKER, D. 3, 390, 425, 539, 554,

557, 853

Remarks concerning negro rights, - 562

Concerning compromise measures of Congress, - - - 907

D.

DAVIS, J. of Madison - - - 4, 1007

DAVIS, O. P. of Parke - - - 4

DAVIS, SAMUEL of Vermillion - - - 3

DEBATE, resolution restricting 536, 745

Remarks thereon, by—

Mr. Bascom, - - - 551

Carter, - - - 537, 546, 554

Cookerly, - - - 555

Edmondston, - - - 551

Graham of Warrick, - - - 538

Kilgore, - - - 539, 553

McFarland, - - - 555

Niles, - - - 554

Owen, - - - 513, 546, 547, 745

Rariden, - - - 548

Ritchey, - - - 537, 538

Sherrod, - - - 541

Stevenson, - - - 541

Wolfe, - - - 552

DEBATES, publication of 32, 48, 75, 124,

131, 171, 365, 376

Remarks on, by—

Mr. Bascom, - - - 49

Borden, - - - 132, 345, 346, 377, 379

Bracken, - - - 380

Celfax, - - - 377, 379

Foster, - - - 345, 377

Gregg, - - - 380

Hovey, - - - 50

Kelso, - - - 76

Kilgore, - - - 379

Morrison of Marion, - - - 50

Nave, - - - 378

Owen, - - - 134

Watts, - - - 48

DEBT, imprisonment for, - 324, 340, 346

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Barbour, - - - 328

Dobson, - - - 326, 347

Dunn of Jefferson, - - - 340, 348

Hendricks, - - - 328

Holman, - - - 348

Howe, - - - 328

Newman, - - - 342, 349

Niles, - - - 350

Pettit, - - - 326, 328

Read of Monroe, - - - 350

Ritchey, - - - 351

Robinson, 324, 325 327, 340, 361

Walpole, - - - 347, 368

Watts, - - - 340, 351

DICK, JAS. - - - 4, 996

Resolutions by, - - - 52, 721

Remarks on a resolution of inquiry abolishing the penalty for delinquent taxes, - - - 722

Concerning a homestead exemption, - 756

DOBSON, D. M. 3, 11, 23, 32, 41, 42, 59, 75,

80, 98, 113, 199, 219, 232, 243, 257, 263,

280, 325, 336, 343, 381, 433, 438, 459, 534,

536, 647, 654, 656, 664, 723, 795, 804, 837,

920, 990

Remarks in relation to Negro Saf-

frage, - - - 233, 238, 250

Concerning the tenure of office of State

officers, - - - 281, 284

Concerning the compromise measures of Congress, - - - 921, 923, 925

Concerning the taxing of State and other stocks, - - - 943, 947

Concerning the number of members of the Legislature, 986, 990, 996, 997

DOORKEEPER, election of - - - 13

DUNN, W. M. of Jefferson 4, 93, 218, 287,

343, 347, 388, 397, 406, 494, 559, 683, 723,

928

Remarks in relation to imprisonment for debt, - - - 340, 348

Concerning the State Debt, - 687, 689, 727

In relation to the declaration of rights, - - - 956

Concerning the removal of the Convention to Madison, - - - 85

DUNN, J. P. of Perry, 3, 114, 715, 727, 843, 846, 849

DUZAN, M. A. - - - 3, 739

E.

EDMONSTON, B. R. 4, 8, 11, 17, 19, 34, 35,

37, 41, 43, 45, 49, 51, 53, 54, 55, 58, 59, 61,

93, 100, 123, 172, 227, 228, 242, 243, 255,

263, 286, 327, 363, 359, 387, 405, 431, 436,

437, 459, 466, 492, 535, 536, 537, 555, 557,

560, 942, 975, 979, 981

Resolution by, - - - 93

Remarks concerning rights of property, - - - 427, 557, 559

ELLIOTT, JAS. - - - 1005

EXPLANATIONS. 101, 420, 724, 780, 837

F.

FARROW, A. A.	4, 117, 300, 352, 718, 746
Remarks concerning the rights of negroes,	581, 629
FISHER, J.	3
FOLEY, J. B.	4, 173, 776, 998
Resolution by,	52
FOSTER, W. C.	4, 7, 8, 11, 22, 25, 43, 44, 55, 56, 75, 77, 78, 79, 97, 119, 122, 128, 187, 217, 223, 224, 263, 299, 330, 345, 350, 432, 434, 459, 555, 557, 643, 644, 664, 724, 794, 858, 860, 861, 915, 966, 984, 988
Resolutions by,	74, 223
Remarks concerning the claim of the State Printer to the Convention printing,	72
Concerning the abolition of grand juries,	202
Concerning the rights of negroes,	449, 564, 612, 628
On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress,	884, 913, 919, 920
Concerning the declaration of rights,	960, 963
FRISBIE, S.	4

G.

GARVIN, JAMES.
GIBSON, T. W.	3, 160, 225, 254, 394, 398, 460, 564, 644, 652, 722, 783, 793, 802, 865, 937, 942, 943, 944
Resolution by,	225
Remarks concerning the abolition of grand juries,	161
Concerning tenure of office of State officers,	311
Concerning the rights of negroes,	445, 460, 461
Concerning the rights of married women,	479
GOOTEE, THOS.	4, 256, 610, 621
GORDON, GEO. A.	3, 363
GRAHAM, J. A. of Miami	4
GRAHAM, C. C. of Warrick	4, 61, 94, 260, 263, 279, 344, 376, 377, 379, 433, 434, 435, 493, 528, 557
GREGG, MILTON	4, 80, 111, 134, 405, 441, 450, 621, 635, 676
Resolutions by,	25, 51
Remarks in relation to reporting,	25
Concerning the rights of negroes,	592
In relation to a newspaper paragraph,	769

H.

HADDON, W. R.	3, 85, 988
Remarks concerning the rights of married women,	467
HALL, SAMUEL	4, 58, 60, 199, 227, 228, 324, 388, 434, 443, 444, 460, 494, 495, 561, 621, 622, 644, 650, 655, 682, 685, 689, 718, 723, 744, 799, 801, 804, 837, 845, 848, 851, 852, 853, 855, 856, 937, 940
Resolutions by,	34, 40, 324, 339

HOLLIDAY, W.	4
HAMILTON, ALLEN	3, 222, 289, 329
Remarks on resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress,	909
HARBOLT, JONATHAN	3, 269
HARDIN, F.	4, 43, 62, 97, 225, 292, 758, 843, 844, 847, 854
Resolution by,	43
HAWKINS, N. B.	3, 454 664, 739, 846, 1008
Resolution by,	171
Remarks on a resolution in relation to Universal Suffrage,	172
In relation to Negro Suffrage,	236
HELM, JEFFERSON	4, 88
Remarks concerning the rights of negroes,	589
HELMER, MELCHERT	4, 655
HENDRICKS, THOS. A.	4, 310, 346, 643, 706, 739
Remarks concerning the abolition of grand juries,	196
In relation to the death of the Hon. James Vanbenthusen,	556
Concerning the rights of negroes,	639
Concerning the State Debt,	707
HITT, W. W.	4
HOGIN, B. C.	4, 455, 989
HOLMAN, W. S.	3, 56, 126, 127, 336, 353, 354, 388, 395, 397, 430, 470, 501, 535, 855, 860, 915, 928, 978
Resolutions by,	52, 170
Remarks concerning the rights of married women,	501, 523, 527
On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress,	902
Concerning the size of counties,	937
HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION	718
Remarks on the, by—
Mr. Borden,	754, 784
Bowers,	780
Colfax,	746
Dick,	756
Farrow,	789
Foster,	795
Gordon,	786
Hall,	776
Hovey,	750, 756, 768, 772
Howe,	765
Kelso,	192, 802
May,	777
Miller of Fulton,	754
Murray,	718, 791
Nave,	772
Niles,	769, 782, 803
Owen,	767, 783, 785, 792
Pepper of Crawford,	786, 793
Pettit,	764
Read of Clark,	803
Read of Monroe,	790
Ritchey,	789
Sherrod,	791
Stevenson,	781, 793
Walpole,	761, 767, 774, 782, 783

HOVEY, A. P. 7, 172, 204, 279, 285, 293, 338,
453, 454, 664, 724, 780, 808, 841, 847, 849,
1007, 1008

Remarks concerning the abolition of
grand juries, - - - 204

Concerning the tenure of office of
State officers, - - - 336

Concerning the State Debt, - - - 665, 719

Concerning the homestead exemption, - - - 750, 756, 768, 772

HOWE, J. B. 4, 325, 379, 380, 654, 716, 718,
724, 853, 965

Remarks concerning the claims of the State Printer to the Convention printing, - - - 67

Concerning the Homestead Exemption, - - - 765

Concerning the rights of negroes, 438, 576,
583, 587

In relation to the Sinking Fund, - - - 716

On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, - - - 895

Concerning the declaration of rights, 958, 972

On disfranchisement of adventurers, 979

HUFF, WILSON - - - 4, 846

Remarks concerning the size of counties, - - - 931

I.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT. (See Debt.)

J.

JOHNSON, J. D. - - - 3, 101, 928

JOHNSON, Hon. RICHARD M. his death announced, - - - 692

Resolutions in reference to, by Mr.
Rariden, - - - 692

Withdrawal of the same, - - - 721

Resolutions in reference to, by Mr.
Thornton, - - - 743

JONES, SMITH - - - 51

Remarks concerning the rights of negroes, - - - 620

JURIES, GRAND abolition of, 135, 161, 173, 200

Remarks in relation to, by--

Mr. Anthony, - - - 135

Bascom, - - - 212

Biddle, - - - 173, 183

Borden, - - - 144

Carter, - - - 142

Clark of Tippecanoe, - - - 166

Foster, - - - 203

Gibson, - - - 161

Hendricks, - - - 196

Holman, - - - 143

Hovey, - - - 204

Howe, - - - 194

Kelso, - - - 141, 193

Lockhart, - - - 200

Mather, - - - 195

Nave, - - - 139

Newman, - - - 156

Niles, - - - 182, 200
Owen, - - - 322
Pettit, - - - 145, 161, 169, 396
Rariden, - - - 137, 188
Read of Monroe, - - - 316
Robinson, - - - 318, 394, 395
Steele, - - - 192
Taylor, - - - 296
Terry, - - - 486
Wallace, - - - 775
Walpole, - - - 315, 322, 323
Wolfe, - - - 213

K.

KELSO, DANIEL 3, 5, 7, 8, 11, 13, 21, 22, 23,

24, 32, 33, 45, 46, 47, 48, 51, 77, 89, 93, 99,

101, 102, 116, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128,

129, 131, 132, 134, 141, 172, 199, 216, 217,

221, 222, 223, 225, 242, 254, 255, 256, 801,

804, 828, 830, 833, 840, 844, 846, 851, 854,

861, 862, 893, 894, 914, 940, 981, 988, 1008

Resolutions by, - - - 40, 41, 44, 125

Remarks on a resolution in relation to reporting, - - - 30

On resolution in relation to newspapers, - - - 116, 122

Concerning the abolition of grand juries, - - - 141, 193

In relation to the Homestead Exemption, - - - 792, 802

On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, 876, 898,

913

In relation to the size of counties, 933, 935

Concerning the declaration of rights, 970

Concerning the number of members of the Legislature, - - - 983, 995

KENT, P. M. 4, 8, 34, 43, 51, 84, 228, 253,

258, 279, 293, 321, 323, 338, 374, 375, 403,

459, 495, 850, 865, 872, 880, 937, 942, 978

Resolutions by, - - - 494

KENDALL, H. of Wabash - - - 3

Resolution by, - - - 260

KENDALL, R. C. - - - 3

Resolution by, - - - 260

KILGORE, DAVID 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 23, 25,

223, 225, 227, 228, 257, 258, 276, 285, 339,

343, 344, 346, 349, 353, 376, 394, 406, 444,

459, 539, 542, 654, 656, 689, 724, 847, 861,

862, 893

Resolutions by, - - - 7, 8, 40, 227, 255

Remarks in relation to Negro Suffrage, - - - 233, 251

Concerning the tenure of office of
State officers, - - - 332

In relation to rights of property, 353, 363,

393, 414, 424

On a resolution restricting debate, 539, 553

In relation to the rights of negroes, - 627

Concerning the State Debt, - - - 676, 728

On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, 869, 885,

888, 889, 909

KINLEY, ISAAC	-	-	4, 45, 492	Taylor,	-	-	-	1003
Remarks in relation to the rights of negroes,	-	-	583, 613, 614	Wallace,	-	-	-	999
Concerning the declaration of rights,	-	-	962	Wolfe,	-	-	-	1003
L.				LOCKHART, JAMES	3,	131, 198, 228, 254,	292, 336, 372, 437, 492, 493, 559, 572, 634, 659, 800, 837, 857, 862, 938, 950, 984, 985
LANDS, DELINQUENT shall be forfeited to the State for the benefit of common schools—a resolution of inquiry,	-	-	862	Resolutions by,	-	-	-	217, 254
Remarks thereon, by—	-	-	-	Remarks in relation to the rights of negroes,	-	-	-	622
Mr. Gibson,	-	-	864	Concerning the State Debt,	-	-	-	732, 735, 737
Read of Clark,	-	-	853, 865	Concerning the abolition of Grand Juries,	-	-	-	200
Taylor,	-	-	863	LOGAN, E. D.	-	-	-	4
Thornton,	-	-	862, 864	Resolution by,	-	-	-	853
LEGISLATURE, biennial sessions of—	-	-	-	M.
a resolution in relation to,	-	-	93	MAGUIRE, D.	4,	25, 35, 39, 59, 75, 76, 88,	131, 228, 256, 324, 371, 372, 493, 494, 556,	557, 654, 725, 802, 851
Remarks thereon, by—	-	-	-	Resolutions by,	-	-	-	124, 228
Mr. Allen,	-	-	93	Remarks concerning the removal of the Convention to Madison,	-	-	-	88, 90
Biddle,	-	-	95	In relation to the rights of negroes,	-	-	-	601
Clark of Tippecanoe,	-	-	96	Concerning the State debt,	-	-	-	655, 712
Murray,	-	-	97	MARCH, WALTER	-	-	-	3, 856
Read of Clark,	-	-	94	MATHER, J. H.	3,	721, 724, 894, 978
LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT,	102,	980		Resolution by,	-	-	-	894
Remarks thereon, by—	-	-	-	Remarks concerning the abolition of grand juries,	-	-	-	195
Mr. Chapman,	-	-	107	MATHIS, JOHN	-	-	-	4
Clark of Tippecanoe,	-	-	110	MAY, EDWARD R.	-	3, 43, 160, 244
Dobson,	-	-	112	Remarks in relation to negro suffrage,	-	-	-	244
Edmonston,	-	-	104	In relation to the rights of married women,	-	-	-	516
Kelso,	-	-	105	Concerning the homestead exemption,	-	-	-	777
Nave,	-	-	980	McCLELLAND, BEATTIE	4,	120, 122, 260,	380, 454, 535, 557, 544, 664
Niles,	-	-	104, 111	McFARLAND, J. B.	-	-	-	4, 642, 651
Owen,	-	-	106	Remarks in relation to the rights of negroes,	-	-	-	617
Pepper of Ohio,	-	-	102, 109	Concerning the State debt,	-	-	-	702
Read of Clark,	-	-	108	McLEAN, W.	-	-	-	3, 853
Ritchey,	-	-	103	MILLER, C. J. of Clinton	-	-	-	3, 42
Smith of Ripley,	-	-	106	MILLER, HUGH of Fulton	3,	43, 94, 721,	723, 781
Stevenson,	-	-	102	MILLER, SMITH of Gibson	3,	10, 11, 51, 62,	261, 262, 263, 432, 527, 554, 621, 688, 689,	738, 796, 850, 893, 1008
Taylor,	-	-	110, 111, 113	MILLIGAN, D.	-	-	-	3, 453, 846
LEGISLATURE, number of members,	223,			MILROY, R. H.	3,	46, 279, 377, 724, 941
	262,	981		Resolution by,	-	-	-	21
Remarks in relation to, by—	-	-	-	MOONEY, S. P.	-	-	-	4
Mr. Allen,	-	-	1006	MOORE, GEORGE W.	4,	217, 380, 746, 841
Bascom,	-	-	264, 1005	Resolution by,	-	-	-	44
Barbour,	-	-	1000	MORGAN, JESSE	-	-	-	4
Chandler,	-	-	1001	MORRISON, A. F. of Marion	4,	5, 33, 34, 43,	44, 48, 51, 61, 78, 91, 98, 224, 225, 243, 244,	256, 276, 644, 654, 688, 844, 845, 850, 853,
Chapman,	-	-	270					854, 861
Cookerly,	-	-	263	Resolution by,	-	-	-	32
Dobson,	-	986, 990, 996, 997		Remarks in relation to postage,	-	-	-	33
Dunn of Jefferson,	-	-	266, 994	Concerning rights of property,	353,	353,		365, 411
Graham of Warrick,	-	-	265
Kelso,	-	-	983, 995
Nave,	-	-	264, 998
Niles,	-	-	993
Pepper of Crawford,	-	-	267, 992
Read of Monroe,	-	-	267, 1002
Ritchey,	-	-	980
Robinson,	-	-	99
Sherrod,	-	-	268
Shoup,	-	-	269
Smith of Ripley,	-	-	269
Smith of Scott,	-	-	275, 981
Stevenson,	-	-	274, 997
Tague,	-	-	268

In relation to the rights of negroes, -	619
Concerning the State debt, -	681, 707, 729
MORRISON, J. I. of Washington 4, 171, 436,	621
Resolution by, -	171
Remarks in relation to the rights of negroes, -	603
MOWRER, DANIEL 4, 534, 535, 557, 661,	990
MURRAY, E. 3, 49, 113, 255, 256, 374, 718,	827, 855, 856, 902
Remarks in relation to the homestead exemption, -	718, 791

N.

NAVE, C. C. 4, 7, 8, 11, 46, 54, 91, 92, 99,	111, 120, 128, 280, 362, 363, 492, 539, 559,	723, 799, 802, 914, 981
Remarks concerning the claims of the State printer to the Convention printing, -	-	24, 62
Concerning the abolition of grand juries, -	-	139
In relation to the rights of married women, -	-	483, 527, 809
In relation to the rights of negroes, -	-	586
On the Clarksville fund, -	-	931
Concerning the legislative depart- ment, -	-	980
In relation to the number of mem- bers of the Legislature, -	-	264, 998
NEGROES, rights of, -	-	438, 561
Remarks in relation to, by—
Mr. Blythe, -	-	635
Chapman, -	-	590
Clark of Tippecanoe, -	-	568
Colfax, -	455, 458, 607, 615	607
Cookerly, -	-	562
Crumbacker, -	-	581, 629
Farrow, -	-	449, 564, 612, 628
Foster, -	-	445, 460, 461
Gibson, -	-	592
Gregg, -	-	460
Hall, -	-	589
Helm, -	-	639
Hendricks, -	-	438, 576, 583, 587
Howe, -	-	620
Jones, -	-	561
Kent, -	-	627
Kilgore, -	-	583, 613, 614
Kinley, -	-	622
Lockhart, -	-	601
Maguire, -	-	617
McFarland, -	-	619
Morrison of Marion, -	-	603
Morrison of Washington, -	-	639
Murray, -	-	586
Nave, -	-	630
Newman, -	-	611, 619, 620, 628
Owen, -	-	565
Pepper of Crawford, -	-	461, 592
Pettit, -	-	572
Rariden, -	-	441, 579
Read of Monroe, -	-

Robinson, -	-	566
Smith of Ripley, -	-	609, 642
Steele, -	-	633
Tague, -	-	632
Thornton, -	-	444
NEGRO SUFFRAGE, -	-	228, 244
Remarks in relation to, by—
Mr. Barbour, -	-	232
Berry, -	-	239
Blythe, -	-	235
Colfax, -	-	228, 240
Cookerly, -	-	230
Crumbacker, -	-	250
Dobson, -	-	283, 238, 250
Edmonston, -	-	231, 251, 252
Foster, -	-	233
Graham of Warrick, -	-	249, 250
Hawkins, -	-	236
Kilgore, -	-	233, 251
Maguire, -	-	239
May, -	-	244
Miller of Fulton, -	-	231
Owen, -	-	231, 232
Pepper of Crawford, -	-	237
Read of Clark, -	-	246
Robinson, -	-	234
Smith of Ripley, -	-	232
Stevenson, -	-	247
Taylor, -	-	232
NEWMAN, J. S. 4, 280, 338, 343, 375, 379,	494, 539, 545, 550, 551, 555, 654, 655, 718,	798, 835, 965, 981
Remarks concerning the abolition of grand juries, -	-	156
In relation to the rights of negroes, -	-	630
NEWSPAPERS, resolution in relation to, -	-	116
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Colfax, -	-	120
Foster, -	-	119
Kelso, -	-	116, 122
Maguire, -	-	121
Morrison of Marion, -	-	121
Nave, -	-	116
Owen, -	-	119
Watts, -	-	122
NILES, JOHN B. 4, 54, 70, 99, 104, 124, 182,	200, 226, 227, 229, 305, 330, 350, 363, 368,	371, 387, 407, 410, 534, 544, 639, 656, 661,
677, 689, 729, 769, 782, 803, 868, 895, 939,	-	969, 993
Remarks concerning the abolition of grand juries, -	-	182, 200
Concerning the tenure of office of State officers, -	-	305, 330
In relation to the rights of property, -	-	368, 387, 407, 410
Concerning a homestead exemption, -	-	769, 782, 803
Concerning State printer, -	-	70
Concerning power to create State debt, -	-	661, 677, 729
Concerning Mr. Rariden's compro- mise resolutions, -	-	859, 895

Concerning dimensions of counties, - 939
 Concerning bill of rights, - 969

Erratum.—In remarks on homestead exemption, page 770, near middle of second column, for "nothing word" read "nothing worth."

O.

OBITUARIES, - 491, 693

OFFICERS, tenure of office of county and township, - 799, 830

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Borden, - 830, 838, 840
 Bright, - 837, 839, 849
 Hendricks, - 831
 Kelso, - 833, 834, 835, 839
 Morrison of Marion, - 832
 Smith of Ripley, - 801, 834, 838
 Taylor, - 831
 Walpole, - 832, 834
 Wolfe, - 799

OFFICERS, tenure of office of State, 276, 300, 329

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Bascom, - 291
 Biddle, - 332, 634
 Bracken, - 278
 Clark of Tippecanoe, - 310
 Dobson, - 281, 284
 Dunn of Jefferson, - 289
 Farrow, - 291
 Foster, - 277, 278, 283
 Gibson, - 311
 Graham of Warrick, - 279
 Hall, - 277
 Helm, - 283
 Hovey, - 336
 Kent, - 335
 Kilgore, - 332
 Maguire, - 284, 330
 Miller of Fulton, - 290
 Morrison of Marion, - 287
 Nave, - 310
 Niles, - 305, 330
 Owen, 277, 286, 289, 307, 331
 Pettit, - 280, 301
 Rariden, - 294, 306, 308
 Read of Clark, - 283
 Read of Monroe, - 282, 293, 339
 Sherrod, - 337
 Shoup, - 282
 Smith of Ripley, 301, 304, 306, 334
 Steele, - 288, 292, 303, 331
 Tannehill, - 282
 Terry, - 300
 Thornton, - 292
 Walpole, - 314
 Wolfe, - 295, 309

OWEN, ROBERT DALE 4, 5, 19, 32, 44, 48, 57, 59, 77, 94, 101, 102, 110, 114, 116, 119, 123, 199, 226, 227, 255, 256, 257, 258, 285, 299, 326, 343, 346, 347, 363, 379, 380, 388, 405, 406, 434, 497, 536, 559, 560, 569, 572, 581, 644, 674, 683, 685, 721, 735, 745, 797, 820, 837, 852, 855, 856, 857, 861, 862, 965, 975

Resolutions by, 4, 25, 42, 123, 253, 434, 896
 Remarks on a resolution in relation to reporting, - 31, 32

In relation to the rules and regulations, - 60

In relation to the rights of married women, - 115, 462, 484, 521, 534, 821

On a proposition to make reports for committees the special order for a certain time in the future, - 260

Concerning the tenure of office of State officers, 277, 286, 289, 307, 331

Concerning the abolition of grand juries, - 322

In relation to rights of property, 358, 369, 390, 409

On a resolution restricting debate, 542, 546, 547, 745

In relation to the rights of negroes, 611, 619, 620, 628

Concerning the State debt, 658, 683, 704, 730, 733, 734, 916

In relation to a homestead exemption, - 767, 783, 785, 792

On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, 873, 874, 895, 896, 913, 925

Concerning the declaration of rights, 957, 972

P.

PEPPER, A. C. of Ohio 3, 45, 59, 61, 87, 100, 101, 134, 198, 217, 222, 253, 258, 329, 349, 352, 492, 493, 663, 672, 688, 689, 708, 728, 796, 802, 829

Resolutions by, - 45, 134, 258, 556

Remarks in relation to the rights of married women, - 519

PEPPER, SAMUEL of Crawford 3, 116, 226, 238, 285, 353, 436, 496, 555, 643, 652, 671, 685, 775, 835, 871, 872, 951, 978, 981, 985

Resolutions by, - 51, 223

Remarks in relation to the rights of negroes, - 565

Concerning a homestead exemption, 786, 793

PERPETUITIES AND MONOPOLIES, 975

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Biddle, - 976
 Holman, - 978
 Newman, - 977
 Rariden, - 975
 Read of Monroe, - 976

PETTIT, JOHN, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 20, 21, 32, 36, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, 51, 54, 55, 57, 61, 66, 74, 81, 92, 97, 98, 99, 129, 132, 135, 144, 158, 170, 182, 188, 199, 207, 216, 217, 218, 219, 222, 223, 224, 242, 254, 256, 257, 261, 262, 263, 280, 294, 324, 327, 328, 339, 362, 370, 374, 375, 397, 430, 431, 432, 433, 436, 437, 438, 459, 491, 516, 534, 557, 559, 560, 561, 621, 622, 643, 644, 655, 675, 715, 716, 724, 725, 726, 856, 857, 872, 887, 893, 952, 953, 964, 965, 975, 979, 990

Resolutions by, - - -	4, 13, 41, 135
Remarks on the claims of the State
Printer to the Convention printing, -	69
Concerning the abolition of Grand
Juries, - - -	145, 161, 169, 396
In relation to rights of property, -	355, 364
	397, 398, 557
In relation to the rights of negroes, -	461, 592
Concerning the State Debt, -	660, 700, 713,
	714
On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, -	865, 866,
	874, 882, 886, 888, 889, 890, 896, 905
In relation to the declaration of rights, -	953,
	967
PRATHER, H. -	3, 10, 94, 173, 216, 256, 285,
	286, 459, 492, 737, 795, 800, 940, 951, 980,
	985, 990
PREAMBLE, - - -	851
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Crumbacker, - - -	853
Mr. Morrison of Marion, - - -	853, 854
PRESIDENT, vote for, - - -	5
Remarks of, upon taking the Chair, -	6
Adjourned the Convention, - - -	916
R.
RARIDEN, JAMES -	4, 21, 79, 215, 216, 218,
	222, 223, 260, 262, 285, 293, 374, 380, 396,
	397, 406, 420, 421, 431, 460, 470, 555, 572,
	576, 608, 609, 647, 656, 664, 665, 683, 687,
	688, 689, 721, 798, 828, 836, 853, 857, 858,
	865, 887, 893, 894, 917, 975, 990
Resolutions by, - - -	215, 744
Remarks concerning the abolition of
Grand Juries, - - -	137, 183
In relation to the tenure of office of
State officers, - - -	294, 306, 308
In relation to the rights of property, -	386,
	392, 397, 404
Concerning a resolution restricting debate, - - -	548
In relation to the rights of negroes, -	572
Concerning the State credit, - - -	647
Concerning the State debt, - - -	658, 697
On his resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, -	866,
	869, 872, 874, 876, 878, 882, 886, 887,
	891, 895, 914
In relation to the rights of married
women, - - -	474
Announces the death of Hon. R. M.
Johnson, - - -	692
READ, J. G. of Clark, -	3, 8, 32, 34, 49, 93, 123,
	217, 218, 219, 225, 254, 277, 338, 394, 438,
	459, 491, 492, 494, 557, 581, 721, 724, 735,
	800, 842, 846, 850, 865, 988
Resolutions by, - - -	13, 35, 42, 52
Remarks concerning rights of property, -	332
In relation to the Clarksville fund, -	930, 931
READ, DANIEL of Monroe, -	3, 14, 18, 47, 48,
	53, 56, 75, 78, 109, 173, 257, 258, 344, 381,
	388, 421, 644, 647, 820, 837, 851, 854, 953, 975
Resolution by, - - -	13

Remarks concerning the abolition of
Grand Juries, - - -	316
In relation to the rights of negroes, -	441, 579
In relation to the rights of married
women, - - -	531, 820
Concerning the State credit, - - -	645, 652
Concerning the State debt, - - -	673
In relation to the taxing of State and other stocks, - - -	941, 946, 947, 949, 950
Resolutions submitted by—
Mr. Badger, - - -	119
Barbour, - - -	254
Bascom, - - -	130
Berry, - - -	244
Borden, -	7, 9, 13, 42, 43, 51, 62, 261,
	858
Bowers, - - -	865
Bright, - - -	225
Carr, - - -	113
Chapman, - - -	231
Colfax, - - -	228
Cookerly, - - -	42, 223, 262
Dick, - - -	52, 721
Edmonston, - - -	93
Foley, - - -	52
Foster, - - -	74, 223
Gibson, - - -	225
Gregg, - - -	25, 51
Hall, - - -	34, 40, 324, 334
Hardin, - - -	43
Hawkins, - - -	171
Holman, - - -	52, 170
Kelso, - - -	40, 41, 44, 125
Kent, - - -	404
Kendall of Wabash, - - -	260
Kendall of White, - - -	260
Kilgore, - - -	7, 8, 40, 227, 255
Lockhart, - - -	217, 254
Logan, - - -	858
Maguire, - - -	124, 228
Mather, - - -	894
Milroy, - - -	21
Morrison of Marion, - - -	32
Morrison of Washington, - - -	171
Nofsinger, - - -	858
Owen, -	4, 25, 42, 123, 258, 434, 894
Pepper of Ohio, - - -	45, 134, 258, 566
Pepper of Crawford, - - -	51, 223
Pettit, - - -	4, 13, 41, 135
Rariden, - - -	215, 744
Read of Clark, - - -	13, 35, 42, 52
Read of Monroe, - - -	13
Ritchey, - - -	491
Robinson, - - -	9, 394, 536
Sherrod, - - -	435
Shoup, - - -	41
Sims, - - -	51
Steele, - - -	54
Stevenson, - - -	10, 100, 101
Tague, - - -	224, 236, 661
Taylor, - - -	862
Thornton, - - -	862
Watts, - - -	224
Wolfe, - - -	73, 99

RIGHTS, declaration of,	-	-	952
Remarks on, by—
Mr. Dunn of Jefferson,	-	-	956
Farrow,	-	-	962
Foster,	-	-	960, 963
Gordon,	-	-	967, 968
Howe,	-	-	958, 972
Kelso,	-	-	970
Kinley,	-	-	962
Niles,	-	-	969
Owen,	-	-	957, 972
Pettit,	-	-	953, 967
Rariden,	-	-	955
Smith of Ripley,	-	-	967, 971
Zenor,	-	-	970

RIGHTS of married women, 114, 462, 497, 797

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Badger,	511, 815, 823, 825, 826
Bascom,	- 485
Blythe,	- 798, 808
Clark of Tippecanoe,	- 470, 806
Gibson,	- 479
Haddon,	- 469
Holman,	- 501, 523, 527
Kelso,	- 115
May,	- 516
Nave,	- 483
Owen,	115, 462, 484, 521, 534, 821
Pepper of Ohio,	- 519
Rariden,	- 474
Read of Monroe,	- 531, 820
Robinson,	- 805, 828
Sherrod,	- 512, 819
Steele,	- 497
Tague,	- 499

RIGHTS of property, 353, 363, 382, 396, 400, 422, 436, 557

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Allen,	- 365
Badger,	- 386
Barbour,	- 370, 373
Bascom,	- 367
Biddle,	- 354, 371
Bracken,	- 429
Bright,	- 359, 372, 388
Chapman,	- 398, 403, 404
Clark of Tippecanoe,	- 358, 371
Dunn of Jefferson,	- 406
Edmonston,	- 427, 557, 559
Holman,	- 354, 398
Howe,	- 367
Kent,	- 422
Kilgore,	353, 363, 393, 414, 424
Kinley,	- 387
Lockhart,	- 437, 557
Morrison of Marion,	353, 358, 365, 411
Murray,	- 365
Nave,	- 367, 430
Niles,	- 368, 387, 407, 410
Owen,	- 358, 369, 390, 409
Pettit,	355, 364, 397, 398, 557
Rariden,	- 386, 392, 397, 404
Read of Clark,	- 382

Ritchey,	- 384
Shoup,	- 391
Smith of Scott,	- 422
Steele,	- 428
Stevenson,	- 356, 400, 559
Tague,	- 356, 417
Walpole,	- 403
Watts,	- 402
Wolfe,	- 407

RISTINE, JOSEPH - 4

RITCHEY, JAMES 7, 8, 75, 79, 114, 353, 432, 491, 492, 493, 496, 540, 674, 727, 797, 801, 951, 988

Resolution by, - 491

Remarks in relation to rights of property, - 384

On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, - 922

ROBINSON, JOSEPH 4, 7, 8, 10, 45, 57, 173, 228, 324, 325, 327, 394, 652, 805, 828, 829, 847, 850

Resolutions by, - 9, 392, 536

Remarks on a petition for a new county, - 173

Concerning the abolition of Grand Juries, - 318, 394, 395

In relation to imprisonment for debt, 324, 325, 326, 340, 341

In relation to the rights of married women, - 805, 828

Concerning the size of counties, 847, 935

On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, - 901

Concerning the number of members of the Legislature, - 991

S.

SCHOONOVER, R. - 4

SECRETARIES, election of, - 7

Remarks on the appointment of, by—

Mr. Borden,	- 9
Robinson,	- 9
Stevenson,	- 10

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, election of, - 13

SHANNON, D. A. - 4

SHERROD, W. F. 3, 40, 48, 49, 380, 435, 436, 459, 552, 1005

Resolution by, - 435

Remarks in relation to the rights of married women, - 512, 819

On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, - 880

SHOUP, G. G. 4, 49, 101, 103, 276, 279, 390, 432, 536, 804, 844, 856, 865, 884, 787, 894, 964, 966

Resolution by, - 41

Remarks in relation to the rights of property, - 391

SIMS, S. - 3, 77, 840, 845, 985

Resolution by, - 51

Remarks in relation to postage, - 33

SMILEY, ROSS - 4, 454

SMITH, THOMAS of Ripley, 4, 44, 60, 61,
98, 100, 101, 108, 116, 120, 126, 132, 171,
199, 216, 227, 256, 257, 295, 296, 300, 494,
535, 536, 608, 643, 656, 668, 692, 718, 800,
802, 804, 841, 843, 844, 846, 849, 851, 855,
887, 950, 952, 979, 988, 990, 1008

Remarks on a proposition to make reports from committees the special order for a certain time in the future, 258

Concerning the tenure of office of
State officers, - 301, 304, 306, 334

In relation to the rights of negroes, 609, 642

Concerning the State debt, 655, 656, 663,
668, 695, 697, 698, 729

In relation to the death of Hon. Richard M. Johnson, - - - 743

SMITH, H. S. of Scott 4, 34, 243, 420, 422, 839, 847, 853, 981

Remarks concerning the number of members of the Legislature, 275, 981

In relation to the rights of negroes, - 422

SNOOK, H. T. - - - 4

SPANN, 4, 5, 7, 173, 492, 542, 865, 985

STATE CREDIT, shall never be given, &c., - - - 644

Remarks on, by—

Mr. Bascom, - - - 651

Morrison of Marion, - - - 651

Rariden, - - - 647

Read of Monroe, - - - 645, 652

STATE DEBT, - - - 652

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Allen, - - - 672

Barbour, - - - 708

Bascom, - - - 711, 737

Borden, 665, 725, 727, 730, 736, 737

Bracken, - - - 737

Chapman, - - - 735

Colfax, - - - 653

Dobson, - - - 672

Dunn of Jefferson, - 687, 689, 727

Foster, - - - 662, 709

Haddon, - - - 705, 714

Hall, - - - 671

Helm, - - - 710

Hendricks, - - - 707

Hovey, - - - 665, 729

Kilgore, - - - 676, 728

Kinley, - - - 694

Lockhart, - - - 732, 735, 737

Maguire, - - - 655, 712

McFarland, - - - 702

Morrison of Marion, - 681, 707, 729

Nave, - - - 730

Niles, - - - 561, 729

Owen, 658, 683, 704, 730, 733, 734,
916

Pettit, - - - 660, 700, 713, 714

Rariden, - - - 658, 697

Read of Clark, - - - 659

Read of Monroe, - - - 659, 673

Ritchey, - - - 916

Robinson, - - - 653, 706, 725, 731

Sherrod, - - - 731

Smith of Ripley, 655, 656, 663, 668,
695, 697, 698, 729

Steele, - - - 687

Stevenson, - - - 670

Taylor, - - - 657, 663

Walpole, - - - 685, 703

Watts, - - - 727

Wolfe, - - - 693, 706

Zenor, - - - 674

STATE PRINTER, claims of to Convention printing, - - - 22, 62

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Bascom, - - - 24, 68

Biddle, - - - 64, 70

Borden, - - - 74

Chapman, - - - 22, 74

Foster, - - - 72

Graham of Warrick, - - - 74

Holman, - - - 71

Howe, - - - 67

Morrison of Marion, - - - 23

Nave, - - - 24, 62

Niles, - - - 70

Pettit, - - - 69

Steele, - - - 24, 68

STEELE, J. - 4, 5, 10, 25, 59, 109, 486, 740

Resolution by, - - - 51

Remarks concerning the tenure of office of State officers, 288, 292, 303, 331

In relation to the rights of married
women, - - - 497

In relation to the rights of negroes, - 633

STEVENSON, A. C. 4, 5, 73, 101, 108, 226,
227, 434, 644, 647, 804, 951, 957, 966

Resolutions by, - - - 10, 100, 102

Remarks on a resolution in relation to reporting, - - - 31

Concerning representative districts, - 100

In relation to negro suffrage, - 247

Concerning rights of property, 256, 400, 559

Concerning a homestead exemption, 781, 793

In relation to the taxing of State and other stocks, - - - 947

STOCKS, taxing of State and other, - 941

Remarks on, by—

Mr. Bascom, - - - 948

Borden, - - - 946, 950

Dobson, - - - 943, 947

Hovey, - - - 948, 949, 950

McFarland, - - - 949, 950

Nave, - - - 945

Mr. Read of Monroe, - 941, 946, 947,
949, 950

Stevenson, - - - 947

T.

TAGUE, GEORGE 4, 43, 59, 101, 225, 373,
374, 394, 501, 621, 654, 670, 716, 724

Resolutions by, - - - 224, 366, 664

Remarks in relation to rights of property, - - - 366, 417

Concerning the abolition of the common law, - - - 722

In relation to the rights of married women, - - - 499

TANNEHILL, Z.	-	-	-	3
TAYLOR, E. D.	9, 44, 123, 226, 430, 493, 494,
	495, 550, 663, 708, 861, 862
Resolution by,	-	-	-	861
Remarks concerning the abolition of
Grand Juries,	-	-	-	296
In relation to the State debt,	-	-	-	657, 663
On resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress,	-	-	-	874, 900
Concerning the number of members of the Legislature,	-	-	-	1003
TERRY, E. S.	3, 32, 215, 300, 316, 394, 295,
	454
Remarks concerning the abolition of
Grand Juries,	-	-	-	486
THOMAS, W. W.	-	-	-	4, 330
THORNTON, H. P.	- 4, 292, 443, 444, 453,
	802, 840
Resolution by,	-	-	-	862
Remarks in relation to the death of
Hon. Richard M. Johnson,	-	-	-	781
In relation to the Clarksville fund,	-	-	-	930, 931
TODD, H. G.	-	-	-	4, 655
TRIMBLY, DANIEL	-	-	-	3
V.
VANBENTHUSEN, HON. JAMES	-	-	-	4
His death announced,	-	-	-	491
Resolutions in relation to,	-	-	-	492
U.
UNION COUNTY, contested seat of the delegate from,	-	-	-	125
Remarks in relation to, by—
Mr. Anthony,	-	-	-	126
Colfax,	-	-	-	127
Kelso,	-	-	-	126
Morrison of Marion,	-	-	-	128
Rariden,	-	-	-	124, 129
Smith of Ripley,	-	-	-	130
UNIVERSITY FUND, proposition to divide the interest on, among the incorporated colleges of the States,	-	-	-	858
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Kelso,	-	-	-	859, 860, 861
Read of Monroe,	-	-	-	859, 860
W.
WALLACE, DAVID	4, 114, 225, 572, 767,
	914
Remarks concerning the abolition of
Grand Juries,	-	-	-	775
WALPOLE, T. D.	3, 171, 219, 223, 262, 352,
	373, 388, 394, 433, 560, 561, 674, 682, 718,
	759, 776, 796, 830, 833, 845, 872, 950
Remarks concerning the tenure of office of State officers,	-	-	-	314
In relation to rights of property,	-	-	-	403
Concerning the State Debt,	-	-	-	685, 703
In relation to a homestead exemption,	-	-	-	761,
	767, 774, 782, 783
WATTS, J.	3, 11, 56, 94, 224, 287, 329, 374,
	387, 435, 495, 496, 540, 559, 621, 647, 663,
	689, 715, 739, 843, 844, 846, 857, 860, 862,
	931, 952, 957, 966, 981

Resolution by,	-	-	-	224
WHEELER, A. L.	-	-	-	3
WILEY, SPENCER	-	-	-	4, 124, 974
WOLFE, BENJ.	4, 40, 45, 48, 73, 74, 81, 85,
	93, 98, 99, 109, 121, 131, 171, 223, 260, 324,
	332, 339, 375, 376, 377, 397, 470, 538, 539,
	542, 554, 555, 621, 627, 647, 652, 683, 693,
	724, 799, 850, 851, 853, 858, 860, 880, 951,
	1008
Resolutions by,	-	-	-	73, 99
Remarks concerning the abolition of
Grand Juries,	-	-	-	213
Concerning the tenure of office of State
officers,	-	-	-	295, 309
In relation to the State debt,	-	-	-	693, 706
WORK, ROBERT	-	-	-	3, 841
WUNDERLICH, JACOB	-	-	-	3

Y.

YEAS AND NAYS:

On a proposition to employ additional
Secretaries,	-	-	-	10
On a resolution recommending the Constitution of 1816, and the ad-jourment of the Convention,	-	-	-	40
On employing additional messengers,	-	-	-	47
On a proposition to remain in the Hall of the House of Representatives,	-	-	-	91, 92
On a proposition to lay the resolutions concerning the removal to Madison on the table,	-	-	-	93
On a proposition for triennial sessions
of the Legislature,	-	-	-	93
On a resolution of inquiry adopting biennial sessions of the Legislature,	-	-	-	97
On the re-consideration of a vote proposing to elect a printer,	-	-	-	114
On a proposition to lay the subject of subscribing to newspapers on the table,	-	-	-	123
On a proposition declaring that the contested seat for Union county was rightfully filled,	-	-	-	130
On the adoption of the report of a committee in reference to the contested seat for Union county,	-	-	-	131
On a proposition to lay an amendment in reference to the publication of the debates on the table,	-	-	-	131
On a proposition to lay an amendment in reference to universal suffrage on the table,	-	-	-	172
On a proposition providing that negroes and mulattoes shall vote at all elections in the State,	-	-	-	253
On a resolution of inquiry submitting the question of negro suffrage to the people,	-	-	-	254
On a proposition to make the term of office of the Secretary of State four years,	-	-	-	278
On the proposition to make the term of office of the Treasurer and Auditor of State four years,	-	-	-	286

On a proposition to make the Treasurer of State re-eligible, and the Auditor not re-eligible, -	293	On a proposition to lay an amendment to a section in relation to the State debt on the table, -	689, 715
On a proposition making the office of Auditor and Treasurer ineligible for more than four years in any term of six years, -	300	On a proposition to re-consider the vote by which a section in relation to the State debt was engrossed, -	738
On a proposition to lay amendments to the section in relation to the rights of property on the table, -	370, 374, 397	On a proposition to re-commit the section in relation to State debt with instructions, -	740
On a proposition to print seven hundred and fifty copies of the Debates and Proceedings, -	381	On adoption of a section in relation to a Sinking Fund, -	741
On a proposition to lay an amendment to instructions to a section in relation to rights of property on the table, -	396	On propositions to lay on the table amendments to the section in relation to the homestead exemption, -	758, 759, 776, 795
On propositions to amend a section in relation to rights of property, 430, 431, 432		On adoption of an amendment in relation to a homestead exemption, -	796
On a proposition to lay a resolution restricting debate on the table, -	436	On the engrossment of a section in relation to a homestead exemption, -	796
On propositions to lay amendments to a section in relation to negro rights on the table, -	554, 455	On a proposition to lay amendments and a section in relation to the rights of married women on the table, -	797
On adoption of a section in relation to State officers, -	459	On a proposition to lay a section in relation to the rights of married women on the table, -	798
On laying an amendment to section relating to negro rights on the table, -	460	On propositions to lay on the table amendments to a section in relation to county and township officers, -	799, 800
On laying on the table a proposition to commence the morning sessions at half past 8 o'clock, -	495	On an appeal from the decision of the Chair, -	805
On a motion proposing that an absentee may have his name stricken from the list, -	495	On the passage of a section in relation to the homestead exemption, -	805
On a proposition to call the roll each morning, -	496	On the passage of a section in relation the rights of married women, -	830
On a proposition to take a resolution restricting debate from the table, -	536	On propositions to lay amendments to a section in relation to county and township officers on the table, -	878, 840
On laying the subject of restricting debate on the table, -	542	On proposition to amend a section in relation to the size of counties, -	846
On adoption of a resolution restricting debate, -	556	On proposition to lay an amendment to the section in relation to the size of counties on the table, -	846
On a proposition to lay instructions to a section in relation to the rights of property on the table, -	560	On the adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to the size of counties, -	849
On a proposition to re-commit a section in relation to the rights of property, -	560	On proposition to strike out an entire section in relation to the size of counties, -	850
On the final passage of a section in relation to the rights of property, -	561	On proposition to lay the preamble and amendments on the table, -	854
On a proposition to re-commit a section in relation to the tenure of office of State officers, -	642	On proposition to lay an amendment to the preamble on the table, -	856
On adoption of instructions to a committee in relation to the tenure of office of State officers, -	643	On the adoption of an amendment to the preamble, -	856, 857
On a proposition to lay an amendment to a section in relation to the State debt on the table, -	654	On a proposition to lay on the table the resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, -	858
On passage of a section in relation to the State debt, -	665, 715	On a proposition to re-consider the vote just taken, -	893
On a proposition to amend a section in relation to the State debt, -	688	On a proposition to refer the resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress to a select committee, -	894

On a proposition to indefinitely postpone the resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress, - - - - -	912	On the passage of sections in relation to the public money, - - - -	952
On a proposition to lay on the table amendments to the resolutions on the relation to the compromise measures of Congress, - - - -	914, 915	On the adoption of the preamble, -	952
On a demand for the previous question in relation to the resolutions on the compromise measures, - - -	928	On the adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to a declaration of rights, - - - -	964
On the adoption of an amendment to the resolutions in relation to the compromise measures, - - -	928	On the passage of a section in relation to a declaration of rights, - -	974
On the adoption of the resolutions in relation to the compromise measures of Congress as amended, -	928	On propositions to lay on the table
On the passage of a section in relation to the tenure of office of county and township officers, - - - -	929	On the passage of a section in relation to the liberties of conscience, amendments to a section in relation to the number of members of the Legislature, 982, 983, 984, 985, 1007,	1008
On the passage of a section in a relation to the tenure of office of justices of the peace, - - - -	929	On the passage of engrossed sections,	989
On a proposition to re-commit with instructions a section in relation to the size of counties, - - - -	940	On the passage of a section in relation to the Legislative Department,	989
On a proposition to re-consider the vote upon the re-commitment of a section in relation to the size of counties, -	942	On adoption of amendments in relation to the number of members of the Legislature, - - - -	1007, 1008
On a main question, - - - -	943	On proposition to re-consider a vote by which an amendment to a section in relation to the number of members of the Legislature was laid on the table, - - - -	1007
On the passage of a section in relation to the size of counties, - - - -	943	YOCUM, F. B. - - - -	3

Z.

ZENOR, JOHN	4, 61, 295, 374, 674, 857
Remarks concerning the State debt, -	674

VOLUME II.

A.
ALLEN, H.	1389, 1588, 1884, 1891
AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTIONS, a section in relation to,
Remarks thereon, by—	1407
Mr. Badger,	1411
Bascom,	1410
Chapman,	1408
Dobson,	1407, 1410, 1411
Farrow,	1413
Hovey,	1409
Morrison of Marion,	1409, 1410
Spann,	1413
Wolfe,	1411
APPROPRIATIONS for local purposes,
Remarks thereon, by—	1286
Mr. Colfax,	1288
Kilgore,	1291
Maguire,	1290
Pettit,	1286, 1287, 1289
Ritchey,	1289
ADDRESS TO THE ELECTORS,
ASSESSMENT UNIFORM,	2042, 1285, 1286
B.
BADGER, O. P.	1051, 1097, 1105, 1162, 1273, 1359, 1360, 1386, 1620, 1633, 1822, 1935, 2005, 2023
Resolution submitted by,	1359
Remarks on the subject of the rights of married women to hold property,	1159, 1175
BANKS, a section in relation to,
Remarks thereon by—	1414, 1954
Mr. Allen,	1474
Bascom,	1445, 1547, 1587, 1619
Barbour,	1489, 1596
Biddle,	1495, 1504, 1559, 1565
Borden,	1449, 1544, 1599, 1919, 1954, 1957
Carter,	1440
Chapman,	1465
Clark of Tippecanoe,	1436
Colfax,	1524, 1607, 1621, 1624, 1955
Conduit,	1565
Cookerly,	1552, 1589, 1625
Crumbacker,	1593
Dobson,	1418, 1512, 1573, 1595
Dunn of Jefferson,	1574, 1596, 1606, 1632

Edmonston,	1614, 1618
Foster,	1462, 1554, 1600
Hall,	1444, 1957
Hamilton,	1426, 1551, 1598, 1955
Hendricks,	1501
Hitt,	1541
Holman,	1580
Howe,	1481, 1629
Kelso,	1527, 1548, 1553, 1590, 1601, 1602, 1606, 1616, 1619, 1694, 1954
Kilgore,	1446, 1627
Lockhart,	1557, 1588, 1592, 1624
March,	1599
Maguire,	1517, 1610, 1614, 1619, 1620
May,	1444
McFarland,	1541, 1617
Milroy,	1478
Mather,	1457, 1928
Morrison of Marion,	1507, 1553, 1633
Murray,	1572
Nave,	1429, 1556, 1599
Niles,	1549, 1595, 1607, 1626, 1645
Owen,	1449, 1505, 1511, 1554, 1564, 1587, 1595, 1615, 1618, 1629
Pettit,	1454, 1571, 1590, 1602, 1609, 1612, 1617, 1624, 1957
Pepper of Ohio,	1447, 1540, 1625
Prather,	1599, 1624
Rariden,	1414, 1497, 1535, 1608, 1609
Read of Monroe,	1458
Read of Clark,	1469, 1519
Ritchey,	1545, 1553, 1592, 1613
Robinson,	1779
Shoup,	1484, 1597, 1625
Sherrod,	1893
Smith of Ripley,	1525, 1587
Steele,	1489
Stevenson,	1452, 1599, 1611, 1625
Taylor,	1551, 1558, 1629
Walpole,	1612, 1613, 1615, 1631
Watts,	1547, 1554, 1565
Wolfe,	1607
EXTENSION OF CHARTER OF PRES-ENT STATE BANK:
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Dobson,	1983, 1988

Dunn of Jefferson, -	1984, 1993
Pettit, -	1986
Stevenson, -	1986
Walpole, -	1985
Hamilton, -	1987
Kelso, -	1989
Barbour, -	1989
Cookerly, -	1992
BARBOUR, C. M. -	1053, 1074, 1127, 1137, 1244, 1250, 1659, 1989, 2022
Remarks in relation to the subject of Banks, -	1489, 1596
In relation to the rights of married women, -	1180, 1193
BASCOM, E. K. -	1110, 1122, 1184, 1203 1211, 1233, 1243, 1250, 1257, 1361, 1266, 1269, 1368, 1371, 1393, 1397, 1400, 1407, 1445, 1520, 1534, 1535, 1889, 1913, 2013, 2023
Remarks in relation to the subject of banks, -	1445, 1547, 1587, 1619
Remarks in reference to the technical phrases of the law, -	1130
Remarks in relation to the rights of married women, -	1162
Resolutions introduced by, -	1152, 1261
BEESON, O. -	1078
Resolution introduced by, -	1149
BERRY GEO. -	1053, 1058, 1061, 1121, 1122, 1123, 1125, 1231, 1246, 1392, 1601
BIDDLE, H. P. -	1253, 1402, 1447, 1449, 1548, 1573, 1683, 1729, 1843, 1864, 2060
Remarks in relation to the subject of banks, -	1495, 1504, 1559, 1565
BLYTHER, J. E. -	1714, 1813, 2058, 2060
Remarks on the subject of the right of married women to hold property to their separate use, -	1177, 1179
In relation to the legislative debt, -	1253
BORDEN, J. W. -	1016, 1023, 1027, 1030, 1048, 1050, 1052, 1053, 1055, 1071, 1073, 1074, 1080, 1081, 1082, 1085, 1088, 1093, 1101, 1108, 1109, 1121, 1122, 1123, 1124, 1141, 1142, 1148, 1153, 1153, 1166, 1223, 1225, 1238, 1241, 1246, 1250, 1261, 1264, 1269, 1271, 1275, 1281, 1286, 1292, 1314, 1316, 1321, 1333, 1335, 1337, 1339, 1362, 1364, 1367, 1378, 1381, 1385, 1390, 1391, 1401, 1410, 1420, 1422, 1429, 1448, 1449 1473, 1481, 1482, 1494, 1523, 1534, 1546, 1549, 1562, 1581, 1583, 1584, 1585, 1628, 1630, 1641, 1654, 1682, 1691, 1703, 1739, 1766, 1805, 1820, 1822, 1833, 1835, 1919, 1934, 1935, 1954, 1969, 1997, 2007, 2029, 2047, 2048, 2051, 2054, 2066
Resolutions introduced by, -	1020, 1261
Remarks in relation to the judiciary, -	1805
Remarks in relation to the subject of banks, -	1449, 1544, 1599, 1919, 1954, 1957
On the subject of future amendments to the Constitution, -	1259
On the subject of law reform, -	1739
On the legislative department, -	1009, 1052, 1062, 1069
Concerning qualification of voters, -	1296

BOUNDARY OF THE STATE, 1964, 1965, 1980, 2006

Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Wolfe, -	1981
Hovey, -	1981
Pettit, -	1982
BRACKEN, W. -	1097, 1116, 1120, 1398, 1423, 1515, 1616, 1636, 1639, 1918, 2010, 2066
Remarks in relation to woman's rights, -	1175
BRIGHT, M. G. -	1061, 1073, 1075, 1081, 1082, 1083, 1085, 1113, 1231, 1242, 1320, 1473, 2008, 2036, 2038, 2066
Remarks in relation to the legislative department, -	1254
BROOKBANK, B. F. -	1016, 1077, 1099, 1608, 1970
BRYANT, J. M. -	1203, 1858, 1863, 1881, 1888, 1903
Remarks in relation to Common Schools, -	1881
In relation to Houses of Refuge, -	1903
BUTLER, THOS. -	1386
Resolution introduced by, -	1152
C. -
CARR, J. F. of Jackson, -	1564, 1592, 1913, 2048
Resolution introduced by, -	1025
CARTER, H. E. -	1473, 1493, 1643, 1737
Remarks on the subject of law re- form, -	1737
Remarks in reference to banks, -	1449
Concerning Tippecanoe Battle-Ground, -	1344
CENSUS, section in relation to, -	1947
CHAPMAN, J. P. -	1058, 1078, 1085, 1318, 1413, 1421, 1429, 1431, 1534, 1562, 1633, 1769, 1882, 1900, 1902, 1970, 2049, 2051, 2054, 2066
Remarks in relation to the subject of banks, -	1465
In reference to common schools, -	1882
Resolution introduced by, -	1142
Remarks concerning agricultural sta- tistics, -	1498
CLARK, H. W. of Hamilton, -	1292, 1293, 1425, 1861
CLARK, O. L. of Tippecanoe, -	1025, 1055, 1077, 1083, 1085, 1220, 1240, 1286, 1287, 1312, 1617, 1339, 1361, 1399, 1436
Remarks in relation to the rights of married women, -	1157
In reference to banks, -	1436
Concerning common schools, -	1880
CLEMENTS, R. E. -	1259, 1293, 1398, 1406, 1431, 1734, 1799, 1882, 2020, 2030, 2038, 2040
Remarks in relation to common schools, -	1882
COLFAX, SCHUYLER -	1016, 1050, 1057, 1211, 1221, 1231, 1247, 1269, 1284, 1287, 1292, 1321, 1349, 1379, 1436, 1526, 1548, 1553, 1573, 1574, 1583, 1626, 1636, 1947, 1956, 1964, 1991, 2018, 2032
Resolution introduced by, -	1436

Remarks in relation to the subject of banks, 1524, 1607, 1621, 1624, 1955
Concerning the districting of the State, 1049
CIRCUITS, division of the State into 1663
COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY, - 1473
CONCEALED WEAPONS, - 1963
CONTESTED ELECTIONS, - 1963
CONVENTION, resolution in relation to final adjournment of, 1149, 1261, 1339
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Morrison of Marion, - 1150
Kelso, - 1149, 1340
Smith of Ripley, - 1150
Pettit, - 1151
Borden, - 1339, 1340
A proposition to reduce the pay of members of, - 1271
COMMON SCHOOLS, Superintendent of, - 1883
Section concerning common school fund, - 1880, 1940, 1979
Remarks by—
Mr. Bryant, - 1881
Clark of Tippecanoe, - 1880
Clements, - 1882
Chapman, - 1882
Kilgore, - 1881, 1883
Morrison of Washington, - 1880
Wolfe, - 1880
CONSTITUTION, future amendments to, - 1258, 1913, 1938, 1941, 1952
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Borden, - 1259
Dobson, - 1260
Graham of Warrick, - 1258
Owen, - 1259, 1938, 1814, 1815
Ritchey, - 1641, 1814
Read of Clark, - 1258
Stevenson, - 1258, 1814
Steele, - 1816
Howe, - 1938
Pettit, - 1817, 1938
Newman, - 1815, 1816
Ruriden, - 1818, 1938
Proposition as to the time for submission of, - 2014
CONSTITUTION, a section declaring the old Constitution superseded by the new, - 1965
CONTINUANCE IN OFFICE OF STATE OFFICERS, - 1257
Corporations, - 1875
Liability of stockholders in, - 1876
Debate thereon, by—
Mr. Owen, - 1876, 1878
Stevenson, - 1876
Newman, - 1876
Niles, - 1877
Lockhart, - 1878
Dobson, - 1878
Read of Monroe, - 1878

Charters of, - 1943
COOKERLY, G. F. 1016, 1022, 1052, 1067, 1103, 1149, 1153, 1228, 1242, 1243, 1258, 1259, 1260, 1266, 1272, 1292, 1304, 1313, 1315, 1321, 1334, 1335, 1338, 1362, 1391, 1392, 1396, 1402, 1406, 1407, 1409, 1412, 1414, 1445, 1446, 1447, 1493, 1639, 1992, 2014
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1552, 1589, 1625
Remarks concerning rights of married women to hold property, - 1158
On Dobson's proposition to extend the charter of the State Bank, - 1992
CORRECTIONS, - 1098, 1339
COURTS, Supreme, establishment of, 1651, 1718, 1760
Judges of, - 1652, 1679, 1708, 1723
Clerk of, - 1659
Reporter of, - 1660, 1684
Sheriff of, - 1663
Decisions of, - 1671
Inferior, constitution of, - 1667, 1737
Clerk of Circuit Court, - 1671
Prosecuting Attorney, - 1739, 1737
CRIMINAL LAW, report in relation to, 1414
CRUMBACKER, D. 1141, 1142, 1234, 1235, 1246, 1268, 1332, 1406, 1563, 1585, 1618, 1633
Resolutions introduced by, 1141, 1152
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1593

D.

DAVIS of Madison, 1089, 1250, 1386, 1403
DAVIS of Parke, - 1400, 1423
DICK, JAMES - 1268, 1563
Remarks concerning his resolution providing that each tax payer shall furnish the Assessor annually with a schedule of all his rights, credits, moneys, &c., - 1268
DEBATE, motion to terminate debate on banking, - 1431
DISTRIBUTION OF THE DEBATES, 2031, 2033, 2035
DISTRICTS, Senatorial and Representative, - 1029
Remarks in relation to, by—
Mr. Stevenson, - 1029, 1030, 1048
Dunn of Jefferson, - 1031, 1033, 1246
Kelso, - 1031
Morrison of Marion, - 1034
Read of Monroe, - 1035
Nave, - 1036
Pettit, - 1048, 1243
Colfax, - 1049
Ritchey, - 1244
Dobson, - 1246
Maguire, - 1245
Newman, - 1245
Graham of Warrick, - 1247

DOBSON, D. M. 1009, 1016, 1033, 1051,
1053, 1054, 1060, 1062, 1074, 1082, 1083,
1086, 1097, 1104, 1105, 1107, 1108, 1116,
1119, 1123, 1124, 1142, 1152, 1197, 1220,
1238, 1248, 1251, 1255, 1260, 1271, 1276,
1307, 1316, 1319, 1320, 1321, 1333, 1368,
1392, 1405, 1422, 1431, 1446, 1600, 1628,
1633, 1634, 1635, 1641, 1643, 1659, 1719,
1726, 1768, 1788, 1815, 1884, 1936, 1983,
1988, 2009, 2021, 2027, 2028, 2049

Resolution introduced by him, - 1104

Remarks on the subject of banks, 1418,
1512, 1573, 1595

On the extension of the charter of the State Bank. - - 1983, 1988

Concerning agricultural statistics, 1407,
1410, 1411

Concerning future amendments to the Constitution, - - 1260

In relation to the rights of married
women, - - 1194

DUELING, a section in relation to, 1713

DUNN of Jefferson, 1029, 1037, 1043, 1076,
1097, 1119, 1216, 1312, 1318, 1320, 1334,
1337, 1348, 1392, 1405, 1422, 1431, 1446,
1600, 1606, 1641, 1643, 1659, 1719, 1726,
1768, 1788, 1815, 1884, 1944, 1984, 1999,
2019, 2066

Remarks on the subject of banks, 1574,
1596, 1606, 1632

In relation to the extension of the present Bank charter, - 1984, 1993

Concerning Tippecanoe Battle-Ground, 1343

DUNN of Perry, 1109, 1140, 1242, 1307, 1320, 1392, 1608

E.

EDMONSTON, B. R. 1039, 1070, 1073, 1076,
1084, 1093, 1095, 1110, 1122, 1125, 1142,
1195, 1220, 1221, 1223, 1225, 1230, 1243,
1265, 1276, 1278, 1300, 1306, 1307, 1314,
1315, 1320, 1332, 1347, 1358, 1364, 1365,
1397, 1404, 1406, 1412, 1445, 1523, 1564,
1590, 1611, 1629, 1634, 1720, 1830, 1838,
1861, 2017, 2033, 2041, 2051, 2053, 2054

Remarks on the subject of banks, 1611, 1613

ELECTIONS, time of holding, - 1334

Remarks on, by—

Mr. Dobson, - - 1336

Kelso, - - 1336, 1354

Ritchey, - - 1335, 1354

Taylor, - - 1336

Mather, - - 1353

Owen, - - 1355

Pepper of Crawford, - 1352

Pepper of Ohio, - - 1352

Read of Clark, - - 1354

Smith of Scott, - - 1352

Watts, - - 1353

F.

Mr. FARROW, 1097, 1108, 1152, 1305, 1354,
1368, 1897

Remarks in relation to the rights of married women, - - 1837

FIREMEN'S FAIR, - - 1359

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Badger, - - 1359, 1360

Bascom, - - 1360

Clark of Tippecanoe, - 1361

Cookerly, - - 1362

Kelso, - - 1359, 1361, 1362

Kilgore, - - 1360

Lockhart, - - 1361

Maguire, - - 1361

May, - - 1361

Murray, - - 1361

Moore, - - 1361

Rariden, - - 1361

Watts, - - 1361

FOLEY, J. B. 1227, 1250, 1257, 1493, 2077

FOSTER, W. C. 1016, 1022, 1061, 1078,
1103, 1108, 1152, 1179, 1202, 1219, 1226,
1227, 1230, 1250, 1265, 1316, 1340, 1349,
1364, 1403, 1407, 1534, 1564, 1594, 1595,
1600, 1610, 1613, 1634, 1731, 1798, 1863,
1884, 1959, 1974, 2015, 2017, 2024, 2034,
2037, 2049, 2055

Remarks on the subject of banks, 1462,
1554, 1600

Concerning technicalities of the law, 1139

FRISBIE, S. - - 1247

Resolution introduced by, - 1673

G.

GARVIN, JAMES - - 1026, 1197, 1818

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY of the State, 1904

GIBSON, T. W. 1020, 1021, 1022, 1087, 1133,
1142, 1150, 1151, 1152, 1153, 1154, 1196,
1225, 1226, 1363, 1379, 1382, 1534, 1585,
1586, 1705, 1731, 1798, 1853, 1884, 1993,
2024

Remarks in relation to the rights of married women, - 1173, 1192

Concerning law reform, - 1757

GOOTEE, THOMAS - - 1016, 1604

GORDEN, GEO. A. 1067, 1293, 1314, 1367,
1424, 1436, 1448, 1644, 1816, 2050, 2058

Remarks in relation to the rights of persons, - - 1368

Concerning technicalities of the law, 1432

GOVERNOR, the veto power of, 1345, 1447, 1787

Remarks on, by—

Mr. Borden, - - 1347

Foster, - - 1350

Howe, - - 1347

Kelso, - - 1349

Morrison of Marion, - 1447

Read of Monroe, - - 1366

Ritchey, - - 1350

Thornton, - - 1345

GRAHAM of Warrick, 1028, 1080, 1081,
1100, 1101, 1102, 1221, 1243, 1248, 1258,
1266, 1274, 1275, 1276, 1292, 1311, 1332,
1335, 1426, 2023

Resolution introduced by - 1311

Remarks in relation to future amendments to the Constitution, - 1258

GREGG, MILTON 1151, 1197, 1203, 1225, 1226, 1232, 1267, 1268, 2011, 2029, 2049, 2059
 Resolutions introduced by, 1225, 1262, 1267, 1341
 Remarks concerning Stenographers and door-keepers, - 1263, 1265
 Concerning Tippecanoe battle ground, 1341

H.

HADDON, W. R. - - - 1039
HALL, SAMUEL 1086, 1100, 1121, 1160, 1161, 1220, 1248, 1291, 1294, 1379, 1392, 1414, 1444, 1553, 1592, 1611, 1957
 Resolution introduced by, - 1148
 Remarks on the subject of banks, 1444, 1927
HALL, a resolution in relation to the procuring of another, for the sittings of the Convention, 1020, 1225, 1261
 Reports from a committee on the same subject, - - - 1101
 Remarks thereon, by—
 Mr. Bascom, - 1109, 1261, 1262
 Borden, - - 1020, 1021
 Dunn of Jefferson, - - 1110
 Kelso, 1021, 1102, 1109, 1228, 1262
 Kilgore, - - - 1227
 Stevenson, - - - 1020
 Pettit, - 1102, 1229, 1261, 1262
 Ritchey, - - - 1103
 Helm, - - - 1104
 Owen, - - - 1105, 1228
 Robinson, - - - 1106, 1108
 Thornton, - - - 1107
 Maguire, - - - 1107, 1261
 Smith of Ripley, - - 1109
 Gregg, - - - 1227

HAMILTON, ALLEN 1288, 1289, 1364, 1399, 1416, 1445, 1595, 1597, 1634, 1635, 1647, 1840, 1870, 1912, 1987, 2022, 2023, 2030, 2053, 2058

Remarks on the subject of banks, 1226, 1551, 1598, 1955, 1987

HARBOLT, JONATHAN 1310, 1311, 1314
 Remarks in relation to plurality of offices, - - - 1309

HARDIN, F. 1021, 1028, 1199, 1252, 1332
HAWKINS, N. B. 1413, 1649, 1800, 1867, 2065

Resolutions introduced by, 1446, 1566
HELM, JEFFERSON - 1027, 1673

HELMER, MELCHERT 1021, 1073, 1137, 1286

HENDRICKS, THOMAS A. 1009, 1232, 1240, 1307, 1465, 1488, 1600, 1830

Resolution introduced by, 1142
 Remarks on the subject of banks, 1501

HITT, W. W. - 1276, 1388, 1426
 Remarks on the subject of banks, 1541

HOLMAN, W. S. 1053, 1083, 1091, 1183, 1220, 1239, 1251, 1253, 1261, 1284, 1303, 1582, 1628, 1632, 1633, 1635, 1639, 1663, 1671, 1689, 1710, 1771, 1788, 2005, 2023, 2033, 2049, 2052, 2056

Resolutions introduced by, 1260, 1617
 Remarks on the subject of banks, 1580
 Concerning the rights of married women, - - 1154, 1167

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION :

Remarks by—
 Mr. Smith of Ripley, - - 1929

HOUSES OF REFUGE, section in relation thereto, - - - 1903

Remarks by—
 Mr. Gibson, - - - 1903
 Bryant, - - - 1903
 Lockhart, - - - 1903
 March, - - - 1903

HOVEY, A. P. 1093, 1148, 1243, 1254, 1266, 1267, 1292, 1341, 1349, 1354, 1393, 1633, 1662, 1668, 1672, 1698, 1792, 1793, 1813, 1821, 1981

Remarks in relation to the rights of married women, 1156, 1157, 1159

HOWE, J. B. 1274, 1322, 1381, 1391, 1481, 1628, 1684, 1688, 1754, 1835

Remarks on the subject of banks, 1481, 1629
 In relation to the rights of married women, - - - 1191

HUFF, W. resolution introduced by, 1345

I.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT, a section in relation thereto, 1712, 1737

INCORPORATIONS, General Laws in relation to, - - - 1286

J.

JOHNSON, HON. RICHARD M. a letter from his brother in answer to resolutions of condolence from the Convention, - - - 1037

JOHNSON of Dearborn, 1030, 1251, 1284
 Resolution introduced by, - 1830

JUDICIARY, establishment of, - 1675
 Speech of Mr. Borden on, - 1805

K.

KELSO, DANIEL 1021, 1028, 1031, 1037, 1047, 1052, 1055, 1059, 1070, 1071, 1072, 1073, 1080, 1081, 1082, 1083, 1084, 1091, 1095, 1097, 1098, 1101, 1107, 1122, 1124, 1129, 1232, 1133, 1137, 1141, 1151, 1152, 1153, 1202, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1226, 1228, 1232, 1236, 1240, 1261, 1267, 1274, 1275, 1276, 1304, 1305, 1312, 1313, 1316, 1319, 1332, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1348, 1349, 1351, 1361, 1362, 1398, 1399, 1406, 1407, 1435, 1436, 1446, 1448, 1449, 1450, 1526, 1535, 1548, 1551, 1557, 1563, 1603, 1632, 1634, 1635, 1640, 1641, 1651, 1653, 1658, 1681, 1686, 1694, 1704, 1716, 1724, 1727, 1757, 1770, 1789, 1796, 1802, 1825, 1829, 1830, 1839, 1840, 1899, 1916, 1918, 1936, 1976, 1989, 1994, 2009, 2011, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2023, 2033, 2054, 2057, 2059

Resolution introduced by, 1276

Remarks on the subject of banks, 1527, 1548, 1553, 1590, 1601, 1602, 1606, 1616, 1619, 1694, 1954
Concerning the rights of married women, - - - - -	1899
In relation to the technicalities of the law - - - - -	1135, 1137, 1433
KENT, P. M. 1016, 1020, 1021, 1029, 1050, 1055, 1120, 1263, 1266, 1293, 1306, 1397, 1402, 1407, 1446, 1547, 1585, 1586, 1594, 1596, 1598, 1618, 1621, 1634, 1643, 1686, 1800, 2047
Remarks concerning the rights of persons, - - - - -	1371
KILGORE, DAVID 1118, 1203, 1220, 1251, 1267, 1272, 1275, 1304, 1319, 1321, 1322, 1331, 1360, 1386, 1435, 1446, 1545, 1584, 1594, 1603, 1608, 1669, 1691, 1693, 1714, 1722, 1881, 1936, 2020, 2022
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1446, 1627
KINLEY, ISAAC 1307, 1316, 1896, 2065
Remarks concerning the rights of persons, - - - - -	2065
L.
LAWS, technical phrases of, 1128, 1431
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Morrison of Marion, - - - - -	1128
Niles, - - - - -	1128
Bascom, - - - - -	1130
Badger, - - - - -	1433
Dunn of Jefferson, - - - - -	1432
Steele, - - - - -	1130
Prather, - - - - -	1131, 1132, 1133
McClelland, - - - - -	1132, 1136, 1431
Read of Monroe - - - - -	1134
Kelso, - - - - -	1135, 1137, 1433
Morrison of Marion, - - - - -	1138
Walpole, - - - - -	1139
Nave, - - - - -	1139
Foster, - - - - -	1139
Holman, - - - - -	1140
Gorden, - - - - -	1432
LAWS, LOCAL - - - - -	1436
LAW REFORM, a section in relation to, - - - - -	1713, 1737
Debates on that subject, 1751, 1813, 1820, 1827, 1838
Remarks by —
Mr. Borden, - - - - -	1739
Mather, - - - - -	1928
Nave, - - - - -	1928
Thornton, - - - - -	1848
Carter, - - - - -	1737
Rariden, - - - - -	1751
McClelland, - - - - -	1755
Gibson, - - - - -	1757
March, - - - - -	1760
Steele, - - - - -	1763
LEGISLATURE, number of members of, 1009
Remarks in relation to, by—
Mr. Borden, - - - - -	1009
Smith of Scott, - - - - -	1037
Pettit, - - - - -	1038, 1040

Mr. Ritchey, - - - - -	1039
Edmonston, - - - - -	1039
Rariden, - - - - -	1040
Pepper of Ohio, - - - - -	1041
Kendall of White, - - - - -	1042
Steele, - - - - -	1043
Kelso, - - - - -	1043
Cookerly, - - - - -	1045
Dunn of Jefferson, - - - - -	1045
Taylor, - - - - -	1046
Dobson, - - - - -	1047
Compensation of members of, 1223, 1269, 1270
Remarks on, by—
Mr. Kelso, - - - - -	1224
Read of Clark, 1224, 1249, 1250
Barbour, - - - - -	1256
Ritchey, - - - - -	1250
Chapman, - - - - -	1251
Smith of Ripley, - - - - -	1252
Nave, - - - - -	1270
Owen, - - - - -	1277
Robinson, - - - - -	1277
Foster, - - - - -	1278
Qualification of members of, 1051
Remarks in relation to, by—
Mr. Borden, - - - - -	1052
Bright, - - - - -	1053
Walpole, - - - - -	1054, 1057
Time and place of meeting of, 1060
Remarks in relation to, by—
Mr. Niles, - - - - -	1061
Taylor, - - - - -	1062
Borden, - - - - -	1062, 1069
Pettit, - - - - -	1063, 1067
Pepper of Crawford, - - - - -	1064
Clark of Tippecanoe, - - - - -	1064
Newman, - - - - -	1065
Foster, - - - - -	1065
Kelso, - - - - -	1066
Hendricks, - - - - -	1067
Chapman, - - - - -	1068, 1070
Biddle, - - - - -	1069
Rariden, - - - - -	1069
LEGISLATION, LOCAL conferring power of upon county boards, 1420
Remarks on, by—
Mr. Borden, - - - - -	1421
Chapman, - - - - -	1422
Mather, - - - - -	1422
Newman, - - - - -	1421
Proceedings in relation thereto, 1765, 1768, 1854
LEGISLATION, CLASS a section in relation to, - - - - -	1399
Remarks on, by—
Mr. Kelso, - - - - -	1400
McClelland, - - - - -	1400
Morrison of Marion, - - - - -	1399
Rariden, - - - - -	1400
Pettit, - - - - -	1401
Owen, - - - - -	1401
Read of Monroe, - - - - -	1402

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT, sections in relation to, 1089, 1238, 1253, 1286, 1765
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Allen, - - -	1126
Chapman, - - -	1089
Thornton, - - -	1090
Walpole, - - -	1091
Kelso, - - - 1092, 1115, 1116, 1126
Taylor, - - -	1093
Morrison of Marion, 1094, 1117, 1118
Nave, - - - 1094, 1117, 1225
Bracken, - - -	1095, 1096
Rariden, - - -	1096, 1255
Milroy, - - -	1111
Clark of Tippecanoe,, - - -	1113, 1117
Stevenson, - - -	1113, 1114
Gibson, - - -	1114
Newman, - - -	1115
Niles, - - -	1115, 1121
Owen, - - -	1115
Lockhart, - - -	1118
Pettit, - - -	1119, 1255, 1256
Pepper of Crawford, - - -	1120
Holman, - - -	1125, 1126, 1238
Ritchey, - - -	1125, 1126
Murray, - - -	1239
Biddle, - - -	1253
Bright, - - -	1254
Read of Monroe, - - -	1256
LIBEL, prosecutions for a resolution in relation to, - - - 1389
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Thornton, - - -	1389
LOCKHART, JAMES 1031, 1036, 1103,
1183, 1196, 1318, 1337, 1342, 1360, 1368,
1377, 1381, 1399, 1404, 1405, 1431, 1458,
1546, 1586, 1589, 1787, 1840, 1856, 1878,
1896, 1899, 1903, 2030
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1557,
1588, 1592, 1624
Concerning the rights of married women, - - -
	1896, 1899
Concerning the liability of stockholders, - - -
	1878
LOTTERIES, - - - 1286
M.
MAGUIRE, D. 1025, 1036, 1050, 1080, 1081,
1086, 1101, 1242, 1248, 1257, 1307, 1312,
1318, 1335, 1361, 1423, 1448, 1582, 1836
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1517,
1610, 1614, 1619, 1620
Concerning the Militia, - - -
	1358
MARCH, WALTER 1098, 1269, 1321, 1337,
1357, 1379, 1598, 1600, 1735, 1760, 1871,
1904, 1906
Remarks in relation to law reform, 1760
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1599
Remarks in relation to courts of conciliation, - - -
	1910
MASON HALL, - - -
	1363
Remarks in reference to the occupation of, by—

Mr. Smith of Scott, - - -	1363
Ritchey, - - -	1263
Spann, - - -	1362
Wolfe, - - -	1363
Hamilton, - - -	1364
MATHER, J. H. 1083, 1221, 1223, 1240,
1253, 1285, 1289, 1307, 1314, 1386, 1457,
1592, 1621, 1635, 1898, 1928
Remarks on the subject of law reform, - - -
	1928
In relation to the rights of married women, - - -
	1898 Concerning the time of holding the elections, - - -
	1352
MAY, EDWARD R. 1321, 1361, 1382, 1416,
1444, 1625
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1444
Concerning the technical phrases of the law, - - -
McCLELLAND, 1220, 1253, 1306, 1308, 1319,
1382, 1392, 1423, 1660, 1679, 1755, 1885,
2035, 2058
Resolution introduced by, - - - 1436
Remarks concerning the technical phrases of the law, 1132, 1136, 1431
Concerning trust funds, - - -
	1885
On the subject of law reform, - - -
	1735
McFARLAND, J. B. 1028, 1481, 1584, 1838, 1953
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1541, 1617
MILITIA, sections in relation to, 1337, 1355, 1425
Remarks on, by—
Mr. Dunn of Jefferson, - - -	1357
Farrow, - - -	1338
Milroy, - - -	1338
Spann, - - -	1338
Maguire, - - -	1358
Murray, - - -	1356
Pepper of Ohio, - - -	1355, 1359, 1425
Spann, - - -	1358
Steele, - - -	1356
Shoup, - - -	1357
Watts, - - -	1359
MILLER of Fulton, - - -
	1337
MILLER of Gibson, 1031, 1036, 1054, 1075,
1091, 1100, 1101, 1257, 1292, 1997, 2014,
2016, 2022, 2037, 2051, 2053, 2060
MILLIGAN, D. - - -
	1392, 1931, 2034
MILROY, R. H. 1111, 1220, 1237, 1286, 1288,
1385, 1390, 1391, 1399, 1584, 1601, 1636,
1867, 1913, 1962
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1478
Concerning the legislative department, 1111
Resolutions introduced by, - - -
	1431, 1436
MONEY, APPROPRIATED FOR LO-CAL PURPOSES, - - -
	1286
Interest on, - - - 1435
Remarks in relation thereto, by—
Mr. Clark of Tippecanoe, - - -	1438
Kilgore, - - -	1425
Kelso, - - -	1435
Pepper of Ohio, - - -	1435
Thornton, - - -	1435

MOORE, GEO. W. 1107, 1108, 1226, 1273,
1306, 1308, 1311, 1361, 1413, 1635
Resolution introduced by, - 1225

MORRISON, A. F. of Marion, 1020, 1054,
1060, 1087, 1117, 1128, 1129, 1130, 1141,
1152, 1196, 1223, 1262, 1265, 1293, 1315,
1316, 1317, 1319, 1320, 1326, 1332, 1348,
1349, 1379, 1417, 1425, 1447, 1448, 1582,
1633, 1705, 1909
Remarks in relation to courts of conciliation, - - 1909
Concerning the technical phrases of
the law, - - - 1138
Concerning the legislative department, 1094,
1117, 1118
On the subject of banks, 1507, 1553, 1633

MORRISON, J. I. of Washington, 1078,
1079, 1860, 1868, 1998, 2031
Remarks in relation to the common school fund, - - - 1880
Concerning superintendent of common schools, - - - 1940, 1979

MOWRER, D. 1073, 1099, 1123, 1126, 1149, 1199

MURRAY, E. 1020, 1035, 1081, 1095, 1104,
1126, 1136, 1293, 1306, 1338, 1361, 1366,
1423, 1424, 1797, 1855
Remarks on the subject of banks, - 1373
N.

NAVE, C. C. 1029, 1030, 1057, 1070, 1082,
1087, 1199, 1201, 1220, 1270, 1271, 1311,
1317, 1334, 1355, 1391, 1405, 1425, 1657,
1667, 1683, 1717, 1868, 1915, 1916, 1945,
2035
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1429,
1556, 1599
Concerning the rights of married women, - - - 1158
Concerning the legislative department, 1094,
1117, 1255
Remarks in relation to courts of conciliation, - - - 1911
In relation to the technical phrases of
the law, - - - 1139

NEGRO SUFFRAGE, a section in relation to, 1712, 1737, 1787, 1816, 1826

NEGROES AND MULATTOES, admission of.
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Milligan, - - - 1931

NEWMAN, J. S. 1054, 1055, 1077, 1094,
1103, 1108, 1127, 1139, 1152, 1223, 1256,
1292, 1332, 1333, 1334, 1337, 1349, 1379,
1385, 1420, 1653, 1657, 1688, 1762, 1794,
1795, 1876
Remarks concerning the rights of married women, - - - 1158
Concerning the liability of stockholders in corporations, - - 1876

NILES, J. B. 1088, 1121, 1137, 1141, 1153, 1168, 1295, 1391, 1424, 1425, 1429, 1433,
1458, 1464, 1519, 1630, 1638, 1645, 1681,
1726, 1753, 1813, 1843, 1877, 1966, 1978,
1979, 2023, 2054

Remarks in relation to banking and currency, 1549, 1595, 1607, 1626, 1645
Concerning the rights of married women, - - - 1168, 1187
Concerning the liability of stockholders, - - - 1877
Remarks upon the presentation of a petition by the President from the Deaf and Dumb, - - - 1100
Resolution introduced by, - - - 1458

NEW COUNTIES, a section relating thereto, - - - 1942
Remarks by—
Mr. Kelso, - - - 1942
Watts, - - - 1942

O.

OFFICES, tenure of office in counties:

Remarks in relation to, by—
Mr. Bracken, - - - 1143
Edmonston, - - - 1143
Walpole, - - - 1144, 1145
Kelso, - - - 1145
Maguire, - - - 1147
Plurality of—
Remarks in relation to, by—
Mr. Cookerly, - - - 1309
Harbolt, - - - 1309
Holman, - - - 1310
Terms of, - - - 1392

OFFICERS, STATE a resolution in relation to continuance in office, - 1257
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Read of Monroe, - - - 1257
Continuing under the new Constitution, - - - 1972
Of corporations, disqualifications of, 1197
Remarks on, by—
Mr. Walpole, - - - 1197, 1198, 1217
Blythe, - - - 1198
Bascom, - - - 1211
Dobson, - - - 1200, 1209
Kilgore, 1203, 1205, 1206, 1211,
1216
Nave, - - - 1199
Niles, - - - 1207
Rariden, - - - 1205, 1217
Tague, - - - 1200
Owen, - - - 1208, 1209
Kelso, - - - 1212
Ritchey, - - - 1213
Foster, - - - 1213
Dunn of Jefferson, - - - 1214

OFFENSES, CAPITAL a section in relation to, - - - 1379
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Gibson, - - - 1381
May, - - - 1383
Thornton, - - - 1379, 1381

OWEN, R. D. 1059, 1086, 1123, 1124, 1153,
1154, 1160, 1183, 1227, 1261, 1269, 1275,
1277, 1284, 1285, 1313, 1354, 1378, 1379,
1381, 1385, 1407, 1423, 1495, 1546, 1547,
1548, 1573, 1582, 1594, 1595, 1596, 1597,

1600, 1603, 1608, 1621, 1626, 1630, 1640, 1642, 1646, 1729, 1732, 1750, 1767, 1769, 1792, 1798, 1817, 1818, 1832, 1863, 1836, 1832, 1914, 1934, 1938, 1967, 1974, 2001, 2012, 2040, 2042, 2050, 2052, 2053, 2056, 2066	Remarks on the subject of banks, 1590, 1624
Resolutions introduced by, 1261, 1275, 1564, 1812, 1831	Concerning the technical phrases of the law, - 1131, 1132, 1138
Remarks on the subject of banks, 1449, 1505, 1511, 1554, 1564, 1587, 1595, 1615, 1618, 1629	PRESIDENT, remarks in relation to a petition from the Deaf and Dumb, 1098 Convention adjourned by, - 1586 Address of, at the time of the final ad- journment, - 2077
Concerning the rights of married wo- men, - 1165, 1183, 1190, 1898	PRINTING OF THE CONSTITU- TION, - 2022
Concerning the time of holding elec- tions, - 1354	PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES, on additional sections in relation to, - 1393
Concerning future amendments to the Constitution, - 1259, 1814, 1815, 1938	Remarks on, by—
Concerning trust funds, - 1884	Mr. Biddle, - 1394, 1395, 1396
Concerning liability of stockholders, 1878	Hovey, - 1396
PEPPER of Ohio, 1018, 1022, 1093, 1222, 1223, 1226, 1267, 1342, 1360, 1406, 1412, 1435, 1447, 1545, 1582, 1830, 1984, 2015	Hall, - 1395
Resolution introduced by, - 1360	Niles, - 1394
Remarks in relation to banking and currency, - 1447, 1540, 1625	Pepper of Ohio, - 1395
Concerning the time of holding the elections, - 1352	Rariden, - 1470
PEPPER of Crawford, 1022, 1071, 1072, 1105, 1123, 1127, 1129, 1152, 1154, 1201, 1202, 1232, 1272, 1320, 1371, 1403, 1405, 1434, 1481, 1546, 1555, 1631, 1733, 2030	Smith of Ripley, - 1397
Resolutions introduced by, - 1232, 1636	Dobson, - 1396, 1397
PETTIT, JOHN 1037, 1039, 1048, 1050, 1084, 1091, 1099, 1109, 1123, 1141, 1152, 1183, 1196, 1209, 1228, 1246, 1250, 1266, 1268, 1269, 1271, 1275, 1286, 1287, 1290, 1291, 1306, 1307, 1308, 1315, 1331, 1334, 1335, 1337, 1338, 1359, 1378, 1379, 1382, 1386, 1404, 1414, 1421, 1425, 1494, 1546, 1547, 1548, 1556, 1563, 1564, 1566, 1588, 1589, 1601, 1603, 1605, 1608, 1613, 1616, 1621, 1631, 1635, 1636, 1637, 1638, 1643, 1650, 1652, 1654, 1657, 1659, 1671, 1679, 1687, 1697, 1710, 1712, 1715, 1718, 1721, 1725, 1735, 1765, 1767, 1771, 1794, 1801, 1814, 1832, 1845, 1854, 1862, 1863, 1888, 1917, 1938, 1944, 1957, 1965, 1982, 1986, 2000, 2003, 2009, 2013, 2014, 2016, 2026, 2031, 2038, 2047, 2048, 2051, 2055, 2056, 2059	Clark of Tippecanoe, - 1397
Resolution introduced by, - 1260	PROTEST AGAINST ADJOURN- ING OVER, - 1364
Remarks on the subject of banking and currency, 1454, 1574, 1590, 1602, 1609, 1612, 1617, 1624, 1957	Remarks on, by—
Concerning the rights of married wo- men, - 1167, 1189	Mr. Borden, - 1364
Concerning future amendments to the Constitution, - 1817, 1938	Foster, - 1364
In relation to the number of members to be elected to the Legislature, 1038, 1040	Edmonston, - 1365, 1367
PRATHER, H. 1048, 1067, 1068, 1073, 1080, 1121, 1147, 1221, 1306, 1315, 1334, 1362, 1409, 1413, 1473, 1585, 1601, 1649, 1650	Cookerly, - 1365
	Owen, - 1366
	Ritchey, - 1366
	Kelso, - 1367

R.

RARIDEN, JAS. 1021, 1078, 1087, 1088, 1151, 1197, 1202, 1203, 1239, 1257, 1269, 1270, 1274, 1275, 1312, 1314, 1316, 1320, 1322, 1323, 1332, 1335, 1351, 1360, 1378, 1379, 1385, 1386, 1399, 1403, 1414, 1447, 1526, 1546, 1607, 1735, 1751, 1913, 1918, 1936, 1939, 1967, 1975, 1977, 1992	Remarks on the subject of banking and currency, 1414, 1497, 1535, 1608, 1609
	Concerning the rights of married wo- men, - 1163
	Concerning future amendments to the Constitution, - 1818, 1938
	Concerning the Legislative Depart- ment, - 1255, 1696
READ of Clark 1036, 1069, 1073, 1076, 1082, 1086, 1087, 1091, 1092, 1094, 1121, 1125, 1148, 1203, 1224, 1225, 1240, 1251, 1258, 1270, 1271, 1289, 1292, 1311, 1313, 1318, 1331, 1322, 1354, 1392, 1405, 1447, 1469, 1495, 1519, 1528, 1632, 1640, 1645, 1657, 1813, 1913	Resolution introduced by, - 1258
	Remarks on the subject of banking and currency, - 1469, 1519
	Concerning compensation of members of the General Assembly, 1226, 1249, 1250

Concerning the time of holding the elections, - - -	1354
READ of Monroe 1060, 1064, 1075, 1085, 1256, 1265, 1267, 1285, 1288, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1385, 1393, 1445, 1626, 1631, 1649, 1858, 1878, 1886, 2018, 2024
Resolution introduced by, - - -	1257
Remarks on the subject of banking and currency, - - -	1458
Concerning the rights of married women, - - -	1188
Concerning the technical phrases of the law, - - -	1134
Concerning trust funds, - - -	1886
REMOVAL FROM OFFICE 1901, 1935
How Judges to be removed, - - -	1901
Remarks by—
Mr. Borden, - - -	1901
Gibson, - - -	1902
Chapman, - - -	1902
REVISION, Committee on
Remarks by—
Mr. Owen, - - -	1934
Borden, - - -	1934
RECONSIDERATION:
Motion by Mr. Borden, to re-consider the "compromise" section on banking, - - -	1934
RISTINE, JOSEPH
Resolution introduced by, - - -	1673
Remarks in relation to circuit courts, - - -	1702
RITCHEY, JAMES 1023, 1025, 1029, 1074, 1075, 1077, 1085, 1092, 1096, 1122, 1137, 1198, 1202, 1230, 1233, 1236, 1251, 1258, 1265, 1284, 1304, 1319, 1363, 1336, 1386, 1580, 1640, 1641, 1736, 1788, 1831, 1836, 1914, 1953
Remarks on the subject of banking and currency, 1545, 1553, 1592, 1613
Concerning the time of holding the elections, - - -	1335, 1354
Concerning the compensation of members of the General Assembly, - - -	1250
Concerning future amendments to the Constitution, - - -	1641, 1814
RIGHTS, of persons, sections in relation to, - - -	1368, 1390
Remarks thereon. by—
Mr. Gordon, - - -	1368
Bascom, - - -	1371
Kent, - - -	1371
Borden, - - -	1390
Kelso, - - -	1390
—Of aliens, to hold and transmit real estate, - - -	1961
—Of action, to recover real estate, - - -	1951
—Of married women, to hold property to their separate use, 1153, 1183, 1875, 1896, 2011, 2012
A motion to re-consider the vote on the passage of a section in relation to, - - -	1153
Remarks thereon, by—

Mr. Badger, - - -	1159, 1175
Bascom, - - -	1162
Bracken, - - -	1175
Blythe, - - -	1177, 1179
Barbour, - - -	1180, 1193
Clark of Tippecanoe, - - -	1157
Cookerly, - - -	1158
Dobson, - - -	1194
Farrow, - - -	1897
Gibson, - - -	1173, 1192
Holman, - - -	1154, 1167
Hovey, - - -	1156, 1157, 1159
Howe, - - -	1191
Kelso, - - -	1899
Lockhart, - - -	1896, 1899
Mather, - - -	1898
Nave, - - -	1158
Newman, - - -	1182
Niles, - - -	1168, 1187
Owen, 1165, 1183, 1190, 1898
Pettit, - - -	1167, 1189
Rariden, - - -	1163
Read of Monroe, - - -	1188
Steele, - - -	1163
Taylor, - - -	1387
ROBINSON, JOSEPH 1027, 1030, 1105, 1277, 1341, 1434, 1478, 1513, 1523, 1585, 1636, 1779, 1823
Resolution introduced by, - - -	1340
Remarks on the subject of banking and currency, - - -	1779
S.
SALARIES, of officers, - - -	1949
Remarks by—
Mr. Dobson, - - -	1949
Pettit, - - -	1950
Watts, - - -	1950
—Of Governor and Judges, - - -	1962
SATURDAY; a motion to rescind the resolution setting apart Saturday for the introduction of resolutions, - - -	1148
Remarks thereon, by—
Mr. Dobson, - - -	1148
Nave, - - -	1149
SCHOOL FUND, (See Common Schools,) 1940
SHERROD, W. F. 1198, 1212, 1221, 1240, 1248, 1266, 1271, 1274, 1523, 1833
Resolutions introduced by, - - -	1266
Remarks on the subject of banking and currency, - - -	1893
SHOUP, G. G. 1183, 1219, 1223, 1229, 1250, 1357, 1367, 1385, 1399, 1407, 1411, 1422, 1445, 1523, 1564, 1580, 1592, 1605, 1606, 1635, 1863, 2000
Resolution introduced by, - - -	1564
Remarks on the subject of banking and currency, - - -	1484, 1597, 1626
SIMS, S. - - -	1266, 1292
Resolution introduced by, - - -	1266
SIGNING OF THE CONSTITUTION, 1970
SMILEY, ROSS 1332, 1379, 1414, 1632, 1912
SMITH, THOS. W. of Ripley, 1016, 1022, 1023, 1037, 1051, 1056, 1071, 1073, 1080,

1085, 1090, 1099, 1100, 1116, 1197, 1223,	Read of Monroe, - - - 1878
1230, 1315, 1317, 1330, 1331, 1334, 1371,	Read of Clark, - - - 1879
1377, 1378, 1393, 1431, 1522, 1535, 1545,	Stevenson, - - - 1876
1556, 1571, 1581, 1594, 1596, 1605, 1617,	STEVENSON, A. C. 1057, 1029, 1030, 1031,
1618, 1663, 1829, 2018, 2021, 2039	1048, 1050, 1055, 1059, 1062, 1085, 1127,
Resolution introduced by, - - - 1022	1141, 1202, 1226, 1233, 1240, 1241, 1258,
Remarks on the subject of banking	1292, 1318, 1378, 1379, 1406, 1407, 1420,
and currency, - - - 1525, 1587	1549, 1596, 1619, 1630, 1636, 1637, 1639,
In relation to compensation of mem-	1795, 1802, 1836, 1876, 1914, 1986, 2010
bers of General Assembly, - - - 1252	Resolutions introduced by, - - - 1226, 1828
In relation to the Tippecanoe Battle	Remarks on the subject of banks, 1452, 1599,
Ground, - - - 1343	1611, 1625
SMITH, H. S. of Scott 1037, 1043, 1073,	In relation to future amendments to
1076, 1143, 1276, 1338, 1349, 1351, 1363	the Constitution, - - - 1258, 1814
Remarks in relation to the time of	Concerning liability of stockholders, 1876 holding the elections, - - - 1352	Concerning the Legislative Depart-
SPANN, J. L. 1363, 1426, 1448, 1535, 1651,	ment, - - - 1113, 1114
1660, 1778, 1797, 1802, 1843, 1977, 2021,	TAGUE, GEORGE 1052, 1095, 1200, 1821,
2032, 2050	1828
SPECIE PAYMENTS, Suspension of 1639	T.
Remarks by Mr. Kelso, - - - 1639	TANNEHILL, Z. - - - 1295
STEELE, J. 1367, 1424, 1763, 1892, 1916,	TAXATION of corporate stock, 1968, 2019
2028	TAYLOR, E. D. 1050, 1082, 1194, 1261, 1267,
Remarks in relation to banking and	1269, 1481, 1658
currency, - - - 1409	Resolution introduced by, - - - 1481
Concerning the rights of married women, 1163	Remarks on the subject of banks, 1551, 1558,
STENOGRAPHERS AND DOOR-	1629
KEEPERS, a resolution in relation	Concerning the rights of married wo-to, - - - 1262	men, - - - 1387
Remarks thereon, by—	Concerning the legislative department, 1046,
Mr. Gregg, - - - 1263, 1265	1093
Kelso, - - - 1262	Concerning the time of holding the
Kilgore, - - - 1263	elections, - - - 1336
Morrison of Marion, - - - 1262	THORNTON, H. P. 1037, 1056, 1141, 1348,
Pettit, - - - 1263, 1265	1435, 1660, 1675, 1685, 1693, 1841, 1848,
Rariden, - - - 1264	2008, 2061, 2062
STATE, Suits against the - - - 1279	Resolution introduced by, 1107, 1435, 1481
Remarks by—	Remarks on the subject of law reform, 1848
Mr. Clark of Tippecanoe, - - - 1283	TIPPECANOE BATTLE GROUND:
Holman, - - - 1284	A resolution in relation to, 1260, 1341, 1951,
Howe, - - - 1274, 1279, 1282	2005
Kelso, - - - 1281	Remarks thereon, by—
Pettit, - - - 1280	Mr. Dunn of Jefferson, - - - 1343
Rariden, - - - 1282	Owen, - - - 1342
Read of Monroe, - - - 1283	Pettit, - - - 1260, 1344
— Districting of, for judicial and repre-	Gregg, - - - 1341
sentative purposes, - - - 1022	Smith of Ripley, - - - 1343
Remarks in relation to, by—	Carter, - - - 1344
Mr. Morrison of Marion, - - - 1023	Pepper of Ohio, - - - 1345
Murray, - - - 1024	THANKS, - - - 2013
Clark of Tippecanoe, 1024, 1026	TODD, H. G. - - - 1057, 1628
Howe, - - - 1025	TRUST FUNDS, - - - 1884
Smith of Ripley, - - - 1026	Remarks by—
STATISTICS, Agricultural - - - 1436	Mr. Dunn of Jefferson, - - - 1884
STOCKHOLDERS, Liability of - - - 1876	Owen, - - - 1884
Remarks by—	Foster, - - - 1884
Mr. Butler, - - - 1879	Bascom, - - - 1885
Dobson, - - - 1878	McClelland, - - - 1885
Foster, - - - 1879	Dobson, - - - 1885
Lockhart, - - - 1878	Read of Monroe, - - - 1886
Nave, - - - 1879	Pettit, - - - 1888
Newman, - - - 1876	Bryant, - - - 1888
Niles, - - - 1877	Allen, - - - 1891
Owen, - - - 1878	Steele, - - - 1892

TRIBUNALS OF CONCILIATION, 1904,

1937

Remarks by—

Mr. Kelso,	-	-	1904, 1908
March,	-	-	1905, 1910
Thornton,	-	-	1906
Morrison of Marion,	-	-	1909

VOTERS, qualifications of, - 1294, 1561

Remarks by—

Mr. Borden,	-	-	1296
Clark of Tippecanoe,	-	-	1299
Gregg,	-	-	1296
Graham of Warrick,	-	-	1295
Hamilton,	-	1293, 1298,	1299
Hovey,	-	-	1300
Kelso,	-	-	1300
Niles,	-	-	1295
Crumbacker,	-	-	1300
Pettit,	-	-	1302
Taylor,	-	-	1302
Wolfe,	-	-	1566
Farrow,	-	-	1905

VETO,

Remarks by,

Mr. Morrison of Marion,	-	-	1447
Maguire,	-	-	1448
Gordon,	-	-	1448

W.

WALLACE, DAVID - 1803, 2053

WALPOLE, T. D. 1052, 1053, 1054, 1057,
 1058, 1059, 1071, 1073, 1075, 1122, 1123,
 1142, 1160, 1196, 1197, 1198, 1201, 1221,
 1237, 1240, 1242, 1247, 1252, 1270, 1316,
 1333, 1386, 1405, 1470, 1471, 1485, 1517,
 1584, 1585, 1586, 1601, 1602, 1605, 1606,
 1610, 1618, 1620, 1621, 1630, 1633, 1634,
 1732, 1803, 1817, 1829, 1831, 1836, 1865,
 1944, 1968, 1981, 1985, 1995, 2010, 2022,
 2029, 2033, 2039, 2040

Remarks on the subject of banks, 1612, 1613,
1615, 1631Concerning the technical phrases of
the law, - 1139

WATTS, J. 1020, 1025, 1036, 1038, 1060,
 1074, 1078, 1099, 1105, 1108, 1122, 1126,
 1140, 1196, 1226, 1229, 1243, 1246, 1275,
 1290, 1321, 1361, 1404, 1423, 1447, 1526,
 1547, 1549, 1552, 1564, 1584, 1641, 1771,
 1831

Resolutions introduced by, - 1228

Remarks on the subject of banks, 1547, 1554,
1565

WILEY, SPENCER - 1059, 1279, 1970

WOLFE, BENJAMIN 1030, 1047, 1070, 1077,
 1081, 1083, 1084, 1099, 1103, 1108, 1221,
 1223, 1255, 1274, 1289, 1292, 1304, 1305,
 1306, 1308, 1312, 1313, 1334, 1363, 1410,
 1421, 1423, 1448, 1523, 1552, 1592, 1642,
 1654, 1669, 1671, 1713, 1771, 1818, 1830,
 1861, 1880, 1961, 1970, 2026, 2047, 2049

Remarks on the subject of banking and currency, - 1607

Y.

YEAS AND NAYS:

On amendment to the rules requiring thirty members to call them, - 1232

Remarks in relation to, by—

Mr. Pepper of Crawford,	-	-	1232
Smith of Ripley,	-	1232, 1235,	1236
Walpole,	-	-	1233
Mather,	-	-	1234
Dobson,	-	-	1234
Holman,	-	-	1235
Clark of Tippecanoe,	-	-	1236
Steele,	-	-	1237

A resolution requiring thirty members to call them, -On the adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to the number of members of the Legislature, 1016, 1027On laying a resolution and amendment in relation to the adjournment of the Convention on the table, - 1021On the engrossment of a section in relation to the number of members of the Legislature, - 1028

Upon an adjournment, - 1028

On laying an amendment to an amendment to a section in relation to Senatorial and Representative districts on the table, - 1031On laying an amendment to a section in relation to the number of members of the Legislature on the table, 1047On the passage of a section in relation to the number of members of the Legislature, - 1048On laying an amendment to a section in relation to Senatorial and Representative districts on the table, - 1050On an amendment to a section in relation to the term of service of Senators and Representatives, - 1050On an amendment to a section in relation to the term of service of Senators and Representatives, - 1050On a proposition to re-commit a section in relation to the qualifications of Senators and Representatives, 1052, 1055On the passage of a section in relation to the term of service of members of the Legislature, - 1057On the passage of a section in relation to the qualifications of members of the Legislature, - 1058, 1059On proposition to lay an amendment to a section in relation to the time and place of the meeting of the Legislature on the table, - 1067, 1070On adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to the time and place of the meeting of the Legislature, - 1076, 1072

On an amendment to a section in relation to a quorum in the Legislature, - - - - -	1074	On the passage of a section in relation to the technical terms in laws, - - - - -	1197

On the passage of a section in relation to biennial sessions of the Legislature, - - - - -	1079	On a proposition to lay on the table an additional section and amendment, - - - - -	1199, 1219, 1222
On the passage of a section in relation to the legislative department, - - - - -	1080, 1084, 1087, 1098, 1127	On an amendment to an additional section, - - - - -	1201
On laying on the table an amendment to a section in relation to the legislative department, - - - - -	1091	On passage of an additional section, - - - - -	1201, 1222
On proposition to indefinitely postpone amendments, - - - - -	1097	On the engrossment of an additional section, - - - - -	1201, 1222
On laying an amendment to a proposition for the Convention to remain in the Hall of the House of Representatives on the table, - - - - -	1107, 1108	On proposition to lay on the table an additional section, - - - - -	1222, 1223
On a proposition to re-commit a section in relation to the legislative department with instructions, - - - - -	1119, 1124	On proposition to lay on the table an amendment to a section in relation to the compensation of members of the Legislature, - - - - -	1225
On the adoption of a section in relation to Latin phrases, - - - - -	1129	On a proposition to occupy the Masonic Hall, - - - - -	1228
On the adoption of a provision in relation to the printing of laws in the German and French language, - - - - -	1129	On re-considering the vote taken upon a proposition to occupy Masonic Hall, - - - - -	1230
On indefinitely postponing the section in relation to the technical phrases of the law, - - - - -	1136	On a resolution proposing to remain in the Hall of the House of Representatives, - - - - -	1228
On re-considering the vote on the passage of a provision authorizing the printing of the laws in German and French languages, - - - - -	1140	On the adoption of a proposition to occupy Masonic Hall, - - - - -	1230
On the engrossment of a section in relation to those of the technical terms in law, - - - - -	1141	On engrossment of a section in relation to a division of counties, - - - - -	1231
On laying on the table a resolution in relation to the bill of rights, - - - - -	1142	On proposition to lay an amendment to an amendment to the rules on the table, - - - - -	1233
On laying on the table an amendment to a resolution in relation to county officers, - - - - -	1142	On the adoption of an amendment to an amendment to the rules, - - - - -	1237
On adopting a resolution in relation to county officers, - - - - -	1147	On the adoption of an amendment as amended to the rules, - - - - -	1237
On laying a resolution and amendment in reference to the adjournment of the Convention on the table, - - - - -	1151	On the passage of a section in relation to the legislative department, - - - - -	—
On laying an amendment to the rules on the table, - - - - -	1153	On proposition to re-commit with instructions a section in relation to the legislative department, - - - - -	1239
On a proposition to suspend the fifteen minute rule, - - - - -	1154	On a passage of a section in relation to the legislative department, - - - - -	1240, 1269, 1294
Upon re-considering a vote upon the passage of a section in relation to the rights of married women, - - - - -	1183	On proposition to lay a motion to re-commit a section in relation to the eligibility of officers of corporations on the table, - - - - -	1241
On an amendment to instructions to a section in relation to the rights of married women, - - - - -	1195	On proposition to re-commit with instructions a section in relation to the legislative department, - - - - -	1241
On re-committing with instructions a section in relation to married women, - - - - -	1195	On proposition to re-commit with instructions a section in relation to senatorial and representative districts, - - - - -	1242
On the passage of a section in relation to the rights of married women, - - - - -	1195	On laying an amendment to instructions to a section in relation to senatorial and representative districts, on the table, - - - - -	1246
On laying on the table a section in relation to technical terms in laws, - - - - -	1196	On the adoption of instructions to a section in relation to the senatorial and representative districts, - - - - -	1247
		On laying an amendment to a section in relation to the compensation of members of the Legislature on the table,	1248, 1251	On the proposition that the Governor shall hold his office four years,	1315

On the adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to the compensation of members of the Legislature,	1253	On a proposition to abolish the office of Lieutenant Governor,	1315
On laying a substitute for a section in relation to the legislative department on the table,	1253	On a proposition that the Governor and Lieutenant Governor shall not be eligible for more than four in any term of eight years,	1315
On a proposition to lay on the table a resolution in relation to the Stenographers and Doorkeepers,	1265	On an amendment of a section in relation to the Lieutenant Governor,	1319
On the re-consideration of a vote on a section in relation to the compensation of members of the Legislature,	1270	On a motion to re-commit with instructions a section in relation to the executive department,	1321
On a proposition to lay a section and amendment in relation to the compensation of members of the General Assembly on the table,	1271	On the passage of a section in relation to the executive department,	1321, 1322
On the adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to the compensation of members of the Legislature,	1273	On laying on the table an amendment to a section in relation to the veto power,	1331
On the engrossment of a section in relation to the compensation of members of the Legislature,	1273	On a motion to lay a resolution in relation to the Tippecanoe Battleground on the table,	1342
On proposition to take from the table a report in reference to spirituous liquors,	1276	On a proposition to lay on the table an amendment to instructions to a section in relation to the veto powers of the Governor,	1347, 1351
On the adoption of an amendment to instructions to a section in relation to the pay of members of the Legislature,	1278	On re-committing with instructions a section in relation to the veto power of the Governor,	1348
On re-committing with instructions a section in relation to the pay of members of the Legislature,	1279	On the passage of a section in relation to the veto power of the Governor,	1348
On laying amendments to a section in relation to the legislative department on the table,	1284	On laying on the table instructions to a section in relation to the veto power of the Governor,	1351
On the adoption of a section in relation to appropriations for canal purposes,	1292	On re-committing a section in relation to the time of holding elections,	1354
On laying on the table an amendment to a section in relation to the qualifications of voters,	1294	On laying on the table a resolution and amendment in relation to adjourning over,	1361
On the adoption of a section in relation to the qualifications of voters,	1304	On a proposition to adjourn over,	1361, 1362
On laying a section in relation to contested elections on the table,	1306	On adoption of a resolution in relation to the Masonic Hall,	1364
On laying on the table an amendment to a section in relation to eligibility of officers,	1308	On the rejection of a protest against adjourning over,	1367
On an additional section in relation to the eligibility of officers,	1310	On an amendment to a section in relation to capital offenses,	1362
On the adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to the eligibility of officers,	1311	On laying on the table an amendment to a section in relation to titles of nobility,	1386, 1392
On the motion to adjourn over Christmas,	1311	On the adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to titles of nobility,	1386
On the adoption of a section in relation to the qualifications of voters,	1312	On a motion to re-commit a section in relation to titles of nobility,	1386
On re-committing a section in relation to plurality of offices with instructions,	1313, 1423	On a motion to re-commit a section in relation to the rights of persons,	1390
		On a motion to re-consider a vote upon the engrossment of a section in relation to the titles of nobility,	1392
		On laying an amendment on the table to a section in relation to the terms of offices,	1392
		On a proposition to lay an additional section on the table,	1398

On the adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to privileges and immunities, - - -	1398	in relation to the liability of stockholders, - - -	1637
On re-committing with instructions a section in relation to class legislation, - - -	1402	On the passage of a section in relation to bail in criminal cases, -	1640
On the passage of a section in relation to class legislation, - - -	1403	On re-committing bank section with instructions, - - -	1642
On laying a section in relation to agricultural products on the table, -	1413	On the passage of the section, -	1642
On the passage of a section in relation to plurality of offices, - - -	1424	On Legislature repealing all charters, -	1643
On the passage of sections in relation to the militia, - - -	1426	On re-committing supplementary compromise section, - - -	1643
On laying on the table a resolution in relation to the keeping out of the new Constitution Latin terms, -	1431	Relative to repeal of acts of bank incorporations, - - -	1644
On a resolution in relation to spirituous liquors, - - -	1434	On adjournment for Senator Bright's Levee, - - -	1645
On laying on the table a resolution in relation to the interest on money, -	1436	On homestead exemption, - - -	1649
On laying an amendment to an amendment to a section in relation to banks on the table, 1444, 1446, 1523		On amendment relative to criminal prosecution, - - -	1650
On laying on the table an amendment to a section in relation to banks, -	1446, 1494, 1524, 1526, 1547, 1594, 1061, 1603, 1605, 1618, 1621, 1633, 1634	On election of Supreme Judges, -	1656
On the passage of a section in relation to the compensation of members of the Legislature, - - -	1473	On amendment to same, - - -	1658
On a proposition to suspend the half-hour rule, - - -	1515, 1544	Relative to Reporter of Supreme Court decisions, - - -	1663
On laying on the table a section in relation to banks, 1524, 1526, 1549, 1630, 1634, 1635		Relative to county debts, - - -	1674
On the adoption of an amendment to a section in relation to banks, 1555, 1599, 1604, 1616, 1620, 1626, 1628, 1629, 1632		On election of Supreme Judges, -	1682
On the adoption of a section in relation to banks, 1556, 1583, 1600, 1616, 1620, 1630, 1632		Relative to county courts, - - -	1694
On the engrossment of a section in relation to banks, - - -	1556	Relative to grand jury system, -	1698, 1734
On laying on the table a resolution in relation to the earlier meeting of the Convention, - - -	1563	Relative to Circuit Judges, -	1707, 1708
On the adoption of an amendment to instructions to a section in relation to banks, - - -	1580	Relative to Prosecuting Attorneys, -	1709
On re-committing with instructions a section in relation to banks, 1555, 1580, 1582, 1593, 1616		Relative to organization of Circuit Courts, - - -	1711, 1712
On a proposition to re-consider the vote by which the section in relation to banks was re-committed, 1582, 1593		On the subject of law reform, -	1717, 1765, 1813, 1815, 1826, 1828, 1845
On a proposition to adjourn, - - -	1584, 1585	On election of Supreme Judges, -	1723, 1724
On laying on the table a section and amendment in relation to banks, -	1603	On the subject of banking and currency, -	1728
On laying on the table a section and amendment in relation to the liability of stockholders, - - -	1637	On dividing the State into circuits, -	1736, 1737
On laying on the table an amendment		On the subject of local and special legislation, -	1767, 1770, 1772, 1773, 1804
		On the negro question, -	1788, 1791, 1796, 1798, 1799, 1800, 1801, 1817, 1818, 1819, 1827
		On final adjournment, -	1833, 1851, 1852, 1853
		On re-considering vote relative to town-ship business, - - -	1834
		Relative to the State debt, - - -	1837
		Relative to Wabash and Erie Canal, &c., - - -	1846
		Relative to Poll Tax, - - -	1847
		Relative to election Trustee of Wabash and Erie Canal, Warden of Prison, Printer, &c., - - -	1856
		Relative to corporations, -	1857, 1876, 1880
		Relative to individual liability of stockholders, - - -	1857
		Relative to education and school funds, -	1860, 1861, 1862, 1866, 1883
		Relative to taxing corporations for school purposes, - - -	1870
		Relative to rights of women to property, - - -	1875, 1900, 1901
		Relative to Superintendent of Common schools, - - -	1884
		Relative to Trust funds, - - -	1892
		Relative to defaulters, &c., - - -	1994
		Z.
		ZENOR, JOHN	1273, 1290

[illegible]

DEMCO 38-297

JK 5625

1850

.A132

Y.2

3 9000 014 247 774

